Hopkins says of the wicked, "The smoke of their torment shall ascend up in the sight of the blessed forever and ever, and serve, as a most clear glass always before their eyes, to give them a bright and more affecting view. This display of the Divine character will be most entertaining to all who love God, will give them the highest and most ineffable pleasure. Should the fire of this eternal punishment cease, it would in a great measure obscure the light of heaven, and put an end to a great part of the happiness and glory of the blessed." What a fine plan these theologians invented for utilizing the endless miseries of their wicked fellow men! How unselfish, and how kind!

This gratuitous fiction of theirs reminds one of the reply made by a Universalist preacher to an orthodox minister, with whom he was holding a discussion respecting the nature and duration of future punishment. The "orthodox" had ventured to suggest the above "utilitarian" theory, when the Universalist responded, "If you are right, and I ever get to heaven, I will petition the Almighty to divest me of the extra amount of happiness that I am to enjoy from the sufferings of the lost, and I think all the saints in Paradise will join me in the petition, unless, indeed, getting into heaven changes one's moral nature from good to bad, and converts the saint into a demon—a thought it is impossible to entertain."

That which has often made religion the handmaid of sorrow rather than of joy; that which has caused men to shudder at the innocence of childhood, and become austere and cruel to their fellow men, is the unscriptural, unreasonable and immoral dogma of endless misery. Yes, my brethren, I boldly denounce this doctrine as immoral in its tendencies, and as a slander upon the character of a God of love and mercy. While I have the reason with which my Creator has endowed me, I cannot for one moment admit that the Omnipotent God, the Judge of all the earth, will ever doom any of his creatures to suffer everlasting misery.—Bible Banner.

Expository.

"M. W." writes:—"I should like to know your opinion on Matt. xvi. 18, 19."

The conversation related in the paragraph of which these verses form part, took place in the neighborhood of Cesarea Philippi, or Cæsarea the City of Philip. It may help us to realize the reference to "rock" if we remember that Jesus and his disciples were now in the vicinity of some of the boldest and most picturesque of rocky scenery to be found in all Palestine. Here are projections or peaks of rock, covered with antique ruins of heathen temples. "High on the rocky slopes above the town," says Stanley, "still lingers the name of Hazor, in the earliest times the capital of Northern Palestine, the head of all those kingdoms. Josh. xi. 10. A few rude stone blocks on a rocky eminence mark the probable site of the capitol of Jabin." "We meet with heathen temples all over these mountains," says Dr. Thomson. "Certainly no part of Syria was so given to idolatry as this region round the head waters of the Jordan. Their temples fronted the east, and were probably devoted to the worship of Baal." Proceeding northward, there are remnants of temples at various points along the slopes of Anti-Lebanon. "Some of the remains of Baalbek—probably the Baal gad of the Bible—may claim an antiquity equal to anything that Egypt can boast." The foundation stones of this vast temple are of immense size. The first tier above ground consists of stones of different lengths, but all about twelve and a half feet thick, and the same in width. Then come, over these, stones more than sixty-three feet long, the largest blocks, perhaps, that were ever placed in a wall by man. One of this class lies in the quarry—having never been removed to its situation in the building—where it can be viewed all round, and measured easily. It is fourteen by seventeen, and sixty-nine feet long!

The Lord frequently selected the objects before and around him as topics for the illustration of great truths. In the present instance rocks are so chosen. Speaking to his disciples, He says, "Whom do men say that I the Son of Man am? And they said, Some say that thou art John the Baptist; some, Elias; and others, Jeremias, or one of the prophets. He saith unto them, But whom say ye that I am? And Simon Peter answered and said, Thou art the Christ, the Son of the living God." Noble declaration! glorious truth, which gives force and significance to all the other truths of Divine revelation! In asking this question, Jesus calls himself "the Son of Man," an endearing relationship to and alliance with humanity, without which the work of the kinsman Redeemer could not have been performed. Peter gladly, by implication, admits that as delightfully true, but he says, "Thou art more, or thou art that, because thou art more; thou art the Christ,—the Messiah,—the Son of God—the Son of the living God.' The living God! How precious is this apostolic declaration respecting God! He is no unconscious abstraction, no mere ideal word for an unknown power in nature, or for the power of nature personified, but He is a living being who thinks, feels, loves, purposes, acts.

Well, what did Jesus say respecting this prompt declaration of his disciple? It contains four parts:—that Jesus is the Christ, that he is the Son of God; and that God is a living being. The reply of the Savior is a full and glad recognition of it all, and a loving benediction on the speaker:—"Blessed art thou, Simon Bar-jona; for flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee, but my Father which is in heaven." But this is not all. It was "from that time forth" that Jesus began to tell his disciples about his approaching sufferings and death at Jerusalem, and his rising from the dead the third day. Within view of this he bears his testimony to the man who had borne such testimony to him. And he does it thus, lovingly:—"And I say also unto thee, That thou art Peter, and upon this rock I will build my church; and the gates of hell shall not prevail against it." Thou art Peter (Petros) a piece of rock. The name I give thee is significant; thou wilt be firm, solid, decided; and thou mayest have the most perfect confidence in the issue, for upon this rock (petra) I will build my church.'

Which rock? Christ Himself, undoubtedly; the Son of Man, the Messiah, the Son of the living God. The wall of the glorious city had twelve foundations, and in them the names of the twelve Apostles of the Lamb; but the church itself is built on Christ. He is the foundation which God has laid in Zion, tried, precious, and sure. He does not say to Peter, "On thee will I build my church," but "on this rock," as, on another occasion, "Destroy this temple," but "he spake of the temple of his body." The designation rock, or Petra, is never given to men in the Old Testament Scriptures; but Peter had often read there, "He is the rock." Deut. xxxii. 4. "Who is a rock, save our God?" 2 Sam. xxii. 32. "In the Lord Jehovah is the rock of ages." Isa. xxvi. 4. "God only is my rock." Ps. lxii. 2. "He is the rock of our salvation." xcv. 1. Emmanuel, God with us, the Messiah, is the rock on which the church is built; "other foundation can no man lay than that is laid, which is Jesus Christ," (1 Cor. iii. 11,) and however men may err concerning the truth, this "foundation of God standeth sure." 2 Tim. ii. 19.

"And the gates of hell (hades, the grave) shall not prevail against it." Stripped of all the accretions which time, tradition, and speculation have gathered around these words, I venture to say that they mean simply this—Death shall not defeat my purpose. Ruined temples and scattered fragments of ruined cities lay around him. Death had prevailed, notwithstanding the rocky foundation of temple and city, and the enormous pieces of rock that had entered into the walls of both; but death should prove powerless against the society that the Lord Jesus had come to incorporate with Himself—the church, which is his body. Simply this, said I? Why, it is the grandest, profoundest, most wonderful thing that the mind can contemplate. Resurrection is the doctrine, first that of the Lord, as He told his disciples on the occasion in question, and "afterward they that are Christ's at his coming," as the apostle of the Gentiles subsequently wrote, according to the revelation given to him.

"And I will give unto thee the keys." The result of the pentecostal sermon, and of the visit to the house of the Roman centurion, verify this.

The supremacy of Peter as Prince of the Apostles and first Bishop of Rome, as claimed by Romish theologians, has no sustaining proof in this narrative. He was not the Apostle of the Gentiles, but that of the circumcision. There is no proof that Peter ever saw Rome, and none that he was the first pope of that city. The evidence is all the other way, and conclusively so. The keys at the Pope's girdle are not those given to Peter. They are of spurious metal and forged make. But let it be distinctly understood that Protestantism might admit, simply for the sake of argument, both the apostolic primacy and the first popedom to Peter, and yet utterly and entirely deny the papal claim to apostolic succession, for this absolutely conclusive reason that the apostles had not, and, from the very nature of their office, could not have official successors. Apostolic doctrine, thanks to the Lord, lives in the pages of the New Testament, and in the hearts and minds of saints throughout the world; but successors of the apostles by virtue of office there are none, and all who advance the arrogant claim are to be set aside as impostors. Rev. ii. 2.—Rainbow.

Egypt.

It is a remarkable country, bearing a remarkable nation, this Egypt of old, with its river of unknown origin, its culture of unknown origin, its hieroglyphics of unknown origin, and its earliest inhabitants of unknown origin.—By ancient writers it is called "gift of the Nile;" its ancient people worshiped the Nile; and its ancient history is replete with wondrous phenomena of the Nile. The ruins of its temples, pyramids and obelisks still testify to the indescribable splendor of former greatness; and the descriptions in these stupendous works of human design, enterprise and perseverence unravel many a mystery, used for centuries either cunningly or in good faith, to envelop the human mind in the somberness of fear and dependency. Cairo of to-day is a mere miserable village in comparison with Memphis of old; the splendid temple of Denderah, nearly 4,000 years old, with the zodiac on the platform of its peristyle, is a monument, speaking aloud of Egyptian culture in the remotest times of human history.

The indefatigable and most reliable Lepsius has presented us with many impressions of wonderful works of sculpture, most astonishingly perfect in all their details. Among others we see an evening-party of Egyptian ladies, as he has taken it from a sepulchre near Thebes. There they are seated in beautifully adorned chairs on little wheels, exactly as we have them now-a-days. The ladies appear in the finest attire and are richly decked with jewels; they have flowers or costly fans in their hands, and are attended by male and female slaves. In their immediate vicinity there is a stand with delicious refreshments of all sorts, various victuals, dressed fowl, baskets filled with fruit and bottles with beverage, probably different from water.

Hundreds and hundreds of similar copies on paper, taken by the same Lepsius, give us an idea of other kinds of social entertainments and professional occupation; as for instance: sandal-making, wine-pressing, etc., yea, even of military drilling and exercises to such a perfection, that, while we are bound to admire the accomplishment in the fine art of sculpture, we cannot help imagining the Egyptian archers under the disciplinary control of a Prussian military officer.

And all this 4,000 years ago!

But this is not all. Egypt is also the cradle of theologo-philosophical science of a comparatively pure and sublime nature. Not as common property, of course; but still wonderfully advanced and progressive under the cultivation of the highly gifted priests, the exclusive guardians and safe-guards of mysteries, to the knowledge of which a select few only were admitted. These priests were the writers and interpreters of the hieroglyphics, and are therefore called in the original Bible text: "Chartummeem," which means "engravers of signs and images," and not "magicians," as the authorized English version translates it. They studied also astronomy as far and as much as their period permitted them, and were acquainted with the natural history of their country more and better, than many a public teacher and expounder of the Bible of the present period is.

That their superiority was respected by the people as divine, and by the kings as an indispensable support of their throne, is self-evident; and that they themselves were conscious of their power and influence, needs neither proof nor illustration.

Such were the prominent men and classes of the commonwealth of Egypt; and by and among such men and classes of society Moses was educated.—Jewish Chronicle.

The Truth Coming Out.

Let us now glance at the testimony of a few of the more recent expositors, and bless God that a most precious but much neglected truth of his Word is beginning to be restored to its proper place in the esteem of many of the ablest writers.

Olshausen, the distinguished German commentator, says: "The Revelation teaches in sublime imagery, agreeing perfectly with the statements of our Lord and the apostles (which are less formal, and rather take the doctrine for granted, and thus are more incidental) that a period will come in which not only, as has already been the case, the spirit of Jesus Christ should prevail in secret, and guide mens' minds, but should also gain the victory externally, and found a kingdom of peace and righteousness upon earth. Now, that with the arrival of this reign of peace there will be connected on one hand, the appearance of Jesus Christ, and a resurrection of many saints and pious men, and, on the other, a previous mighty struggle on the part of evil—does indeed follow very naturally from the fundamental idea, and the supposed development of good and evil; but these points are only incidental. The principal idea is the perfect return of the supremacy of good, the restoration of the lost paradise to an earth which has been laid waste by sin. Millions desire this most earnestly, hope and pray for it even, without ever imagining that it is the very doctrine which they think themselves bound to oppose, or at least unable to admit, without deviating from correct belief."

Hackett, whose Commentary on the Acts of the Apostles has received the warm commendation of those best able to judge of its merits, says, on chapter 3, verse 20: "The apostle enforces his exhortation to repent by an appeal to the final coming of Christ, not because he would represent it as near in point of time, but because that event was always near to the feelings and consciousness of the first believers. It was the great consummation on which the strongest desires of their souls were fixed, to which their thoughts and hopes were habitually turned. They lived in expectation of it; they labored to be prepared for it; they were constantly, in the expressive language of Peter, looking for and hastening unto it. It is then that Christ will reveal himself in glory, will come 'to take vengeance on them that obey not the gospel, and to be admired in all them who believe,' will raise the dead, invest the redeemed with an uncorruptable body, and introduce them for the first time, and forever, into the state of perfect holiness and happiness prepared for them in his kingdom. The apostles, the first christians in general, comprehended the grandeur of that occasion; it filled their circle of view, stood forth to their contemplations as the point of culminating interest in their own and the world's history, threw into comparative insignificance the present time, death, all intermediate events, and made them feel that the manifestation of Christ, with all its consequences of indescribable moment to all true believers, was the grand object which they were to keep in view as the end of their toils, the commencement and perfection of their glorious immortality. . .

It is to be acknowledged that most christians, at the present day, do not give that prominence to the resurrection and judgment, in their thoughts and discourse, which the New Testament writers assign to them; but this fact is owing, not necessarily to a difference of opinion in regard to the time when Christ will come, but to our adequate views and impressions concerning the grandeur of that occasion, and the too prevalent worldliness in the church, which is the cause of consequence of such deficient views. If modern christians sympathised more fully with the sacred writers on this subject, it would bring both their conduct and their style of religious instruction into nearer correspondence with the lives and teaching of the primitive examples of our faith.

Alford, whose Critical Commentary on the New Testament is the most masterly production of the age, and places him in the front rank of expositors, says: "The Lord will come in person to this earth; his risen elect will reign here with him. This is my firm persuasion, and not mine alone, but that of multitudes of Christ's waiting people, as it was that of his primitive apostolical church, before controversy blinded the eyes of the fathers to the light of prophecy." . . .

In the fifth volume of the Memoirs of Dr. Chalmers, which embraces much of his correspondence, we find a letter to Dr. Bonar in commendation of certain doctrines published by the latter, and then it is added: "It is not of your prophetical, but of your theological views, that I now speak, though to the former, also, I approximate much nearer than I did in my younger days," . . . "But without slacking in the least or obligation to keep forward this great (missionary) cause, I look for its conclusive establishment through a widening passage of desolating judgments, with the utter demolition of our present civil and ecclesiastical structures."—Prophetic Times.

Exhortation.

Paul's epistle to the Ephesians iv. 31, 32, he says, "Let all bitterness, and wrath, and anger, and clamor, and evil-speaking, be put away from you, with all malice; and be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God for Christ's sake hath forgiven you. Be ye therefore followers of God, as dear children; but fornication, and all uncleanness, or covetousness, let it not be once named among you, as becometh saints. Neither filthiness, nor foolish talking, nor jesting which are not convenient; but rather giving of thanks. For this ye know, that know whoremonger, nor unclean person, nor covetous man, who is an idolater, hath any inheritance in the kingdom of Christ, and of God. Let no man deceive you with vain words; for because of these things cometh the wrath of God upon the children of disobedience. Be not ye therefore partakers with them, for ye were some time in darkness, but now are ye light in the Lord; walk as children of light, for the fruit of the spirit is in all goodness and righteousness and truth, proving what is acceptable unto the Lord. And have no fellowship with the unfruitful works of darkness, but rather reprove them, for it is a shame even to speak of those things which are done of them in secret. See then that ye walk circumspectly, not as fools, but as wise, redeeming the time (why), because the days are evil." Yes, brethren, it does not take months of study, to prove most emphatically to our minds that the days in which we live are evil. I do think that it is high time that we should with all our hearts and minds, encourage one another by exhortation, to hold fast the hope we have. Brethren, are we living to-day in such a way and manner, that if Christ our Lord should come to-morrow, that we could be perfectly satisfied that we would be accepted of him,—that this poor mortal body is ready to put on immortality, at any hour, at any minute, our Savior makes his second advent into the world? Brethren, let us remember this little word, (watch). Let us take upon ourselves the whole armor of God, that we may be able to withstand in the evil day, having our loins girt about with truth, and having on the breast-plate of righteousness, that we may guard against all evil at all times, let our conversation be as becometh the Gospel of Christ. Amen. E. O. NELSON.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....May 5, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

—The Editor has not yet returned from his western tour, consequently our readers will be deprived of his usual communications for this column for the present week. Next week, as we anticipate, he will contribute the usual editorials.

—From some of our friends in arrears we are receiving thankful expressions for continuing the paper; and better still, they remit not only payment for arrearages, but advance pay on subscription. Will all do so as fast as they can. We want our subscription list much enlarged. Will our present patrons help us in this way.

—The last number of Messiah's Herald informs us that its Editor, J. M. Orrock, is to have a respite from his editorial labors for the month of May. We hope he will return to his post with renewed energies. Though greatly differing with the Herald in some things, it is one of our welcome exchanges. It is edited with marked ability.

—We had the pleasure of listening to a converted Jew on Lord's day evening in this place. His reasoning from the premises, that the Jews remain a distinct people among all nations, and that they observe the same feasts, fasts, and other religious observances, as the Bible enjoins, and as they have observed them for thousands of years, for the authenticity of the Scriptures was quite conclusive. This people has a glorious future.

—From our letter files we learn that the RESTITUTION is a most welcome visitor, not only to many households, but to many a lone isolated believer in the things pertaining to the kingdom of God. Many prize it as the best exponent of Bible truth published. While conscious that, like all things human, it has its imperfections, we hope and pray that it may be the medium through which the knowledge of some very important, though much neglected truths may be communicated. We thank our brethren for all their words of cheer.

Jesus Christ the Son of God.

The remark is very common among skeptics of all classes, that Jesus Christ was a good man, but that he was not the son of God, neither did he possess any supernatural power.

The whole contradictory system of infidelity can furnish nothing more absurd and inconsistent than this. If he was (as they nearly all admit,) a good man, he would claim nothing for himself that was not justly his. He speaks repeatedly of God as being his father, and also says: "I am the living bread which came down from heaven, if any man eat of this bread he shall live forever." John vi. 51. He invites the world to partake of the waters of life. In the following words: "If any man thirst let him come unto me and drink." John vii. 37. When he opened the eyes of the blind he declared himself to be the Son of God, and the man who had been blind responded earnestly "Lord I believe." John ix. 37, 38.

He announced himself as the resurrection and the life, John xi. 25, and proved that he held the keys of the grave by opening the gates of death, and bidding the sleepers come forth. He holds them still, and if his voice does not call the long roll then death must be an eternal sleep.

He declared that he came to save the world, John xii. 47, and the offer is still open to the children of men, that all who will may avail themselves of its glories.

He is the only mediator between God and man—the man Christ Jesus. He is the only hope of a fallen world—the only way of eternal life—the only shepherd of the scattered sheep, and the only head of the church.

He shall be the Desire of nations—the King of kings and Lord of lords and the armies which are in heaven shall follow him. He shall then be the glory of the risen host, for it is his blood that hath made white the raiment of the redeemed, and he shall be the light of the city, when the nations of the saved shall walk therein, and the kings of the earth do bring their glory and honor into it. Rev. xxi. 23, 24.

When the seals of the book shall be opened, when the golden vials full of odors shall be offered before the throne, and the new song shall be sung, both earth and heaven shall echo with the words: "Blessing and honor and glory and power be unto him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb forever and ever."

The Generations and the Prophetic Periods.

One of the grandest of symbolizations in the entire scope of prophecy, is that given in the tenth chapter of Revelation. The form of a mighty angel wreathed with a coronal of rainbows, his vestments the drapery of storms, with sun-like countenance, and feet like pillared fire, is presented as standing with one foot on the sea, and one on the land, and holding an opened book in his right hand, and as evoking the responsive utterances of the voices of seven thunders by his terrible outcry. Then in reverent attitude, with hand uplifted to heaven, declares, under the most solemn affirmation recorded in all the Bible, that "There shall be a time no longer."

The sworn testimony of this sublime witness is concerning a prophetical period. There is a scale of prophetical periods, as we have already seen, termed times, by which the duration of earthly powers, and divine arrangements, is measured. Each single period embraces 360 years. Seven times are some way assigned to Gentile supremacy over God's people.

The final period of 360 years is the duration to which the angel's oath relates, and giving God's word freely to the world, the work symbolized. Says E. Bickersteth;—"As soon as the times of the Gentiles are within the verge of one time, lest men should think the end was indefinitely prolonged, the angel swears there shall be a time no longer. The era of this chapter (Rev. x.), is supposed to be that of the Reformation. It was then that the little book, or the Bible, in contrast with the larger sealed book (Rev x.) of all God's Providence was first fully opened to the church, and light dawned upon Europe (his countenance as the sun)." Just as soon as the Reformation was fairly in progress, Luther commenced the great work of giving God's word to the nations of Europe in the vernacular language of the people. In 1522, the first edition of the New Testament was printed in the German language. About 1520, the first English edition was published. Thence the Bible was given to European people in the following order. French 1535. Swedish 1541. Danish 1550. Dutch 1560. Russian 1581. Hungarian 1589. Polish 1593. Modern Greek 1638. Turkish 1666. Irish 1685. Portuguese 1748. Munsk 1771. Italian 1778. Not only was the little book opened, that is translated from dead languages into living tongues, but the living ministry also "prophesyed again before many peoples, and nations, and tongues, and kings." By this prophesying again is meant the preaching of God's word in place of the exhibition of the stupid mummeries of Papal worship. The Papacy had taken away the Bible; the symbol angel gives it to the world; the voice of the Gospel messenger had long been suppressed, but living lips proclaim the glad tidings of great joy to all people. In illustration we give two extracts from Luther himself. "Printing is the latest and greatest gift by which God enables us to advance the things of the Gospel. It is the last bright flame, manifesting itself just previous to the extinction of the world. Thanks be to God, it came before the last day came." Near the time of his death, he said; "I persuade myself verily, that the day of judgment will not be absent full 300 years more. God will not, cannot suffer this wicked world much longer." Luther died in 1546, and judgment sets on the Little Horn power, as already noticed in 1793, by which it is doomed, first to, consumption, and, finally overwhelming destruction. All the Reformers regarded the brilliant unfolding of Scripture light then evolving as a "sign of the promised brighter day soon coming."

At first, the Reformation angel limited his work to European nations and their colonies, but a prophecy of our Savior indicates a world-wide spread of truth before the end of Gentile times. "This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness to all nations; and then shall the end come. Matt. xxiv. 14, accordingly in 1804, the Bible societies entered upon the great work of giving the world the word of God. They were formed for this very purpose. From the Report of the American Bible Society for 1871, we learn, that the Bible, in whole, or in part, has been translated into 213 languages and dialects. The whole number of versions is 252. Of these, 205 are versions prepared since the year 1804. The Scriptures have been translated into the languages of not only the more fixed, and comparatively civilized nations, but also into the barbarous tongues of wandering tribes. Those that inhabit the steppes of Asia, or dwell in the distant Indies, the dusky tribes of Africa, and the red hunters of the western continent, alike have the word of God.

It is thought by some, who have been curious in these investigations, that 6,000,000 copies would be a liberal estimate for all the manuscripts and printed editions of the Scriptures circulated previous to 1800, in about thirty different languages. Since that time, to 1871, 105,000,000 copies have been circulated in more than 200 languages and dialects. To effect this, what wonders has God wrought. Japan had no intercourse with foreign nations, and her people were totally ignorant of Divine Revelation. The United States unlock her closed gates, and the missionary enters with the Divine pages in her own language. The proud Moslem, with drawn scimitar threatens death to the subverter of the religion of the Prophet, and despiser of the Koran, but God dries up the strength of Islam, and light from on high reaches the realms of the Sultan. The Papacy interdicts and burns the Bible, but God palsies the defiant arm that grasps the sceptre of the Eternal City, and the Holy Oracles are read in safety under the shadows of the Vatican itself. In the land of boasted liberty it is made a penal offence to teach 3,000,000 slaves to read the messages of everlasting life, but the manacles are wrenched from their wrists by the mighty arm of war, and the Book of God put into their longing hands. Africa remains a terra incognita through the ages, but the explorer at last penetrates its unknown regions, and the Gospel is read in its jargon tongues. The islands of the sea hold intercourse in strange and peculiar dialects, but the Symbol Angel gives them the lessons of future life in the language in which they were born. A part of mankind are deprived of sight, but the "Little Book" is stamped in raised letters, and touch supplies the place of sight —the blind feel the Gospel with their fingers. The gift of tongues was manifested through the living speaker when the former dispensation neared its close;—now the same Spirit speaks through volumes printed in all the languages of earth as this dispensation nears its termination. From 1522, when the Scriptures were first printed in a modern language after the Reformation commenced, a time, or 360 years, extends to 1882. The 2,300 years, if we adjusted them correctly by giving 490 to the Jewish people, and the remaining 1810 to the Gentiles, expire in 1880. So there was not quite a full time of Gentile ascendancy remaining in 1522. But the august Messenger is still doing his wonderful work. At the usual rate of annual increase, there have probably been circulated more than 133,000,000 copies of the Scriptures since 1804. The work of the Symbol Angel approaches its completion. The message is about delivered, and a grand crisis in human history is emphatically near. An entire change in the government of the world, the Church's exaltation, and Israel's glory, are events at the door. Let us labor, watch and pray. S. A. G.

The Bible versus Universalism.

1. The design of Paul's argument in the fifteenth chapter of first Corinthians, was to prove the fact of the resurrection of the dead. Some in that church affirmed that there is no such thing as the resurrection of the dead. ver 12.

2. The apostle deduces the logical conclusion, that if there is no resurrection, then Christ could not have risen from the dead. verse 13.

3. If Christ had not risen from the dead, then their preaching was vain, and those to whom they had preached were yet in their sins. verse 14. Not only so, but that they were condemned as false witnesses because they had testified that God had raised up his Son, whom he raised not up, if so be that the dead rise not; and as a consequence growing out of the non-resurrection of the dead, those having fallen asleep in Christ had perished. The apostle assumes the fact as having been proven, that Christ had risen from the dead, and proceeds to show that his resurrection was typified by the first fruits which were offered as a wave offering before God; (ver. 20) thus showing the necessity of a great harvest of resurrected ones as the harvest represented by the first fruits. But this illustration only proves the resurrection of the righteous represented by Christ as the sample.

The resurrection of Christ, and those who are his, establishes the fact of the resurrection of dead men, just as much as though all the dead had been included in the illustration. Having thus shown the feasibility of the resurrection, he boldly affirms that Christ will raise all who have died in Adam. He says, "For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection the dead." verse 21.

1. The words death and dead are used synonymously in reference to all men. They are evidently used in the same unlimited sense.

2. Adam is declared to be the cause of death, and Christ the cause of the resurrection of the dead. By man came death, by man also came the resurrection of the dead. If Adam is the cause of death and Christ the cause of life in the promise, they must sustain the same relation to death and resurrection in the conclusion; for it is not admissible to insert a single element in the conclusion which did not pre-exist in the premise. It will not, therefore, do to use the preposition in, at the 22d verse, in any sense except that of by or through. Thus, the Diaglott renders it, "For as by man all die, so by the anointed also all will be made alive. But each one in his own rank; Christ a first fruit; afterwards those who are Christ's at his appearing. Then the end, when he shall have given up the kingdom to the God and father, when he shall have abrogated all government and all authority and power. For he must reign till he has placed all enemies under his feet. Even death, the last enemy, will be rendered powerless." 1 Co. xv. 22–26. Please observe. The same all will be made alive by Christ, who had died by Adam. But all men die by Adam; therefore, the same all will be made alive by Christ. Adam is the author of the death of race, Christ will be the author of the restoration to life of the race. It does not follow because men are made alive by or through Christ, that therefore they are Christians; but from the next verse we learn just the reverse. We read about every man in his own band or company—thus, showing different ranks or companies. From the conclusion in the next verse we learn that these different ranks or companies will be raised at different periods of time. After the record of the resurrection of those who are Christ's at his appearing, it is added, "And then the end." The end of what? Evidently the end of the things concerning which he had been talking, to-wit, the end of the dead; for in the series of events named death is the last. The apostle must have referred to the series of events concerning which he had been talking, viz., the end of the dead by a resurrection therefrom. Some render TELOS, last or remainder. Thus, the resurrection of Christ, the first fruit, and the resurrection of those that are his at his appearing; and then the resurrection of the rest of the dead, when the last enemy death is destroyed.

In verses 42–44 the apostle refers to none except those who belong to the harvest represented by Christ the first fruit—those who are Abraham's seed (Gal, iii. 29) and who have borne the image of the heavenly, and who shout victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ, verses 49–57. The asseveration that every man will be raised in his own order, band or company, teaches conclusively that all will not be raised in the same relative position. Besides there is a marked contrast between Christ and his people, and the rest of the dead. Why the qualifying phrase, "they that are his;" If none shall be raised except his people? The succeeding verses clearly show that a period of time commensurate with this reign of Christ, and subjugation of his enemies, will intervene between the resurrection of those who are Christ's, and the rest of the dead. The period commences with the coming of Christ, and the beginning of his reign, and closes with the abrogation of death, and the emancipation of the unnumbered millions of his captives. One class will be raised when Christ commences his reign, as the independent sovereign of earth, and all the rest of the dead will be raised when his reign closes, and he delivers up the kingdom to his Father, having put down all interposing rule and authority.

By reference to Revelations xx. we find a measuring line defining the duration of time between these two resurrections. We read, "and they lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years. But the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years.

1. All the dead who live at the commencement of the thousand years are blessed and holy, and will reign with Christ.

2. The second death will have no power over them, clearly implying that it may have power over some of those who shall have part in the second resurrection, also that the two classes will have different natures, so that one cannot die, and the other can die.

3. A thousand years will intervene between these two resurrections. This is definitely stated.

4. The phrase "the rest of the dead" must include all who are left in the death state when the first class shall live. (1.) Both classes were dead when the first class referred to lived. (2) One class of these dead men lived, but the other class remained dead until the thousand years were finished. (3.) Had the Revelator referred to men who were not dead when the first class lived, there would be no left of the dead about it. For a man to affirm that he had taken a part of his wheat to market, but the rest remained in the bin, would be understood to teach, first that that which was taken out and that which remained, were both in the bin together previous to the separation; and second, that the phrase, the rest of the wheat, would include all the wheat left in the bin. The two parties referred to by John must have been dead cotemporaneously, or one could not be raised and the other left.

5. The declaration that one class lived, and that the other class lived not again when the thousand years are finished, as three times affirmed in so many words. When the thousand years have expired the rest of the dead will live again, and both small and great stand before God. The sea, death, and the grave give up their dead in them. verses 12 13. Not a dead man is left in earth or sea. The books are opened, and another book is opened which is the book of life. Why are these books opened before all the billions of the just resurrectional dead? Before they can be judged, justified or condemned out of the things written, they must have had the written word, and developed characters either of loyalty or disloyalty. The very idea of judgment involves jeopardy, and presupposes that some may be condemned. Allied with the book of life since the world began, has been mercy, coupled with the privilege of writing the names of all the faithful upon its unsullied pages. That all the unnumbered billions of resurrected ones have had a chance to write their names in this book, is clearly evident from the closing declaration that "whosoever (every one) was not found written in the book of life was cast in the lake of fire." Rev. xx. 11–15. Thus, fearful jeopardy goes with probation during all the ages past and future. This fearful responsibility must rest upon all who shall have been saved from the dead and brought to the knowledge of the truth. This will be the last judgment and award beyond the universal salvation from the thralldom of death. Why affirm that whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire, (that great symbol of destruction) if the names of everyone, in that vast assemblage, shall be found written in that book? Thus, to prove that all men will be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth, and to prove that all will accept, love, and walk in the glorious light of the truth, are two widely different things. The only universal salvation, of every individual of the race of man, is salvation from death; and this as shown in a former article only restores temporal life. Eternal life is no where offered man collectively, but always upon individual faith, love, and obedience. The following passage is quoted to prove the universal salvation of the race. It reads: "For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the "Savior of all men, specially of them that believe" 2 Tim. iv. 10. Universalist expounders reverse the order of the two salvations, and have the special one first, and the universal one subsequently. This special salvation, they argue, is temporal, and relates to deliverance from temporal calamities, and the manifold temptations; but that the universal salvation is eternal, and relates to the final salvation of the race from sin to everlasting holiness and happiness. Just the reverse is true according to the apostle. The universal salvation is temporal and unconditional; but the special salvation will be eternal and conditional. God's plan individualizes the world (the race) and offers eternal life only to believers. Christ the great expounder of his Father's love, says: "For God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life. For God sent not his Son into the world to condemn the world, but that the world through him might be saved." John iii. 16–17. The great mission of Christ was to save men, but only on conditions of a living faith, with assurance that those who do not believe shall perish, and not receive eternal life. As far as universal salvation is concerned, no conditions whatever are affixed. J. M. S.

Crumbs of Thought.

To leave off praying because we have so many trials, is like leaving off our shoes and going barefoot, because the road is full of thorns and stones. Endeavor to be what you wish others to think you are. Hypocisy costs more than sincerity, and many a man could live a good life with half the pains he takes to hide a bad one. Inward peace gives outward quiet. The human heart has no abiding refuge but in God; joys will fade, friends will flee, kindred will die, treasures will vanish, life will fail, earth will dissolve, the heavens depart,—only God remains, but the saint can say he is the strength of my heart, and my portion forever. He who has no refuge but God, has the best refuge in the universe, and the only one in which he can be eternally safe. Earthly trusts become earthly trials. Everything that leads us away from God, leads us toward trouble. Nothing is a misfortune that drives us to the Lord.

"I love to see my Father's hand,
Though oft it bears a rod;
'Twill lead me to the promised land,
The city of my God."

Our Lord's Return.

Christ's birth of the Virgin Mary is no more explicitly and unequivocally asserted, or more certainly attested, than his return again to the earth as literally and truly as he went up out of it. Nor is there a creed in Christendom, so far as I know, which does not embrace it as an essential part of the church's faith. "He shall come to judge the quick and the dead," says the creed which bears the name of the apostles. "He shall come again with glory," says the Synod of Nice. "We believe that thou shalt come to be our judge," has been for ages sung in the Te Deum. The great confession of Augsburg affirms that "Christ shall openly come again to judge them that are found alive, and restore to life those that be dead, according to the creed of the apostles." "He ascended into heaven, and there sitteth, until he return to judge all men at the last day," says the church of England. "We do believe, out of the word of God, that our Lord Jesus Christ shall come again from heaven, and that after a corporal and visible manner as heretofore he hath ascended, being adorned with great glory and majesty, that he may appear as judge of the quick and dead," says the confession of Belgia. And with the same unequivocal fulness is this article incorporated in all our hymn-books and liturgies, celebrated in our sacred songs, woven into our very prayers, and uttered over the graves of our friends as we consign their bodies to the ground. Indeed it is one of the great mount-peaks of Christianity—one of the three grand particulars in which its sublimest substance lies. The first advent, the cross, and the second coming are the stems upon which everything distinctive in Christianity is suspended, to which its doctrinal system is adjusted, and upon which the hopes of the world depend. To strike out either one of these would be to mangle the Scriptures from end to end, to stifle the voice of prophets and apostles, to spoil the noblest of Christian utterances in the days of the church's greatest purity, and to emasculate religion itself.

If Christianity, then, can teach us anything, or if the declarations of the Scriptures are at all binding upon us, as we profess to believe that they are, we must accept it as truth, and rely upon it as an infallible verity, that the same Jesus that was born at Bethlehem, crucified on Calvary and received up into heaven from Mount Olivet, is literally and personally to return again to this world, to be seen with our eyes and heard with our ears, as he was seen and heard the day that he was taken up. If this be not true, there is no truth in language, no inspiration in the Bible, no substance in our faith, no reality in the Christian's hope. The methods of interpretation which can explain away this doctrine, or detach it from the teachings and joyous expectations of the prophets and apostles, must, at the same rate, silence all that we have hitherto heeded as the oracles of God, and leave us in a world of darkness with our only lights suddenly and forever extinguished. I accordingly accept and declare it, as a doctrine that must stand or fall with Christianity itself, that Jesus is literally and personally, and with great power and glory, to return again to this world, once more to tread the localities already hallowed to his church by his miracles, and prayers, and tears, and blood.

The "London Economist" has published an interesting account of the national debts of the various leading countries. The present amount of the national debt of the United States, exclusive of the bonds issued to the Pacific Railway companies, which amount to $64,623,512, besides unpaid interest, is rather less than at the date to which the calculation refers:

—Nature will be reported. All things are engaged in writing their own history. The plant and pebble go attended by their own shadow. The rock leaves its scratches on the mountain side, the river its bed in the soil; the animal leaves bone in the stratum, the tern and leaf their modest epitaph in the coal. The falling drop makes its epitaph in the sand or stone; not a footstep in the snow or along the ground but prints in characters more or less lasting a map of its march; every act of man inscribes itself on the memories of its followers, and in his own face. The air is full of sound; the ground is all memoranda signatures; and every object is covered over with hints which speak to the intelligent.

Come and Welcome.

"So those servants went out into the highways, and gathered together all, as many as they found, both bad and good, and the wedding was furnished with guests."—Matt. xxii. 10.

Gather them in from the crowded street,
Gather them in from the city's hum,
Gather them in to the Savior's feet,
To him who bids you in mercy "Come!"

Gather the hearing whose ears are closed,
Gather the seeing whose sight is dim,
Awake them slumbering the sleep of sin,
Gather them all to rejoice in Him.

And soon the cited morn shall rejoice our eyes.
Gather them out of the darkness past,
To crown His triumph, the Savior's prize.

Gather them "all, both bad and good"
For the marriage feast is royally spread,
Within is gladness, life, and joy,
Without,—the dying and the dead.

The Woodman and the Sandal Tree.

BY WILLIAM CULLEN BRYANT.

Beside a sandal tree a woodman stood
And swung the axe, and, as the strokes were told
Upon the fragrant trunk, the generous wood,
With its own sweets, perfumed the cruel blade.
He then, and do the like: a soul endued
With light from heaven, a nature pure and great,
Will place its highest rites in doing good,

Dogma and Charity.

All Christian thinkers wish to lay hold of truth; not one essential and fundamental truth merely, invaluable as that is, but all truth. To the wisdom of the Creator it has seemed right to give much variety to the thinking faculty in man. In some men it has great strength, breadth and depth, so that they are the born leaders of their brethren, intellectual kings by divine right. In others it is feeble, narrow, and shallow, so that it is very near the literal truth to say that they do not think at all. If of a naturally pliant or amiable disposition, they are easily led, so that the responsibility of those who lead them is increased in the ratio of their unthinking confidence. If they are naturally stubborn as well as incapable of reasoning, it is as idle to ply them with logical argument on any subject as it is to whistle for the wind; for the pride of ignorance will prompt them to say "No" to every proposition; and if in your despair you ask them to favor you with a reason for their persistent negative, the satisfactory answer is sure to be "No."

Between these extremes the types of minds are numberless; whilst education, associations, and many other circumstances influence individuals so extensively and so differently, that to expect any considerable number of men to think alike on any given subject is out of the question. Even on religious matters, though religion has a written authority to which all professes to bow, this diversity is not only found, but found in the most remarkable degree. The divisions of Christendom are no crime; and even the earnest, thoughtful, devout minority in all the Churches who are most anxious to ascertain the exact truth on certain points of great moment are unable to see alike. Whether this be a matter to mourn over, or whether, though on the face of it an evil, it tends to keep up intellectual activity in relation to the highest of all studies, and is thus a positive benefit to mankind, we do not inquire at present; but most certainly it suggests that Christian students should live under the constant influence of mutual Christian charity.

Charity, noblest and most enduring of the graces,—beautiful, immortal charity,—should live and move in the thoughts and words of his fellow Christians on religious subjects. Love is the eye without the "beam" which sees clearly how to pluck the "mote" out of a brother's eye without hurting him. Love is a clear-sighted scholar, a good interpreter, and an excellent logician; whilst as a companion in the study, in the pulpit, in the pew, and in the intercourse of men in society, it is simply admirable. Surely the essence of the gospel should be fragrant in the hearts of the redeemed although in their heads they differ about the precise meaning of some of its doctrines. If I love a man simply because he thinks with me, my charity is worthless, it is even selfish, and therefore not charity at all; for I am only loving in him the reflection of my own convictions, which is a bit of pitiful egotism; but if I love him, although he is not of my sect and differs from me in many points, simply because I see Christ in him, that, I think, is Christian charity of the royal stamp that will be the current coin of the kingdom of heaven. Call the shield silver or gold, truthfully, as it appears to you; but O, do not come to blows about it, for it is positively both silver and gold; and above all remember that it is a precious shield, whatever it is made of. The monarch who murdered his subjects because they would not think alike, learned a useful lesson afterwards when he wished to lighten the tedium of his prison by trying and failing, to make a number of watches keep exactly the same time.

We are not about to speak of killing men for the glory of God, or of butchering saints to make a Roman holiday. The world has had enough of that; and were it not that Christianity is divine, it would have perished, and deserved to have perished, centuries ago, because of the unutterable horrors that have been perpetrated in its name. Nor shall we recall, except by simple allusion, which well-read men will understand, the disgraceful polemics of last century and the beginning of this, when Christian men used language respecting each other over which we wish an eternal veil drawn; but we would earnestly commend to brethren who are striving to serve truth in this generation the sublime counsel, "Let all your things be done with charity."

We cannot do better than close this short paper with a letter which was never intended for publication. The fact that it is only a private communication really gives it additional interest. The wisdom and charity of the writer are equally conspicuous and praiseworthy:—

"I enclose to you the annual subscription, which about this time last year I commenced, and which I hope to be able to continue. I am pleased to send it, because I believe you are doing good service unto the truth, both by your personal testimony and by the "Rainbow." I by no means agree with all that I read in the "Rainbow," but I am not disposed to make you an offender for a word, or to say that you have acted unwisely or unfaithfully in opening the pages of the "Rainbow" freely to the contributions of whatever is in the mind and heart of any sincere disciple of the Lord Jesus. Yourself and others will probably be unable to see with me the things of God, or what I believe to be such, as I see them; and you will have yet further cause to perceive the force of this observation in my future communications. But what of that? I am persuaded that truth, and not victory, or a creed, or a sect, is that which rules your heart and your conduct, and I am content; for I am sure that sooner or later our Father will bring all his children to see eye to eye, and make them to know even as they are known. And if that may not come until Zion is restored, and until faith shall end in sight, be it so. We are in the way of learning more and more accurately the "all truth" into which the spirit was given to guide us, and surely the efficiency of the Teacher is guarantee sufficient that every scholar in the school of Christ shall learn the lesson accurately and wholly, so that in the end of the lesson all shall be of one heart, and mind, and judgment, and all hear the same testimony. The Lord in His mercy hasten that glorious day!—Dr. Leaks in Rainbow.

"I Expect Great Things Then."

The Lord Jesus has gone to receive a kingdom, and He intends to return. During his absence his people have to work in his vineyard, suffer in his cause, and watch for his appearing. Our work is often difficult, our sufferings severe, and watching so long becomes tedious. But as Jesus has promised to come, He assuredly will; as He has given us his word that He will not tarry, but come as soon as his work before the throne is done, we may depend upon his being here as soon as possible. As He is coming to bring us grace in a degree which we have never enjoyed, and glory such as we have no conception of, his coming should be the object of our hope, desire, and love. The thought of it should give us joy, the anticipation of it should fill us with delight. It did a poor, afflicted, suffering believer of whom I have heard, and who, when asked why he looked forward to the coming of Jesus with so much joy, said, "I expect great things then!"

Beloved, we may not have much now. Our temporal supplies may be scant, and our outward comforts but few. Our sufferings may be great, and our trials painful. Without may be fightings, and within may be fears. But Jesus is coming. Jesus, who is our brother, husband, and friend. He is coming in glory. He is coming to reign. He is coming to render reward to his servants. He is coming to fulfil all his promises, and accomplish the glorious predictions of his holy Word. His coming is the greatest event we can look forward to. It is the blessed hope of his Church. It is the desire of all his saints. Our brightest prospects and sweetest anticipations depend on that. Our groaning world appears to long for it. The sorrowful Church should daily pray for it. And every sigh that escapes from the tried believer's heart, rightly interpreted, cries, "Come, Lord Jesus, come quickly!" Well, cheer up, my poor tried brother and sister, for "He that is to come will come, and will not tarry." He is now engaged for us. His loving heart now beats with tenderest affection towards us. He would have us with him, or He would come and be with us, were it not that his Father's glory and our best interests require it to be otherwise. He said once, and He is of the same mind still, "Father, I will that they also whom thou hast given me be with me where I am, that they may behold my glory, which thou hast given me." This is the very thing we desire, and it is the very thing we shall enjoy; for He will soon come "the second time without sin unto salvation," and "we expect great things then."

What do we expect then? The sufferer expects to be free from disease and pain; for "there shall be no more pain" then. Every Christian will have a healthy body. The nerves, the muscles, the senses, will no more be the seats of disease nor the inlets of pain; but what was sown in corruption, will be raised in incorruption; what was sown in dishonor, will be raised in glory; what was sown in weakness will be raised in power; what was sown a natural body, will be raised a spiritual body. The mourner expects to be freed from the principal cause of his mourning—even sin. He will then be delivered, not only from its guilt, but from its very being; not only from its annoyance, but from its existence. Every Christian expects to see Jesus as He is. To gaze with rapture and delight on his glorified body, tracing the thorn-prints on his brow, and the nail-prints on his hands. The sight of Christ will eclipse the glory of everything visible, and will leave impressions which will never be erased. It will exceed all that ever was seen, conceived, or anticipated. It will fire the soul with unutterable love, and fill it with inexpressible joy. The believer will then receive a glorious crown—"a crown of glory which fadeth not away," "a diadem of beauty," "a crown of life." He will be clothed in white robes, and have the palm of victory put into his hand. He will be introduced to the "city which hath foundations, whose builder and maker is God;" to the kingdom prepared for the saints "from the foundation of the world;" to the "inheritance which is incorruptible and undefiled, and that fadeth not away." He will be elevated above his fears, exalted above his foes, and enjoy absolute certainty for ever. Are not these great things? But these and many more are the great things which the Christian may expect; for "eye hath not seen, nor ear heard, neither have entered into the heart of man the things, which God hath prepared for them that love Him." Well may it be called the "blessed hope." Well may primitive saints be represented as "waiting for the coming of our Lord Jesus Christ." Well may the saint "expect great things then."

My brother, is the coming of Jesus the object of your hope? Are you anxiously and prayerfully looking forward to that glorious event? If so, you will not be so much affected as some are, by the things which perish with the using. You will live above the world. You will cast your cares upon your God. You will look over many little annoyances and troubles. You will rejoice in hope when all around you is cold and dreary. You will not avenge yourself, but leave many things to be adjusted when Jesus comes. You will act as one that "must appear before the judgment-seat of Christ"—as one that must "give an account of himself to God." Expecting great things when Jesus comes, you will not be affected by little things now, but "in your patience you will possess your soul." Expecting great things when Jesus come, you will quietly carry your cross, manfully face your foes, and diligently employ your talents in your Master's service. Expecting great things when Jesus comes, you will aim in all things to "walk worthy of the vocation wherewith you are called, with all lowliness and meekness with long-suffering," lovingly bearing with the imperfections of your brethren, "endeavoring to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Expecting great things from Jesus when He comes, you will be desirous of doing great things for Jesus now He is away, and will be willing to suffer great things for Jesus if he may but be glorified thereby.—J. Smith.

"One Thing Thou Lackest."

The question often arises: What is the difference between a Christian life and that which men call a good or a moral life? Suppose a man "keeps the Ten Commandments;" is temperate, and free from all sins of the body; speaks the truth; pays his debts and wrongs nobody; works industriously at his calling; is faithful and kind in all his family relations, and a good citizen. Is anything more than this required of him?

One passage of the life of Jesus illuminates this whole subject of the relation of morality to religion. The scene is full of vivid and dramatic interest. A young "ruler" (so Luke styles him), a person of wealth and consequence, came in haste to Jesus—came running, says Mark—and kneeled at his feet. There he put his eager question: "Good Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" Jesus answers him first with a counter-question: "Why callest thou me good? There is none good but one, that is God"—words thrown out like a seed for future fruit. Then, without waiting for an answer, he meets his inquiry by presenting the familiar Jewish standard of conduct: "If thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments; Thou shalt do no murder, Thou shalt not commit adultery, Thou shalt not bear false witness, Honor thy father and thy mother." Searching tests, some of these, in the close application to the very thoughts of the heart which Jesus had given to them, and put now to a man whom the temptations of youth and wealth had beset. Nor was this all, for to these Jesus added, as Matthew tells us, the great inclusive command: "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself." Yet the young man met the test fearlessly: "All these things have I kept from my youth up." Doubtless he had not grasped the full meaning, at least of the last requirement; yet his answer was no idle boast, for it is immediately added: "Then Jesus, beholding him, loved him." How much these words reveal! On the one side, a lovable nature, with the sweet attractive bloom of sustained youth and eager longing toward the highest life. On the other side, the swift reading of this young heart, and the outgoing toward it of love in its divinest form, love that rejoiced in the good already there, and yearned to lift that good into something better. A weaker nature than that of Jesus might have melted into words of complacency and reassurance to this right-minded inquirer. But Jesus instead held steadily up before him the idea of a nobler life than his thoughts had yet reached: "One thing thou lackest; go thy way, sell whatsoever thou hast, and give to the poor (and thou shalt have treasure in heaven!)"—the great promise thrown in as if he read in the listener's face his sudden wavering, and sought to win him—"and come, take up the cross, and follow me."

"And he was sad at that saying, and went away grieved; for he had great possessions." Most sorrowful ending to a story so hopefully begun!

What was in its essence the step which the young ruler was not strong enough to take? It was ceasing to live in any sense for himself, and giving his life whole and entire, as Jesus gave his own, to those who needed Him. In the best that he had reached, there was a subtle regard for his own happiness as paramount. Even the question with which he came to Christ, and into which his highest purposes and wishes were gathered, was: "What shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" It was something for himself that he sought even in that. Not such was the motive and inspiration of Jesus. Not to glorify himself here or hereafter, but to seek and to save the lost was his supreme impulse. He summoned this questioner to a life like his own.

That is just the step that divides what is commonly called a moral or a virtuous life from a Christian life. The giving one's self, inwardly and outwardly, goods, body and soul, to help and to save others—this is what makes a man Christ-like. In substance, the same answer that met the young ruler meets every one who asks the way to the highest life. Not that every one is literally to give away in charity all that he possesses, for that would stop in an instant the great industries and enterprises on which the physical welfare of the race depends. But every man is to hold his possessions as not his own, but held in trust for doing good. And, then, there is the higher and harder requirement: "Follow me!" Follow him whose life was one unbroken succession of helpful and tender ministries to others, and most of all to those who had least help except from him. Yes, even "taking up the cross," accepting, if need be, sorrow, shame, and death, in love's work. All genuine love takes sorrow as a part of its portion. Only to sympathize truly is to feel in our hearts the burdens that weigh on other hearts. And as by the cross was wrought the crowning work of Jesus; as by his death his love shone brightest and with supremest power to win and save, so the highest work of men for men can only be done as we go down into the depths of trouble with others and for others, and, as it were, by dying bring them and ourselves to immortal life.

This ardent, all sacrificing disposition, this "enthusiasm of humanity," that gladly loses self in saving others, was what Jesus held up before the man of blameless life, of pure, upright, and even amiable character, as "the one thing needful." And we walk in Christ's footsteps just so far as we answer that call, and give ourselves and all that is ours to the service of love.

Facts About the Bible.

A prisoner condemned to solitary confinement, obtained a copy of the Bible, and by three years' careful study obtained the following facts:

The Bible contains 3,586,489 letters 773,602 words, 31,173 verses, 1,189 chapters, and 66 books.

The word "and" occurs 46,277 times.

The word Lord occurs 1,855 times.

The word Reverend occurs but once, which is the 9th verse of the 111th Psalm.

The 21st verse of the 7th chapter of Ezra contains all the letters in the alphabet except the letter J.

The 19th chapter of 2 Kings and the 37th chapter of Isaiah are alike.

The longest verse is the 9th verse of the 8th chapter of Esther.

The shortest verse is the 35th verse of the 11th chapter of St. John.

There are no words or names of more than six syllables.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND H. V. REED.

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. * * * Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest,"—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Resurrection of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish His Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "Our Rest." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently assist in its circulation if he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would not say it to others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

THE RESTITUTION.

Consolation.

BY ADELAIDE PROCTOR.

What seems so dark to thy dim sight
May be a shadow, even bright,
Making some brightness doubly bright.

The flesh that struck thy tree—no more
To shelter thee—let heaven's blue door
Shine where it never shone before.

The cry wrung from thy spirit's pain
May echo on some far off plain,
To guide a wanderer home again.

Fall, yet rejoice—because no less
The failure that makes thy distress
May teach another full success.

It may be that in some great need,
Thy life's poor fragments are decreed
To help build up a lofty deed.

Thy heart should throb in vain content,
Thus knowing that it was but meant
As choral in one instrument.

That even the discord in thy soul
May make completer music roll
From out the great harmonious whole.

Under the Banner.

MARY ON THE MOUNTAIN.

King Jesus is our Captain,
His banner o'er us love;
And peace on earth the heritage
Of those who faithful prove.

The harvest fields are whitening,
The laborers are few;
"Go work ye in my vineyard,
The Master calls for you."

They are sitting by the wayside—
The blind, the dumb, the lame—
And waiting for the conquerors
Who come at Jesus name.

Arouse then, Christian comrades!
Gird on the armor strong;
With "Holiness" our watchword,
We'll overcome the wrong.

King Jesus is our Captain,
Our shield and sword his word;
And through his grace we conquer,
In the army of the Lord.

Fruit or Timber!

The people of God are often compared to fruit-bearing trees. The olive, the palm, the fig-tree and the vine, are the Spirit's chosen emblems to represent their service and fruitfulness in this world. Sinners and worldlings, on the contrary, are described as like the "green bay tree," "the oaks of Bashan," and other forest trees, which bear no fruit, and are only valuable when dead.

There are men who answer this description; sinners, and worldlings, living selfish lives; grasping their money, hoarding their gold, and clinging as long as possible to all they have or can get; and finally, perhaps, when death cuts them down, making generous wills, to be executed after they are gone. It is true that when one of these old, decayed, worm-eaten oaks goes thundering down, there is considerable lumber, fuel, and kindling-wood for somebody to pick up, but how different from the old apple-tree, around which the children played and danced, of which they thought when the rain beat upon their roof in the night, and to which they hurried in the early morning, sure that the first comers would find choice and precious fruit; and which, for successive generations, fed and blessed and refreshed all who came to seek its bounty; causing gladness by its life, and sorrow by its death.

Christians, see to it that you are fruit-bearing trees; do not put off your usefulness till you are dead. If the Lord sees that your money is invested, your will made, and nothing can be expected from you till you die, He may, as He hears the cry of the poor and needy, commission death to hurry on with his key, and open your coffers, and disperse your treasures, that his children may have help in their extremity. The man who tells the Lord that He cannot have any of his money until he is in the grave, may well expect death to make an early visit at his dwelling.

The farmer knows that his timber-tree is useless while it grows. And if it is not improving, or if it has commenced to decay, or if he is in haste to obtain profit from it, he lays the axe to the root of the tree, and hews it down, and sends it to the market. But the old apple-tree, bent, twisted, bowed, and decaying, and yet bearing fruit from year to year, he guards and watches with the tenderest care. Unsightly as it is, it "bringeth forth fruit in its season;" hence he fences it, props it, prunes it, and digs about it, and tries in every practical way to make it last as long as possible. Which would you choose to produce—fruit to the glory of God, or fuel for the fire? Which would you prefer to be—a fruit-tree, or a timber-tree? No fruit-tree ever grew so stalwart as the cedar, so majestic as the oak, No palm or olive ever flourished like the green bay tree; and so those men who are trees of righteousness which God hath planted, may not vie in pomp and grandeur with men who have their portion in this world, and perish at the end. But if the fruit-tree is more lowly, it is also more useful, and more safe. It feeds and refreshes, it blesses all around. The thunderbolts that shatter the forest kings, pass over the fruit-tree's humbler head. The storms that break the cedars of Lebanon, sweep high above the lowly vine and the precious olive tree, which bow and yield at their approach.

Fruit or timber? Which is it? Which shall it be? Which does the Lord expect of you? Are you withholding all your service till death shall come and compel it? Be careful, lest you invite death before you are ready to meet it. It is better to bear fruit while in life, and so make it for the interest of the Lord and his church that you live as long as possible, to benefit his little ones, and glorify Him in bearing much fruit. It was not a gay votary of fashion, nor a covetous lover of this world, that Peter recalled to life when dead, but it was Dorcas, who "was full of good works and almsdeeds that she did," and around whose lifeless form all the widows stood weeping, and "showing the coats and garments which she made while she was with them." Acts ix. 36–41.

"In this is your Father glorified, that ye bear much fruit." Make haste to do what work you can for Him. Feed the hungry, clothe the naked, instruct the ignorant, sow the good seed of truth, and let your light so shine before men, that they, seeing your good works, may glorify your Father which is in heaven. And remember this solemn word of the Great teacher:—

"A certain man had a fig-tree planted in his vineyard; and he came and sought fruit thereon, and found none. Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none; cut it down, why cumbereth it the ground? And he answering, said unto the Lord, Let it alone this year also, till I shall dig about it, and dung it. And if it bear fruit, well; and if not, then after that thou shalt cut it down." Luke xiii. 7–9.

False Positions of Universalists.

9. God foresew and fore-expressed that Eli and his house should walk before him forever.

1 Sam. ii. 30. "Wherefore the Lord God of Israel saith, I said indeed that thy house, and the house of thy father should walk before me forever; but now the Lord saith, be it far from me; for them that honor me I will honor, and they that despise me shall be highly esteemed." There were no contingencies expressed here, but they must have been implied, or God's foreknowledge was imperfect, and himself changeable.

10 God foresaw and fore-expressed that David and his men should be destroyed at Keilah. 1 Sam. xxiii. 10–13. David asked the Lord, Will Saul come down? Will I and my men be delivered to him? Will Saul destroy Keilah for my sake? To all of which God gave affirmative answers. But David and his men left. Saul did not come down. Therefore, David and his men escaped. Now, God either knew, or he did not, that Saul would come down and destroy David and his men. He foretold that they would; but all this must have been foreseen and foretold conditionally. Therefore, the conditions were a part of God's foreknowledge.

11 God foreknew and foredeclared that Abraham's seed should be afflicted in Egypt four hundred years; and then be brought back to Canaan. Gen. xv. 13. "And he said unto Abraham, know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years." Gen. xv. 16. "But in the fourth generation they shall come hither again." Here are no conditions expressed, but they must have been implied, else God did not know. For, in consequence of their disobedience, he said: "Your carcasses shall fall in the wilderness, and all that were numbered of you, from twenty years old and upward, which have murmured against me. Doubtless ye shall not come into the land, concerning which I swear to make you to dwell therein, save Caleb the son of Jephunneh, and Joshua the son of Nunn." xxx. "Ye shall know MY BREACH OF PROMISE." Here was a promise made that all Israel, over 600,000 men, should come hither again," but, in consequence of their sins, they did not, two only excepted. Now, God either foreknew that they would or would not. His foreknowledge was perfect and not to be frustrated. He declared they should "come hither again." But that foreknowledge was based upon contingencies implied. They could either obey or disobey him. They acted for themselves. God was omnipotent, and all the powers of the universe could not have prevented God from doing what he wished to do. But the people disobeyed. This contingency was foreseen, though not expressed. And hence, because God did not take the people where he promised, he called it "MY BREACH OF PROMISE."

12. When God promises to save or destroy a kingdom or nation it is conditional, expressed or implied.

Jer. xviii. 7–10. "At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up and to pull down and destroy it; if that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I WILL REPENT OF THE EVIL that I thought TO DO UNTO THEM. And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build up and to plant it; if it do evil in my sight, that it obey my voice, THEN I WILL REPENT OF THE GOOD, wherewith I said I would benefit them."

Here is a plainly declared rule upon which God always acts towards nations, whether expressed or implied. His blessings or curses, are not because of his foreknowledge or foreordination, but they are based upon obedience or disobedience. His foreknowledge does not conflict with man's independence. He deals with nations as responsible beings, and not as with machines.

13. Individual salvation or damnation is contingent upon righteousness or unrighteousness. Jer. xxxiii. 13–16. "When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; if he trust in his righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered but for his iniquity that he hath committed he shall surely die for it. Again, when I say to the wicked, Thou shalt surely die; if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right; if the wicked restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, walking in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; HE SHALL SURELY LIVE; he shall not die."

The basis of God's action is placed upon man's ability and willingness to do, or not do, to obey or disobey. God gives the law and demands obedience; and promises salvation upon that; and, if disobedient, pronounces condemnation. This is the universal principle upon which God acts. So there is no absolute fore-ordination to life or death, unconnected with man's obedience or disobedience. Nor does this doctrine conflict with the perfect foreknowledge and sovereignty of God. These are but a tithe of the scriptures upon this point, but these must now suffice. A. MALONE.

Palestine, Ill., 1875.

False Theology in Fiction.

That fictitious literature is one of the principal means of teaching the popular and erroneous theology of the day, cannot be denied:

1. Because it is read more than all other literature.

2. It appeals to the feelings, but seldom to the reason or judgment.

It is there taught the infant, as soon as dead is transformed into an angel, and goes to heaven, instead of the land of the enemy. He that loveth a lie is classed with him that maketh a lie. Rev. xxii. 15. Who are they that love a lie but those that spend their time reading that which they know is not truth.

My attention was drawn to a paragraph in a story containing this reasoning:

"So you were unconscious for more than two hours? Curious now it is to speculate how it would have fared with you had I listened to the fools around us, and given up my efforts to bring back signs of life. Curious to think when and where you would next have awakened; You were dead to all seeming; the soul, that vital essence, had quite departed—whither, I should like to know; and if any where, why not in full consciousness? If, relieved from the trammels of the body, as yours was, it be capable of consciousness, why cannot you, or your soul, give some account of yourself during those two hours? But for me you were actually dead. Had I not re-evoked the beating of your pulse, the next change we should have seen in you, had we stood by long enough, would have been putrefaction. Hence I say to all intents and purposes your soul had fled; and yet, being brought back, it can tell no tale—can tell nothing until reinstated in its mortal home.

Bah! my dear friend, what more proof can you want that this life is the be-all and end-all?"

"I raised my hand in deprecation of these sentiments, and shocked and grieved to hear them from the lips of a man to whom I owed my life, I turned the conversation."

Surely this a good way for those that believe in the conscious state of the dead, to meet such reasoning. Just raise your hands in deprecation, and turn the conversation. You have no better way. But he that believes Christ's words, I am the resurrection and the life; he that believeth on me, though he were dead, yet shall he live, (John xi. 25,) can admit that the dead know not any thing, (Eccl. ix. 5,) and this life the be-all and the end-all, if the dead rise not. For if the dead rise not, then is not Christ raised. Then they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished. 1 Cor. xv. 16, 18. M. V. S.

Our Office and Work.

In Acts xv. 14, we are informed that God at the first did visit the Gentiles to take out of them a people for his name, etc.

1. When is this visiting time? We ask people understand this to be the age in which God in his great goodness, and in his own way, is working among the Gentiles in order that they may form characters for the place they are to fill in time to come. He is doing this by proxy, or making use of men as the humble instrumentalities of doing this great work. Christ said to the apostles, "Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Mark xvi. 15. In Acts xiii. 46, we have Paul saying to the Jews, "Seeing ye put it from you, and judge yourselves unworthy of everlasting life, lo we turn to the Gentiles." In 1 Cor. iv. 7, Paul says, "We have this treasure in earthen vessels," etc. But this great work was not to be confined to the apostles, for in Acts viii. 1–5, we find the church, all except the apostles, scattered from Jerusalem, and, being thus scattered, they went everywhere preaching the word. To preach the word is to preach Christ. To preach Christ, is to preach the gospel that Christ preached. Go into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature, he that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned. Mark xvi. 15, 16. Again, This gospel of the kingdom shall be preached in all the world for a witness unto all nations, and then shall the end come.

So we see what our office and work is. The preaching of the Gospel, in this age to the Gentiles of this age; the object of which is to take from among them a people for his name. This Gospel preaching is not to obtain subjects for the kingdom, but to obtain the ruling element for the kingdom. The redeemed out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation say, "thou hast made us unto our God kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Would it not be best and most for the glory of God, and for the eternal good of men, for us to preach the gospel of this age to the Gentiles of this age? The field is large, and work abundant, and we have none too much time in which to do the work. If in coming ages God shall have a message for us to proclaim, would it not be best for us to wait, and not be premature in the work? Do every work in its time. Let us spend our time and money in doing good to the people of this age. In all kindness I would ask, even if God is to save some, or all, what great good will it do the people of this age to tell the news to them? Shall we be more successful in our work of obtaining a people for God? Suppose we preach the Gospel and say, He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but the that believeth not shall be damned for the age, or a time, and then all of them will and must be saved, will they not conclude that they can stand being damned for a short time? for being damned is not to live for the age, and as time is not counted with the dead, a thousand ages is but a moment. You may tell them they will only be saved in the kingdom as subjects. What of that! How many there are who would give all they have, if they could only live forever in this world as it is. Shall we tell them that though they trample the Son of God under foot, they will and must be saved at last in the kingdom in the new earth.

Brethren let us be careful what we do. If the Gospel of the age to come is not for this age, let us wait till the time and then will be time enough to preach it.

Yours for the kingdom.

Patience.

Be patient toward all men. The cold hammer fashions the hot iron. He who would govern others, must first learn to govern himself. Passion is blind. Cool, deliberate, and at the same time energetic action, makes itself felt in every department of life.

Be patient toward your brethren. Some good men are slow to see into things. The, want to do right, but it takes them a good while to determine what is required of them. Every member of the body of Christ is not an eye. To get out of patience with these dull ones will not help either them or you. Give them time, and they will do their duty. We all have our infirmities. Let us bear with each other.

Be patient toward sinners. Think how long God bore with you. We should bear with wicked men while God bears with them. But if we get out of patience with them, they can have no confidence in our religion. They will say they are as well off as we are, and so they will harden themselves in sin.

To be patient you must have patience. The stream cannot flow if the fountain is dry. The fruit will not grow without the tree. Resolutions alone, against impatience, will not answer. You must pray as well as resolve. Ask God, not merely to help you in your outward conduct, but to give you the inward grace. Unless you get that, you will fail as you have failed before. Be determined on victory in this. Unless you get that, you will fail as you have failed before. Be determined on victory in this respect. No matter how much money a man may make by day, he will never grow rich if he is robbed of all at night. Impatience is the thief that steals your grace, and leaves you weak and faint. Remember that peace, and gentleness, and long-suffering, are as truly fruits of the Spirit as love and joy.—Earnest Christian.

Catacombs of Rome.

PROF. JULES DE LARNAY.

SYMBOLISM CONTINUED.

In the Roman Pantheon, sat upon twelve thrones or altars the gods of Olympus by the Gentiles adored. Over them all spans the stupendous dome, round as the firmament, endless, without beginning, emblem of eternity. Through an aperature four cubits in diameter clouds have poured their rains, sun and moon their floods of light, unresisted, into that temple made by men to deify man. Thus above modern theology, pantheon of dogmas and sects, ever floats one solar doctrine, the apostles' doctrine, which martyrs steadily continued, which they adorned with their lives, which they sealed with their death.

That doctrine which neither flesh nor blood could reveal, nor the gates of hell could overthrow, was kept in mystery sub lege aromi (under the law of secresy.) In the chapel it was whispered from mouth to ear. To each catechuman the elder presented a white stone, usually cut on a finger ring. An alphabetical rebus was on it, and none could solve its meaning except he that received it, and the mysterious name was which means fish; and he that received the stone was declared a son of God. He was anointed in the forehead with the mark X, the initial letter of the Greek word Xristos, and by the Latins was called Christian, and by the Greeks Christophorus, or Christ-bearer; and thus was fulfilled towards him the promise, "And I write upon him my new name, and the name of the city of my God." That X was ever in apostolic times the seal of consecration. It was marked on the unleavened bread of the Holy Supper, also on the cup of blessing, the vial of blood, the arcosolium, the lamp of the sanctuary, even on the vestment of the deaconess, or on that of the humble fossor.

The R of the Greeks added to the X—thus XP or CHR—was called Christ's monogram, and was used for the cemeterials. It is the character of the vision-dream or sign seen by Constantine in heaven, and marked on his helmet and the shields of his soldiers, and the labarum of the Cæsars, by which he defeated the tyrants of Rome. At the entrance of each of the catacombs that name is blazoned, as that of Elohim on the frontispiece of the universe. Ever abiding in Christ, the martyr was able with meekness to answer his interrogators:—

Q. What is your name?
A. I am a Christian.
Q. What is your nation?
A. I am a Christian.
Q. What is your profession?
A. I am a Christian.

On a tomb tone from the Priscillian cemetery we see a child named "Innocentia" resting upon a huge monogram of Christ—the power of God unto salvation.

PER CHRISTUM—By Christ.
CUM CHRISTO—With Christ.
IN CHRISTO—In Christ.

These words offer the summary of the theology of the catacombs. Generations of martyrs agonized for this simple doctrine of the apostles, and they all carried it on the rack, in the den and the amphitheatre; and when passing through the thickening gloom they cried out, "I have kept the faith!" Here is the glory of the martyred church at Rome, ever abiding in Christ.

That monogram or name of Christ which flashes on all sides in the catacombs, the genius loci, expressed a world of meaning to the heart. It is the glorification of that of Jesus, which is only found seven times. The initial X, the Greek letter CH, was known as the cross of Christ, and to the day of Constantine the catacombs knew of no other cross. The Latin cross, that spell of popery, was not there. The martyrs clung to no such cross. They did not bow to any crucifixes. Not on a dead Jesus, but on a risen Christ as the first born from among the dead, they all built their hops of their own resurrection. It made the spirit of the martyrs high and stern. That faith, as a lever, buoyed them up, and made them up, and made them strong. The faith in a hereafter gives a certain firmness of texture to the soul. It places that soul on a high, peaceful summit which is beyond the reach of the earth's fluctuations.

What God Will Say.

Our ears are quick to hear the words of men. We are careful to retain their good opinion, and sensitive to their reproofs. Often our outward lives are shaped by regard for what men will say. Their scoff drives us from duty, their reproach covers our faces with shame. But alas, how rarely do we ask what will God think, or what will God say, of the course we take, or of the works we do. And yet his opinion is all we need to care for. If he approves who can condemn? If he condemns what matter who approves?

Grace does not run in the blood, but corruption does.

The Sting of Life.

"The sting of death is sin," said Paul; and Christendom assents to the statement.

And the sting of life is sin. It is that which has blighted and blasted fallen humanity, it is that which blights and blasts men now. It is sin that darkens life with untold gloom, and makes the sun of joy go down at noon. It is sin that dims the eye, furrows the brow, bends the form, breaks the heart! It is sin that makes strong men weak, and brave men cowardly, and which drives men from the hights of joy and honor to hide beneath a refuge of lies. It is sin that blights youth, blasts manhood, and disgraces gray hairs. It is sin that hurls down the strongest and noblest, to be a hissing and a byword, the song of drunkards and the scoff of fools. Deep in the human heart is buried the fatal sting. More fearful than exposure, than shame, than punishment, is the clanking of the unseen chain, the secret consciousness of a soul estranged from God, possessed by evil, haunted by dark and guilty recollections, and feeling,—under it may be a fair and smiling outside,—its own weakness, emptiness, hollowness, and bitterness, which no human hand can help or heal.

The sting of life is sin, and that sting is fatal. The end of those things is death. Sin when it is finished bringeth forth death. The wages of sin is death. Sin is the sting of death because it has been the sting of life. It drapes the future with darkness because it has clothed the present with gloom. The poison strikes deeper and deeper the further it goes. Here it ruins reputation, health, vigor, enjoyment, intellect, and every moral excellence,—there it shall destroy both soul and body with an everlasting destruction.

Friend, the terrible mistake of your life-time, the sting of your existence is sin. And do you still covet, and desire, and enjoy it? Are you not satisfied with what you have tasted of the wormwood and gall? Have you not felt sin's sting long enough? Are you not weary of the hidden burden, the inward conflict, the secret fetter, the deadly sting? Are you not ready to part with sin,—to sacrifice its pleasures if you may thus escape its pains? Are you not ready to be helped by Him who is the only healer of the sting of sin—whose blood is the only antidote for its baneful power?

Thoughts for Skeptics.

If the Bible is not a good rule of life, why not provide us with a better one? We have "Thou shalt love thy neighbor as thyself;" and "All things whatsoever ye desire that men should do to you, do ye even so to them," in the Bible. Now if you have anything better produce it, or else stop finding fault with the Bible.

The idea that nothing is to be taken on trust, is a favorite one with many; and is as absurd as other infidel arguments. Infidels talk of the Bible, but how much have they read of it? They talk of the Koran, the Shasters, and a lot of other heathenish trash, which they could not read a page of to save their lives. They argue about astronomy, when they do not know enough to calculate an eclipse of the moon; they disprove the Bible by geology, of which they know nothing except what some one of a dozen wrangling geologists has told them; they say the New Testament was compiled by the council of Nice, when all history shows that that council never had anything whatever to do with the matter; they quote learnedly from authors which they never saw, and could not read if they should see them; and then they pretend that they cannot be humbugged by pious cant, and that they receive nothing without due investigation.

By this rule they would not ride in a steamboat till they could build an engine; would not believe the time shown by a watch, until they knew how to make one; would not call a doctor to a croupy child till they had explored the whole domain of medicine with its "ologies" and "pathies;" would not send a telegram till they understood telegraphy; would not do anything till they knew everything.

On a thousand occasions in common life we are forced to consult those who are honest, truthful, and experienced in matters with which we are unacquainted. We do not surrender our judgment to them, but our judgment tells us that their opinion and their experience is worth our careful consideration. In nine-tenths of the affairs of life, we depend for guidance, at the first, upon those who are better informed than ourselves. To do otherwise would be accounted folly in business;—why is it less foolish in matters of religion? Surely prejudice is a poor guide; and a candid weighing of the facts in common life would silence many of the arguments of which infidelity boasts.

—God never promises to do more than he is able to perform, as men often do.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.
All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the resurrection of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents, whose letters are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the tracking of any writer is not exposed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of rejecting those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Common Sense in Religion.

To know why one church succeeds where another fails, or why one minister becomes popular where another more scholarly and more pains-taking, draws about him only a thinly-scattered audience of those who, by long habit, have become welded to the very timbers of the church, is a question perhaps as old and as difficult of solution as the problem, "Why in the world that man married that woman."

And yet it seems to us that many of the difficulties of the question are removed, or at least are illuminated, by simply throwing upon it the light of that clear, practical common sense which we do not hesitate to apply toward other matters, and which nothing but a paganistic superstition compels us to withhold when contemplating religious problems and perplexities.

There are men and women who would consider it rank sacrilege to suggest that there was any other cause than a purely spiritual one for the lack of success which attends some ministers through life, or the dull, indifferent audiences which one is sure to find in certain churches. And yet a whining disagreeable delivery may be the cause of the former, while in the latter not all the charms of oratory could remove the inevitable results of an ill-ventilated building, even though that building be a church edifice, duly and appropriately dedicated to the use of man's higher spiritual nature, without any reference whatever to the strong, dominant claim of his animal being.

When a young minister has passed through the seven regularly indoctrinated years of study; when he has left the college walls which have, for the most part, done their best through all these years to lift him away from sympathy with his fellow man; when he has been pronounced a good thinker and a fine scholar by those who ought to know; when, moreover, his life is blameless and irreproachable, it is not a little surprising to see such bright and promising lights go down one after another, often within a single year of the time when hope beat high and the future beckoned, while pointing to the Master's vineyard.

On the other hand, when a church is built beautiful and capacious, with a minister possessing all desirable and essential qualities, and a congregation devoted and attached, it is sometimes a marvel to behold how soon the church becomes feeble, how the members, one after the other, drop away and no new ones are raised up to take their places, and the society stands for months and years on the brink of disintegration. That circumstances like these are again and again repeated, no one will pretend to deny; while that there is in most cases a cause capable of remedy we do firmly believe.

It is folly to suppose that a ship which has sprung a leak if launched on the river Jordan will not sink because set afloat on that sacred stream. She will most assuredly obey the laws of gravitation, whether upon the waters of the Jordan or the Mississippi. It is our place rather to go below and stop the leak, than to ascend the mast and pray. In all the teachings of the Bible we are taught to use the means to an end; simple, natural, and, if you please, common sense means. Nowhere are we taught to ignore or disdain the rules by which mankind is governed. And in nothing do we make a greater mistake than in supposing that the methods which were employed eighteen hundred years ago will be equally effective now; we are to make use of the principles the same, but the conditions are certainly widely different.

Many a minister would increase his usefulness more, and do God greater service, by studying elocution six months than by cramming still further in ecclesiastical history, or even theology, during the same length of time. A personal, disagreeable habit is often as great an obstacle toward usefulness as the need of a right spirit. A man has a dull, indifferent manner; he never warms up with his theme, never shows himself at all anxious that the words which he speaks should take any effect; never follows them up in any way by personal conversation, or the least appearance of solicitude for his flock; and yet he wonders that sermons which he has so laboriously prepared should produce little, if any, result.

Then, again he has no true-hearted sympathy with the members of his spiritual household; he delivers himself in conversation with them of various inquiries and platitudes, very much as a school-boy would recite a disagreeable lesson, and, having gotten through with it, throws himself back with a sigh of relief. The people very soon come to understand that there is no real interest in either question or answer; and when the same interrogation as to "your wife's health" is put half a dozen times, as we have often heard it, during a single call by the dutiful pastor, why, there is prima facie evidence that it means business—"simply that, and nothing more."

If a man has no real love for his fellowmen; if he does not care for their welfare, both temporal and spiritual; if he considers it beneath him to interest himself in little children; and to bestow some attention upon the difficulties which beset the most ordinary common-place life, he has wholly mistaken his vocation in assuming the clerical robes; he need not wonder that his entire ministry is a failure, even though his discourses are as finished as the orations of Demosthenes.

A minister should study as carefully as a journalist studies the signs of the times, and while he clasps the Bible with one hand, the other should be upon the public pulse. Not, however, as a journalist too often does, to bring himself down to its condition, and cater to the demand of the hour, however sickly and morbid; but that, acquainting himself with its fluctuations and its necessities, he may wisely administer the needed remedy for its infirmities.

It is not a little amusing in times of great national excitement and even peril, to hear, our regularly-grooved minister go on placidly delivering a sermon to which no one pretends to listen, upon a theme as widely remote as possible from men's present needs and distresses, as if the restless, passionate, hungering throng before him were but so many rag babies. The crowd had come together hoping for crumbs of comfort, and they have had given them instead the husks of some old scholastic dogma.

The cry of pain is hushed when the minister enters the sick-room; the game of chance is hidden away as he approaches; the sharp bargain is put aside that his health may be inquired after, and so it very often happens that no one knows less of human nature than he who ought to know most, who ought to have laid aside his profession and mingled as a man among men, that he might appeal to their hearts, and not to an audience whom he presumptively considers exact counterparts of himself.

The successful preacher understands humanity, its needs, its desires, its joys, and its sorrows; for without this, though his soul may be aglow with divine inspiration, it will only touch those hearts which are already enkindled by the same holy flame. Decades, and even centuries, have gone by since we were told that "the children of this world are wiser in their generation than the children of light;" and still, with this gentle admonition constantly before us, the same truth holds good to day as eighteen hundred years ago, when it was first spoken.

Why do we leave our churches cold, gloomy, unattractive, while places of worldly amusement are always warm, light, inviting? Why do we stumble along in the dark, forbidding passage which leads to the room set apart for the prayer-meetings while the entrance to the theater is open, bright, and attractive?

Is there anything wrong in the use of light, that in the city we confine ourselves to a burner or two for an evening meeting, while in the country a single kerosene lamp is all that is deemed requisite? It is only the very good and conscientious who will leave their homes filled with light, warmth, music, cheer, for the dull, damp, depressing atmosphere of the church lecture-room. And yet the older members wonder why the young people do not "come out to meeting;" they wonder why brothers A and B, always so ready to spend a pleasant, social evening, stay persistently away from the prayer-meeting.

In all other matters we understand these points, we learn quickly why people do not patronize us in mercantile pursuits. In this thing alone we lay aside all common-sense views, and attribute every deficiency to some spiritual cause. In a church edifice recently erected in Brooklyn, we were delighted to notice as first and foremost among its many attractions the one of light. Not alone in the interior, but upon the exterior the bright and beautiful illumination seems to say, "Come! there is joy and comfort and peace within; here is thy spiritual home—welcome to all!" How often have we seemed to hear a voice as we have passed the cold, dim, cloistered exclusion of many another church, saying, "Only the good are welcome here; they will come any way; they do not need light nor heat."

Again, in reference to that church of which I have already spoken, and which, apparently, possesses every essential requisite, the congregation is dropping away one by one because the society is so heavily encumbered with debt. Two sermons out of every three are sure to be begging ones, and the people know it. They might put their hands into the depths of their pockets and give—but they have already done this to the extent of their ability; the difficulty does not lie with them now, nor with the pastor, but with the simple fact that, being a small and feeble church, with a generous-hearted but still impecunious membership, they ventured to build an extravagant and showy edifice without counting the cost, believing that, as the building was devoted to spiritual uses, they had a right to be as improvident as they pleased, and that God would in some way shower down manna in the shape of greenbacks to supply their daily need.

We can not afford to remove the accessories of our spiritual life away from the regions of common sense. However much we should like to divest ourselves of all responsibility in these matters by throwing them upon a higher power, it is nevertheless our own; and we are to use that same sagacity and wisdom in affairs which pertain to the spiritual realm that we employ toward our worldly concerns. No one, surely, will understand us to mean that this alone will insure success; but without this, we are as the blind man, our eyes anointed with clay, refusing to wash in the Pool of Siloam; that we may see clearly.—J. A. Willis.

Smooth Words.

The men who said, "Prophesy unto us smooth things," have many imitators and successors, but the "voice crying in the wilderness" is not wholly silent; and it is an earnest call that prepares "the way of the Lord." Sentimental opinions, diluted interpretations of the holy Scripture, indifference to the primal principles of religion without regard to the analogy of faith and the history of doctrine, never yet made any positive mark in the church of God. Churches thus formed do not grow. Negative preaching does not feed the soul. Humanitarian Christianity exalts man, but lowers the scriptural ideas of God and of redemption. It boasts of its widening horizon, but its vision is earth-bound. It has no evangelizing spirit or strength. It only leaves the pagan in his blindness. The nations of earth would never have had their Bible in their own tongues, had its translation been left to the "blind guides" who ignore the great commission as persistently as they oppose the entire system of faith. We greatly mistake the tendency of human nature if those who are clamoring against theology do not rapidly drift into the same channel of inefficient religionism with those who, though they may have a name to live, are as useless and inefficient as the dead.

—Necessary censures should be managed without noise.

"Is It True?"

For this purpose the Son of God was manifested, that He might destroy the works of the devil. According to what the New Testament seems to imply, there are several stages in this manifestation, all turning upon the great fact of the incarnation: the birth of Jesus Christ was one step; the baptism another step; the resurrection was another step; the ascension was a fourth; and there is yet, if I err not, a still further manifestation—when he will be manifested in glory as the first-born among many brethren. Each one of these manifestations is a stage representing a further, and a still further development of the great scheme of LOVE.

As God works by successive stages in all operations of His power, so in the destruction of Satan's works we must expect to see the final result only reached after many successive victories. Viewing Christ's union with man as a necessary step to this final issue,—without which, indeed, it could not be attained—we should expect to find the victories gained to be first seen in the case of man.

We set out with the incarnation as the starting-point in the scheme—and, What has it done for man? Manifestly, it is to him the gift of life—life, divine and immortal. Controversies have been raised as to the question of how a sinner passes from sin into grace. Is it by a change of the old nature, whereby the old man, to take up the Scriptural phrase, becomes not dead, but entirely different to what it was? or, is it by the insertion of a nature entirely new? Is it, in a word, by conversion? or, is it by regeneration? It seems to me that Scripture with one voice says, by REGENERATION.

To obtain the exact limits of an old and new nature, while yet man continues in an imperfect state, is as impossible, I fully believe, as to mark the exact limits between the divine and the human, in Christ's own person. And to deny regeneration because we cannot define those limits, seems as rational as to deny either the humanity or divinity of our Lord, because we cannot define their limits. In both instances, I believe the task is beyond our present powers: and to follow a series of reasoning in any one direction, after a human fashion, is almost certain to lead to error.

We may well afford to hold tenaciously the doctrine of regeneration, without caring to inquire too closely, either how the new nature is given; or how, in the imperfect child of God, its development and growth proceed.

By the incarnation of Christ; by his plain and express words; by the teaching of the Apostles: by the illustrations used: we are taught as I believe, with one voice, that is by the new birth alone that we can enter into the kingdom of heaven.

The new birth,—the information of Christ within the believer,—this is it which gives to him a new nature; even the nature of God, and makes him a sharer in life eternal. I am the LIFE, is Christ's own word—repeated more than once. St. Paul's account of the matter is, "The gift of God is eternal life, through Jesus Christ our Lord."

It has been a wonder to me in the face of such statements, and in the face of such a word as that of Christ to his disciples, "Because I live, ye shall live also," how any believer could imagine that the question of his own eternity of glory, could be involved (of necessity) in the question of the non-eternity of punishment.

If any examine me in this matter, I say, Christ is my life; I live now because I abide in Him, and He in me: destroy His life, and you will destroy mine. But, if He cannot be reached by death; then, neither can I. "Thanks be to God, which giveth me the victory, through our Lord Jesus Christ!"

Now is the time during which God is gathering together an elect body—which, unless I err, is the Church—which, according to the language of of the New Testament is now being builded.

The stages through which Christ as a Son passed, His Church and people also pass, and will continue to pass, until the last stage referred to is reached; and they are manifested as the sons of God with Him in His glory. Now it is obvious that when the Church of God is perfected, and manifested in glory with Him, the destruction of Satan's works will have been effected as regards it; but it seemeth if this were but the beginning of such destruction.

There are not wanting passages which imply that when that consummation is reached, the mystery of God will be accomplished; and if that mystery be not directly the great mystery of the union between Christ and His Church, it must be at least closely connected with it. And then will be seen and manifested the great purposes for which God, through ages past, has been working secretly after the purpose of His own will.

St. Paul teaches us that the earnest expectation of the creature is waiting for the manifestation of the sons of God: and that, when that manifestation comes, the creature will be delivered from the bondage of corruption.

Here is a clear connection between the direct fruits of Christ's incarnation, and the release of a portion of creation from the bondage of corruption. And, looking on still further, it seems as if, when Christ and His Church have entered upon their glory (and not until then) will, what is called, the conversion of the world take place: and thus, again, we see how the work of destruction of the schemes of Satan, who now holds the world in bondage, goes on further. And, looking still beyond, we have brought before us a time when the earth and heavens, being yet further renewed by fire, will be wholly set free from the curse—from sorrow—from sin—from death.

And thus, in a widening and ever-widening circle, we see the light and glory of God spreading, and putting out the darkness of Satan's works.

And who shall say where the widening circle shall stop? I cannot in thought conceive it stopping short of the range of Omnipresence itself.—God must ALL in ALL. Can we forbear exclaiming—O glorious prospect! A universe without sin! without evil! without death!—from end to end of which shall never be heard through eternity one cry of pain, or seen one tear of sorrow! and to bring this to pass, is a plan worthy of infinite LOVE and almighty POWER.

It seems as though God had been, and is now, working on secretly to the accomplishment of that great mystery of godliness, God manifest in the flesh; and that onwards, from the accomplishment of that mystery, He will show by successive developments of His glorious victory over evil, thus accomplished, the purposes of His wondrous Love and Wisdom.

I cannot but feel that to take this view of man's position in God's great scheme, would give to him the two great lessons which he needs so much: the sense of His own nothingness, and yet of the greatness of his Savior's and his Father's love towards him. We cannot speak too strongly, either of man's own littleness in himself, or of the wonderful love of God's purposes to him.

How common are the views, and how popular, which represent man as the centre of Christ's doings; and that God the FATHER is induced to forgive him, and love him for the sake of Christ! How different is this from the grand scheme which God has shown; whereby he sends his Son to be united with man, that, through that union, He may reconcile to Himself His creation. Would not such a view put us, so to speak, more in harmony, and in sympathy, with the earth and its creatures; making us to understand that our dominion is for salvation, and not for destruction—even as is the dominion of God over us?

I have not dwelt on the way in which it may please God to extend the blessings of redemption. It is beside the question now: but, perhaps it may be allowed to me to remark that, there appears to be a danger in our seeking too hastily to reconcile apparently contradictory appearances in God's working, instead of being willing to hold fast certain great truths, and wait in patience, until we shall be able to know even as we are known. It may well be that there are plans and ways in the course of God's scheme, which it has not pleased Him yet to reveal, and which we could not perhaps understand, if they had been revealed. We are not at the end of revelation yet. I know only that as Christ is the Beginning, so he is also the End. But, who knows yet that end—the end of His power—the end of His wisdom—the end of His love? Surely, then, Christ is not for man; but man for Christ. Christ was not prepared for the body; but, the body for Christ. And, glancing onward to eternity, may we not suppose it possible that God, by the wondrous plan of redeeming love, shall have so purified matter from all evil, as to make it possible that future creations, without limit, may proceed—without any need for evil again to be developed? And the redeemed, who are in His presence, may see worlds without end formed, teeming with perfect life of every species, and ruled over by reasoning creatures, fitted, without learning the painful lessons which we have learned, for intimacy with God, and never-ending blessedness.—The Rainbow.

Christian Manhood.

One grand condition of ministerial success, is the incarnation of religion in personal character. The minister of the Gospel must embody the truth and the power of the Gospel in himself. He must inspire, win, hold, and sway men by his own manhood. Humanly speaking, sweet, sturdy, strong limbed, warm-hearted, full-orbed manhood, is an indispensible qualification for a Gospel minister. Churches do not want babies, or dandies, or ladies' men, or gentlemen of leisure, or hobby-riders, self-constituted reformers, or social dead-heads and figure-heads. They want men: good-natured, earnest men, that have common sense, that work, and wear, and win by sterling qualities. "Let no man despise thee," said St. Paul to the young minister Titus. "Be thou strong, and show thyself a man," was the dying charge of David to the young King Solomon.

We cannot preach men much beyond ourselves; but men cannot resist the dynamics of a pure, grand, glowing manhood. It is the next thing to God in moving, transforming energy. If a man preaches love, faith, prayer, liberality, holiness, he must be able to challenge the criticism of the world to himself, as the living personal mirror of those graces. If he cannot do that, he had better get down from the pulpit. He has no business there. A Christian must be above the average of common manhood. The world expects this, and has a right to expect it from him. He must be a model man, without seeming to feel or know it either. If he is only half, or quarter, or a ninth part of a man, he is not fit to be a minister. It is these bits of men, these vulgar-fractions of manhood, that make mischief with divine things. It is the privilege and duty of each minister to stand in the completeness of his own manhood in Christ Jesus; and until he does this, his preaching will be partial and unconvincing. He is a leader of men; he must be a ruler of men also. A ruler, not by authority of books of discipline, and episcopal appointment simply, but by the authority which God directly incarnates in the manhood of those who are born and consecrated for the work of preaching the Gospel.—J. G. Bidwell in Christian.

Easter.

By one of those anomalies of language which defy both our literary tastes and our religious sentiments, the name of the old Saxon goddess, Estera, or Eostor has been attached to the great memorial day of the resurrection of our Lord Jesus Christ.

The Jewish Passover and the resurrection of our Redeemer, took place in April at the very time of the festival of Esters, who was "the Venus of the North."

The word passover, in the Anglo-Saxon service books, is often rendered "Easter." The use of the term in the English Bible was undoubtedly one of the few unfortunate inconsistencies of the translators, who thus proved their attachment to the traditional name, and to the usages of the ecclesiastical body to which they belong. Biblical scholars will correct the error for themselves, and ordinary readers should know the history of this singular transfer of this name to the resurrection day.

In Acts xii. 4, the word appears in the versions of Tyndale, Coverdale, Cranmer, and Geneva. Wickliffe and the Rhenish New Testament transfer the Greek form, paske or pasche, bodily into the English text. The authorized version, following that of Tyndale and the earlier translations, retains the incorrect name. Yet Christianity has effectually excluded from it the association of its heathen origin. She has even sanctified it, and carried it away captive among the many spoils of her great victories. —Christian Intelligencer.

A Boiling Lake.

A boiling lake has lately been discovered in the Island of Dominica, or Dominique, one of the lesser Antilles. The lake is situated in the forest-covered mountain back of the town of Roseau. It is 2,500 feet above the sea, and is said to be two miles in circumference. The margin of the lake consists of beds of sulphur, and its overflow finds exit in a waterfall of great height.

The Gates of the City.

"Strait is the gate and narrow is the way which leadeth unto life."

This gate is on the boundary line between the wilderness of sin and the narrow path of safety. We must turn our faces away from the temptations so thickly strewn along the broad road, and make a decided start for the city before we can pass even the gateway that leads to eternal life. There is only one way from earth's sorrows to the portals of rest—only one way from sin and death to life and glory, and that is through the blood of Him who hath said: "I am the way, the truth, and the life." His way was through a life of suffering and trial, it was wet with the tears of Gethsemane, shadowed by Calvary, and darkened with the cross. He found therein a purple robe, a thorny crown, and cruel grave—still He is the "living way," He broke the seal of death and took his royal keys. The path of trial is softened by his footprints, the bed of suffering is hallowed by his touch and the grave has been illumined by his presence. Then "open to me the gates of righteousness, I will go into them, and I will praise the Lord." "This gate of the Lord into which the righteous shall enter" is neither beautiful nor tempting. It has no lofty portals nor spacious arches. The pathway beyond is strewn with thorns and set with crosses, but it leads through the green pastures of peace and brings us at last to the banks of the beautiful river. Faith upholds the weary pilgrim—hope cheers his heart and God's blessing crowns him with love and peace.

The broad road with its delusive brightness is filled with disappointments and heart aches as well. It runs through the dominions of death, and sorrow trails her garments along its way; but there is found here no balm for the aching heart—no trust that can relieve anxiety—no hope that can illumine even the grave with its brightness. Suffering is found therein without remedy—loss without recompense, and death without the promise of eternal life.

There are crosses along the narrow path of life but they are the symbols of coming crowns—there are thorns for our weary feet but they speak of the roses of immortality—there are bitter cups to be drained but they are prophecies of the wine of life that we shall taste in the kingdom of God—there is suffering but we are chastened as sons—there are trials but we are tested as gold that shall yet gleam in the living temple. "O thou afflicted, tossed with tempest and not comforted, behold I will lay thy stones with fair colors and lay thy foundations with sapphires, and I will make thy windows of agates and thy gates of carbuncles and all thy borders of pleasant stones."

Let us then "enter into his gates with thanksgiving and into his courts with praise," for it is the narrow way that leadeth from toil to rest, from suffering to peace, from death to life and from the gate of destruction to the gates of the city. The city shall be illumined with the glory of God and the Lamb, and the river of life shall flash in brightness through its midst, having its fountain head at the foot of the throne. It shall have a wall both great and high with twelve gates and names written thereon which are the names of the twelve tribes of the children of Israel. And the building of the wall shall be of jasper and the city of pure gold. The foundations of the wall shall be garnished with precious stones, and the twelve gates are twelve pearls. God's angels shall stand by the beautiful gates and welcome through their portals the multitudes that shall walk in white raiment, with crowns of everlasting joy upon their heads. "And the gates of it shall not be shut at all by day for there shall be no night there."

The Generations and Prophetical Periods.

The power that fills out the prophetical picture of Dan. viii. 9–25; xi. 40–45, and Rev. ix. 1–21, with xvi. 12–18, is the Mohammedan power. At the conclusion of the 490 years, arms stand on the part of Rome, and by this power the sanctuary of strength is polluted, the daily sacrifice taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up. The Roman power was supreme in Palestine, with scarcely a limited exception, till the little horn power arose in place of the four horns of the goat, and rapidly overspread the countries that Macedonia had subdued. If Rome was first in the desecration of the sanctuary, by taking away the daily sacrifice, placing its abominations where Jehovah's worship was celebrated, and scattering the Jews, by causing them to be led captive into all nations, the Mohammedan power, that superseded the Roman government in Palestine in the seventh century, was the predicted king, destined to perpetuate the desolations and desecrations of the fourth empire, by keeping the sanctuary and host trodden under foot, the daily sacrifice from being offered, and the holy people scattered till the last end of the indignation should be consummated. The particular object of these prophecies was to make Daniel understand what should befall his people in the latter days. These prophecies do not apply to the Christian church, or their persecutions by the Roman government in any of its forms, Pagan, or Papal; but to the Jewish nation in all its sufferings, as commenced by Rome, and completed by the Moslem power. In a former communication, we endeavored to show the part Rome performed, in the work of destroying Jerusalem, taking away the daily sacrifice, scattering the Jewish people, and placing the abomination of desolation in the holy place, and how it persisted in all these destructive measures so long as its power continued in the east, and we now sketch an outline of the part enacted by the dominion of the false prophet against Immanuel's land, his sanctuary, worship, and people since the power of Rome was displaced in Palestine. In the year 569, four years after the death of Justinian, a son was born to Abdallah and Amina, an Arabian pair, and by them named Mohammed, from whom originated a religion that became the established form of worship, not only throughout the eastern empire, but became also the adopted religion of extensive countries both in Asia and Africa. The fundamental article of the faith of Islam is comprehended in the brief sentence: "THERE IS ONLY ONE GOD, AND MOHAMMED IS THE APOSTLE OF GOD." His first disciples were only four,—his wife Cadijah, his servant Zeid, his pupil Ali, and his friend Abubekir. Three years were employed in raising the number of proselytes to fourteen, and in the fourth year he made a banquet and assumed the prophetic office. The people of Mecca, however, were so grounded in their attachment to their old forms of superstition, and so hardened in their unbelief, that at the end of the seventh year of his mission, his converts were comparatively few. The inflexible and fierce Omar was, however, one of them; and, like some other names that have figured in history, he became to the cause of the Prophet, subsequently, a host in himself. This feeling of opposition, on the part of his countrymen, finally became so violent that the Prophet was compelled to flee to Medina, where he arrived safely, after some narrow escapes, in the year 622. At this eventful crisis, says the historian, "the lance of an Arab might have changed the history of the world;" and furthermore, that "the religion of the Koran might have perished in its cradle, had not Medina embraced with faith and reverence the holy outcasts of Mecca." Mohammed soon became established in the exercise of the regal and sacredotal offices at Medina. After a reign of six years, fifteen hundred Moslems signified their devotion to him, as warriors, by repeating their oath of allegiance under arms, and in the marshalled field. Mohammed, in turn gave assurance of protection till the death of the last member, or the final dissolution of the party. Setting out in his conquests, he proffered the terms of either friendship, submission, or battle to his enemies. His armies were finally swelled from all sides, by hordes of roving Arabs, who were allured to his standard by the hope of plunder in this world, and the promise of the enjoyment of Paradise in the world to come, to an invincible host. No sooner was his power over his own countrymen well established, than he commenced his predestined work against the Jewish people. Certain subdivisions of the Jews, termed tribes for convenience, were dwelling in Arabia. One of these tribes, termed the Kainoka, he summoned to embrace his religion, or risk the issues of battle. Their refusal to desert the religion of their fathers resulted in a conflict, in which the Jews were overcome, and their lives only spared, with extreme reluctance, by Mohammed contrary to the importunities of his allies. After confiscating their wealth, and placing their weapons in the hands of Musulmen, the wretched colony was exiled with wives and children, to seek a refuge within the confines of Syria. Another portion of the nation had joined the Koreish Arabs in a war against Mohammed, and he resolved to exterminate the hostile clan. In the conflict the Jews were overcome, and seven hundred were dragged in chains to the market place, and compelled to descend alive into the grave prepared both for their execution and burial, where the apostle beheld, with pitiless eye, the slaughter of his enemies. Their wealth and weapons were appropriated by the bloody conquerors, to aid in the further extirpation of the hated race. An ancient and wealthy town, named Chaibar, was really the seat of Jewish power in Arabia. The surrounding territory was fertile, and productive plantations and numerous herds of cattle, protected by castles of seemingly impregnable strength, were the demonstrations of Jewish thrift and wealth. After the most obstinate resistance, the castles were reduced, and Chaibar was compelled to yield to the conquerors. The chief was tortured to extort the confession of his hidden treasures; the husbandmen and shepherds were permitted to pursue their avocations, on condition of sharing equally with their conqueror all the proceeds of their labor. A few years after, the Jews of Charbar were transported to Syria by Omar, to carry out the injunction of his dying master, to permit the profession of none but the one true religion in his native land of Arabia. Thus in his own land did the prophet, as the little horn of the goat, scatter the power of the Jewish people; but this was only a part of the work assigned to the "desolator." He must not only cast down some of the host and stars to the ground, and stamp upon them, but he must also magnify himself to the prince of the host by casting down the place of his sanctuary, and, consequently, complete the profanations commenced by the Roman desolator in keeping the holy places trodden down and the daily sacrifice from ever being offered till the consummation itself.

After a series of splendid conquests the Saracens, in the year 632, for the first time invaded Syria. Victory attended the invading armies; Damascus passed under the yoke of the Moslem, and in 637 Abu Obediah addressed the following summons to the commanders and people of Aelia, the name under which Jerusalem was known to the Arabs: "Health and happiness to every one that follows the right way! We require of you to testify that there is but one God, and that Mohammed is his apostle. If you refuse this, consent to pay tribute, and be under us forthwith. Otherwise I shall bring men against you who love death better than you do the drinking of wine or eating hog's flesh. Nor will I ever stir from you, if it please God, till I have destroyed those that fight for you, and made slaves of your children." After an obstinate defence of four months, against the impetuous attacks of the Arabs, the patriarch Sophronius surrendered the city to Omar in person, who was sent for to ratify the articles of capitulation. This event transpired in 637. The Khalif, after ratifying the terms of capitulation, which secured to the Christians liberty of worship in the churches which they then had, but prohibited the building of any others, entered the city, and was met at the gates by the patriarch. Omar courteously discoursed with the patriarch concerning the religious antiquities of the place. Sophronius bowed before his new sovereign and secretly muttered: "Verily this is the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet standing in the holy place!" By the command of Omar, the ground of the temple of Solomon was prepared for the foundation of a mosque. Thus one abomination displaced another. God's Holy Sanctuary has been the site of abominations till the present time. The day for a change is near. May we discern the signs of the times.

Will Christ Ever Abdicate His Throne?

Some, to get rid of what they call the fair chance theory, take the position that Christ's reign will terminate with the thousand years; and therefore there can be no probation beyond. Others claim that all have had a fair chance. Those who oppose our views differ among themselves in reference to the resurrection. Some claim that none except the righteous dead will ever be raised, and thus consign all who have died in infancy, and all the honest heathen, to everlasting destruction, because their great progenitor sinned hundreds and thousands of years before they were born. Those differing so widely upon questions of such vital importance ought to manifest mutual forbearance toward one another. Neither dogmatism nor appeals to prejudice will satisfy honest inquirers after truth. We hope never to see repeated the bitter, intolerant spirit of the Christadelphians. The Adventists are just as sensitive in reference to the doctrine of probation during the age to come, as some of our brethren with reference to probation during ages to come. With modesty would we affirm our belief that the latter have succeeded no better than the former in their efforts to figure away the same class of texts. Brethren should be willing to concede to others the same intelligence, honesty and rights which they claim for themselves. It is too late in the day for one party to assume that they have the truth, and therefore all who differ from them must be in error. Let the readers of the RESTITUTION be the jury who shall decide this question. We are not in favor of riding hobbies. We remained silent on this subject for three years. During that period those who oppose the fair chance theory were all the time pitching in. If they deprecate this investigation, let them set the example, if they possibly can, of abstinence for a time, and not ask others to keep silent while they are pitching in all the time. I very seldom preach on these peculiar views, and yet, some who differ from us, are too sectarian to invite us to visit or preach for them. And others are going so far as to write out a creed, as a kind of iron bedstead to bind the faith of others. Sectarian intolerance has ever been the bane of all reformations.

To resume the subject as expressed in our caption. Will Christ ever abdicate his throne? God authorized Nathan to make a covenant with David concerning the perpetuity of his throne and kingdom. He said to David, "And when thy days be expired, and thou shalt sleep with thy fathers, I will set up thy seed after thee, which shall proceed out of thy bowels, and I will establish his kingdom. He shall build an house for my name, and I will establish the throne of his kingdom forever. But my mercy shall not depart away from him, as I took from Saul whom I put away. And thine house and thy kingdom shall be established forever before thee; thy throne shall be established forever." 2 Sam. vii. 12, 13. 15, 16.

It is affirmed that Christ's throne and kingdom shall be established for ever, in contrast with Saul's throne and kingdom which were taken away from him. Thus teaching that just as certainly as Saul's kingdom was taken from him, so certainly Christ's kingdom shall not be taken from Him, and just as certainly as Saul's kingdom was temporal, so certainly Christ's kingdom shall be eternal. Referring to this covenant the great Jehovah says, "I have made a covenant with my chosen, I have sworn unto David my servant. My mercy will I keep for him for ever more, and my covenant shall stand fast with him. His seed also will I make to endure for ever, and his throne as the days of heaven. My covenant will I not break, nor alter the thing that is gone out of my lips. Once have I sworn by my holiness that I will not lie unto David. His seed shall endure forever, and his throne as the sun before me. It (his throne) shall be established forever as the moon, and as a faithful witness in heaven." Psa. lxxxix. 3, 28, 28, 34–37.

1. The word throne in Hebrew and Greek denotes the regal position and glory of a king.

2. The throne and kingdom are indissolubly joined together all through the Bible.

3. The idea of Christ being established upon his throne must certainly involve the idea of his reigning over his kingdom.

4. Christ's throne is to endure while the sun and moon shall shine. If these bright luminaries shall never cease to shine, then will Christ never abdicate his throne, or cease to reign. Mark, it is Christ's throne which shall endure while the sun and moon shall shine; and the days of heaven shall roll on. What object in Christ's occupying his throne to all eternity if He does not reign?

5. The seed and throne endure during the days of heaven. If one ceases the other must cease also. If one exists through the endless ages of eternity so must the other.

If any person can reconcile the foregoing testimony with Christ's reign being limited to one thousand years, he can do more than we can. Christ will order, or reign over his kingdom from the time of its establishment forever. Isa. ix. 6, 7. Of the same import is the testimony of the angel Gabriel. He said to Mary, "And behold, thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest, and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David. And he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Luke i. 31–33.

1. To sit on David's throne, and to reign are used synonymously.

2. It is declared affirmatively that He shall reign forever, and negatively that of his kingdom there shall be no end.

Thus, his reign and kingdom will be endless. 1 Cor. xv. 24–28, does not prove that Christ delivers up the kingdom to the Father in the sense of ceasing to reign, but in the sense of subordinating Himself to the Father, or becoming a kingly subject. He thus subordinates Himself to the Father that his Father may be supreme, and the Son a royal subject. The Father gives his Son the supreme rulership of the world for one thousand years, that He may bring back this revolted world in allegiance to God. During that period, Christ will be King of kings and Lord of lords, to whom all lords and kings shall yield obedience. Rev. xix. 16; xxi. 24; Psa. lxxii. 8–11. Christ will reign supreme, and earth's loyal kings will deliver up their kingdoms to Christ, and be permitted to reign as subordinate kings under Him. Cæsar permitted those kings who would voluntarily submit to him as their umpire, to reign under him. Just so with Christ, having accomplished the work for which this high behest of power had been conferred upon Him, He will surrender the reins of supreme government into the hands of his Father, and reign subordinate to the Father through the endless ages of eternity. Then the head of all things on earth will be Christ, and the head of Christ will be God.

The Living Death of Hindoo Ladies.

A correspondent of the London "Times" gives a graphic, description of the visits of some ladies connected with the "Zenana Mission" to the homes of the native families in India. Of one young married lady, who was thus visited, he says:—

"Her eyes, above all, are beautiful—bright and liquid almost beyond description; but she cannot be seen by any one of the other sex, not even by her husband's brother or father. She chafes under the hardship, and told her visitor one day with naive simplicity, that 'this sort of life was like frogs in a well—all around life and beauty, and she buried.' The young visitor said the figure was most appropriate. It was the undoubted truth. The lady often said, 'How fortunate you English ladies are—able to go anywhere and see everything!' and her questions as to English life were interminable.

"Some of the ladies visited were as ugly as this one was pretty, but the ugly ones are as carefully secluded as the pretty ones—in fact, it is a living death. The teaching time ranges from an hour to an hour and a half in each case, and these good lady teachers go from one house to another from eleven in the morning to about half-past four or five in the afternoon. Then they also teach the children in zenanas—some of these children being betrothed, and considered to be married, as early as five years of age, and hence in many cases they early become widows.

"An awful lot is that of an Indian widow who may become so in early infancy. She cannot marry again without disgrace; she can only eat one meal a day, and that of the coarsest rice, and her dress must be without ornament. An iron ring worn on the left wrist is taken away, and a red mark, which is put on day by day at the parting of the hair to denote married life, must be put there no more for ever. The woman or child is considered dead when her husband dies.

"Happily, there is a great revolt against this fearful and unnatural system, and some of the widows are finding employment as teachers and otherwise in Zenana schools. They are not, of course, allowed to go out of the house, and the Brahmoes are doing excellent work by promoting widow marriage and giving it effect wherever their influence extends."

The existence of such a frightful system of social tyranny among the 200 millions of India may well make us rejoice in the prospect of the speedy advent of Christ to establish a just and righteous government over this earth for 1,000 years, as foretold in Revelation xx. If it were not so, many generations or centuries of this social bondage and oppression might yet remain to be endured.—Signs of our Times.

Daniel was, in the early part of his life, subjected to a great many difficulties. He was carried among strangers when he was only twelve years of age. His early education must have been thoroughly pious, and it was most probable that he had a godly mother. Just think of a youth who, when twelve years of age, was exposed and urged to sin, and who dares to say he will not outrage conscience or principle for any consideration. Daniel had a "purpose firm," and he was not afraid to "make it known." In our day, what a noble leader he would be of a Band of Hope! A boy who can dare to say "No" when solicited to wrong-doing, must be a great character. A young man who takes his heavenly Father for the light and guide of his youth must always be exemplary. Daniel was preeminently a man of God. That was the great and sustaining power that upheld him during all his vicissitudes and trials. Faith may be as small as a grain of mustard seed, but if it flies us to God and lifts us out of our difficulties and littleness, it makes us great and strong.

Daniel was also a prayerful man. That principle pervaded his whole life—under all the cares of State he had fixed hours for prayer. Nothing would deter or prevent him from the practice of secret prayer and devotion. He maintained fellowship with God. Any man who says he has not time for prayer let him look through that Babylonish window of Daniel's chamber, that was opened toward Jerusalem three times a day. He knew the worth and the power of prayer. Prayer "moves the hand that moves the world." While we live we should pray; for while we pray we live. Artisans have no right to say they are the only workers. Brain workers have much harder work to do. Daniel was a brain worker of no ordinary type. God intended us all to be workers; and however mistaken some men may be in the idea of degradation attaching to work, such an idea is nowhere countenanced in the Bible. Jesus himself said—"My Father worketh hitherto, and I work." May the God of Daniel be our God, so that at last, like him, we may all "stand in our lot at the end of the days."—Signs of Our Times.

Moses.

Moses was a warrior, a legislator, a poet, a child. He has the serene clearness of the morning, and is a stranger to obscurity. He beholds the world coming into existence, and gives us a picture of it in a few strokes of the pen. The chaos and the light, the animal-man and the perfect man, the first musician and the first song, the first navigator and vine-planter, the family of the Hebrews and their tradition, the majesty on Sinai and the hidden springs in the desert, the mystery of the sacred fire and the secret of natural clouds, the necessarily dying generation and the hopefully rising generation—this immensity of seeing and knowing and ruling and guiding, is combined in Moses, is actually our hero himself. He is equally great in peace and in war, in humility and sternness, in his tent and in the camp, on the mount and in the valley, in his quality as teacher and his position as leader. He gives his nation of redeemed slaves a heaven of truth in the artificially woven garb of truth from heaven, and makes the desert his grave along with those whom he wisely kept in the desert, as unfit for perfect freedom in the promised country. His prayer is child-like, short and sweet; his songs are the enthusiasm of a great heart and a master-mind; his exhortations and blessings are the prophetic outbursts of wisdom in venerable old age.

Such is Moses, the divine hero, whose cradle stood on the bank of the Nile, and whose grave is near the shores of the Jordan. The intervening desert is an odoriferous flower garden and fruitiferous orchard, ever smiling and gratifying to the traveler, in the exuberance of beauty and benignity.—Jewish Chronicle.

The Ruins.

In the city of New York, on Fulton street, near Broadway, stands, or did stand, as our eyes can testify, a grog shop, having over the door, the significant sign "The Ruins;" the truest inscription we have ever seen over such a doorway to death as the liquor shop is. We would that such a label was hung over every one of the multitudes that curse the land.

One has but to stand where we have stood, in front of that grog shop, to learn the truthfulness of that inscription. See that bloated, red-eyed creature, as he comes reeling forth, having stamped on his every feature and his whole person the fearful word RUIN. His clothes are in ruins, his pocket is ruined, his health is ruined, and with a ruined soul he goes to meet a ruined family, in a ruined home; and yet with such ruins staring them in the face, and meeting them at the door, we have seen other young men laughingly enter that man-trap, to be themselves in turn driven out ruined men. Oh, the madness of ruins' victims!—Christian Statesman.

Value of Time.

How impressive the death of Elizabeth, the talented and ambitious Queen of England. She lived three score and ten years; but, like many more, while nominally religious, her heart was set upon her wealth, and worldly pursuits occupied her thoughts, and spiritual interests were neglected. But when death came to her, she woke up to the true value of the time she had wasted in vanity. Reclining on a royal couch, with ten thousand dresses in her wardrobe, and the crown of a kingdom on which the sun never sets in her cabinet, and abundance of worldly honors clustering round her sceptre, she found them all valueless—all vanity and vexation of spirit—and expiring, cried in tones of anguish, "MILLIONS OF MONEY FOR AN INCH OF TIME." J. G. W.

—To-morrow may never come to us. We do not live in to-morrow. We cannot find it in any title deeds. The man who owns whole blocks of real estate, and great ships over all the ocean, does not and cannot own a single minute of to-morrow! To-morrow! It is a mysterious possibility, not yet born. It lies under the veil of midnight, behind the veil of glittering constellations. Therefore, improve every moment while it is yours,—to-morrow may be too late.

Changed.

"We shall be changed."—1 Cor. xv. 52.

"We shall be changed." Yes! we, the weak and mortal,
Shall lay this earth-robe by,—
Shall shining stand upon the eternal portal,
No tears in any eye;
For weeping shall be done—it is earth's portion,
And heaven will never hear
A single sigh of grief; exultant song
Shall fill Emmanuel's ear.

"We shall be changed." No sick and aching frame,
No weary drooping head;
The Great Physician, who foot-sore Olivet came,
His precious balm shall shed
Upon our wounds and languor; once he knew
All depths of mortal pain—
From his dear cross that root of healing grew
Which ever shall remain.

"We shall be changed." No sunk, with heavy locks
Like the white almond tree,
Shall look through darkened windows—for Christ's saved
Are young eternally.
They shall not know the falling of desire,
No fears shall haunt the way;
The incorruptible shall never tire
Through heaven's long day.

How fair and pure will be our changed faces,
When we are made like him
Whose glory fills eternity's vast spaces;
No time-blight o'er can dim
The dazzling beauty of that likeness new—
Base immortality,
What perfect bliss to bid decay adieu,
And welcome thee.

"We shall be changed." Oh! blessed change of all!
Washed in thy blood divine,
Dear Lord! no sin on our poor beasts shall fall.
We shall be thine
Eternally, beyond temptation's power
To lure away.
All hail, sweet hope! haste on, triumphant hour!
Celestial day!

Shall we have a Creed?

Yes! We must, and should have a creed. The only question is, what creed shall we adopt? Among the multitude of sectarian creeds, that constitute the platform on which they stand, we cannot find any that suits us. These creeds, from the Westminster confession of faith, and the thirty-nine articles of the Church of England, down to the latest human creed, embody much truth and well expressed. But they lack one essential quality,—they are uninspired, and hence imperfect documents,—their authority is merely human and not divine. But holy men of old have written as they were moved by the Holy Spirit; a creed which is perfect and inspired of God. "All Scripture given by inspiration of God is profitable for doctrine, for reproof, for correction and for instruction in righteousness, that the man of God may be perfect, thoroughly furnished unto all good works." 2 Tim. iii. 16. This Scripture, or writing, forms a perfect creed and discipline. We can step on to this platform without any fears of falling through, because it is the "foundation of prophets and apostles, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone." Paul says, "My speech and my preaching was not with enticing words of man's wisdom, but in demonstration of the Spirit and of power." "That your faith should not stand in the wisdom of men, but in the power of God." 1 Cor. ii. 4, 5. "Which things also we speak not in the words which man's wisdom teacheth, but which the Holy Ghost teacheth, comparing spiritual things with spiritual. Paul writes to Timothy (i. 13,) "Hold fast the form of sound words which thou hast heard of me." The apostle has written out this form of sound words for the benefit of the disciples to the end of the age. In the Scriptural form of sound words, we have the Gospel with all its doctrines and duties, as well and plainly stated as human language can do it. "The man of God is thoroughly furnished for every good work," by the revealed word of God. Paul said to the afflicted Christians at Thessalonica, "Comfort one another with these words,"—words about the coming of the Lord and resurrection. Can these words, or any other inspired words, be improved upon or made any plainer? If there are some things "hard to be understood" through the nature of the subject and our limited capacity, yet the Gospel plan is made exceedingly clear in the Old and New Testaments. We, as a people, have made great progress in the knowledge of the Scriptures in the past thirty years, by comparing "spiritual things with spiritual," and by adopting the plan of literal interpretation. When the light of the true Gospel, and of the "blessed hope" broke in upon us, it found us in bondage to these human creeds—shut up in these sectarian pens. But, as unruly sheep, we jumped over the fence, and have since fed in all the green pastures of the Bible with that perfect liberty wherewith Christ maketh free. Now, shall we return to a similar bondage by adopting another human creed? Shall we allow any men, however good or wise, to write out such creed article by article, and demand our submission to it on pain of excommunication? or, as a condition of entering the church of Christ? If we believe the Gospel and obey Christ, are we not baptized into the body of Christ? But some among us say, we are in a loose condition, are not doing what we should to spread the truth. Well, let us be corrected by the word—"not forsaking the assembling of ourselves together;" exhort each other as the day approaches—observe the ordinances—give as the Lord prospers, &c. The trouble with us is, not that we need to be bound together by a human creed, but that we do not believe the one we have got already, and thus feel its power and walk by its discipline. The world has crept in and choked the word, and we are unfruitful to a great extent. A new consecration is necessary. The doctrine of "the Bible a sufficient creed," has prevailed over sectarian opposition so much, that the oldest sect in the land—the Congregationalists—are giving up their creed as a test of church membership.—(See the late action of their association in Ohio.)

A few years ago the Congregationalist ministers of this section invited me to meet with them, and hear their essays on "the state of the dead," "on the kingdom," &c. I did so, and was invited to join in criticising these productions. My criticisms of doctrine made such a stir that they had to construct a creed for the association to keep me and all such out. Human creeds, as tests of church fellowship, or saving faith, have always in the past, and must necessrily produce vdiisions among Christians and prevent a free investigation of the revealed word. But, it is alleged in favor of a creed, that all say they believe the Bible, or Gospel, when it is evident they understand neither. Well, instruct such, and lead them to understand the true Gospel, believe and obey it. "Preach the word" from the lips of Christ and the apostles, and thus induce men to adopt a platform, every plank of which is inspired, and therefore authoritative. "If any brother err from the truth" or step off from the Divine platform, or "form of sound words," he can be disciplined by Divine authority, but if he denies any human creed, or "words of man's wisdom," he simply defies human authority. No brother has any right to make out an epitome of Bible doctrine, and demand that all others shall subscribe their names to it as a condition of fellowship. "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." E. Hoyt.

Silent Influence.

As I brought the cream-pail full of cold cream into the warm sitting-room, to stand twenty-four hours before churning, it awakened serious reflections. Nothing done to the cold cream but simply to bring it into the warm room, and let it stand a day and a night, and then it will be ready to churn! Would not some other process do as well for the cream? A sudden heating by placing it about the fire, or by pouring in hot water? No, each of these methods have their decided objections; none but the silent process is the same one. This demonstrates the point that there are some things that can be better done by silent influence than by any other.

This principal is beautifully illustrated in the following incident from "Strange Tales From Humble Life," by John Ashworth, Rochdale, England:

Ellen had a careless prayerless mother. Believing in the power of prayer, she had set apart ten minutes every day to plead with God for her mother's salvation. About seven o'clock every evening, the time she was most at liberty from her work, she went up stairs to her bed-room, to ask again and again for the burning desire of her heart,—her mother's conversion.

The mother had witnessed a great change in her daughter. She was always affectionate and kind, but had been unusually so for many months. She never seemed weary in helping, and did everything very cheerfully. Often had she requested her mother to go with her to her place of worship, but there was always some excuse,—she never would go. Ellen's going up stairs about the same time each evening, surprised her mother. She had noticed that sometimes, when she came down, her eyes were red with weeping, and determined to know what was going on. One evening when Ellen had gone up, the mother took off her shoes, gently went about half way up the steps, and sat down to listen; she then heard in a soft, subdued, but earnest voice, words that sent a thrill through her whole being.

On the following Friday evening, Ellen was quietly sewing by the fireside, and her mother was ironing. Without turning round, her mother said: "Ellen, have you been praying for me?"

Ellen was greatly astonished at this unexpected question. Her face grew red, and her eyes filled with tears, and, when able to speak, she said:

"O, mother, I could not help it; I could not help it! I feel so concerned for you."

Soon after this, Ellen had the unspeakable delight of walking beside her mother to the chapel, and seeing her become a Christian woman.

As the heat of the room gradually entered the cream, and in the course of hours silently brought it to its own temperature, so did the silent, obedient, prayerful course of Ellen, in the hands of God, gradually change the hard heart of her mother and assimilate her to her christian daughter.

False Positions of Universalists.

No. 6.

16. The fair chance raises the heathen dead to mortal life. This, under the circumstances, would be the greatest calamity that could befall them. Millions upon millions of them would be raised, not among friends, without shelter, food or clothing. To realize something of such a calamity, such overwhelming sufferings among these, we need only turn our eyes to the recent woes in Persia during her great famine, and to parts of our own country now. The most pitiful objects, the most loathsome sights would stalk abroad all over our world, freezing the heart with terror and awful fear. The world would present an awful scene of starvation, of nude, shivering beings, lost to all shame and feeling of humanity!

But, it may be replied, God will work miracles for these as He did for the Israelites. Better prove than assume this. The philosophy the assumption is bad. Why all this work, labor, miracles, to bring up, feed clothe and house these millions? To give them a fair chance, you reply. Well, would they not have to be presented with the Gospel? Assuredly. Why not then have done it while they were living? It would have required no more power or miracle then than now. Indeed, not so much; for then they would not have been to raise from the dead. "Oh! God was not then ready." Why did He then bring them into being until He was ready? With all the infinite resources of Jehovah at hand, had He willed, He could just as easily have prepared the means and influences to give all a fair chance as they first, as to wait until dead, and thousands of years afterwards, raise them up again to give them a fair chance.

Besides, it is preposterous to talk about giving all men a fair chance, as we would define a fair chance—i. e., an equal chance. I do not urge impossibilities with God; but as we look at it, it would be impossible. Did the patriarchs and men of the first age of the world, have a fair chance, an equal chance, with the Jews formed into a kingdom of God, and all the peculiar blessings of heaven showered down upon them? Did these have an equal chance with those under the Gospel of Christ? Have we an equal, a fair chance with those who shall live under the personal reign of Christ? No! So, reasoning after the manner of men, there is no such thing as an equal, a fair chance, for the whole race.

And, if the theory were true, what good to preach it now? Whom would it benefit? The time has not yet arrived for it. If true, when the time comes, it will come thundering from the heavens, irresistible and world-wide.

Let us, therefore, be quick, and do nothing before the time. If it be God's plan, when the time arrives, all the powers of the world, the flesh and the devil, will be powerless to stay its onward march its universal triumphs. Let us faithfully warn the sinner now, where the Gospel is, of his awful doom, if he die an unbeliever; and let us be satified with the plainly revealed word of God, and not spend useless time upon the dogmas of theologians.

A. Malone.

Pittsfine, Ill., 1875.

—The law for the regulation of marriages just passed by the German Parliament must be regarded as one of the most revolutionary of legislative enactments. By it Prince Bismarck has dealt a blow to the power of the Church that will be severely felt, and from which it will be difficult to recover. In all Germany it does away with the services of the clergy in three great domestic events of life—that is, it allows people to be born, to marry, and to die without the intervention of the Church. Children can enter upon their earthly career without being baptized and without being assigned to any religious denomination whatever. It enables men and women to marry without the consent or aid of the clergy, and thus does away with the trouble entailed upon them in all Catholic countries. And it permits persons who die to be buried in consecrated ground, although they may have had a purely civil burial.—Jewish Chronicle.

Virtue and piety challenge the respect of all, and usually obtain it. You may sooner become rich by retrenching desires than by enlarging the estate.

The Resurrection.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first fruits of them that slept, for since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection from the dead. For as in Adam all die even so in Christ shall all be made alive, but every man in his own order." 1 Cor. xv. 20, 22. Christ the first fruits, the head of the church has broken the bars of death, by assuring us that He is able to bring all his saints back from the grave, though they have mouldered back to their mother dust, still they are his and will as naturally attract to Him at his coming, as the magnetic needle does to the north pole.

He is our life giver, all our future life is from Him. We lost our present life in Adam, so when this mortal life ends, there would be no hope without a resurrection from the dead. This He has procured for the whole human family. But his saints will have a resurrection out from among the dead, they will have a resurrection to immortality, while the rest will be left, for they have died without Christ they never put Him on by faith and obedience, therefore they have not that power of attraction any more than vice attracts to virtue. Therefore they will be, left in the state of death until the general judgment, to receive their reward, which is the second death.

Report of Meetings.

Since writing before I have been to Illinois. Held meetings in De Witt and McLean counties, had one of the best meetings that I have had for some time. I had a good turnout all the time, and the best of interest manifested throughout. There were two immersed into the name of Jesus Christ during the meeting. The meeting held over two Sundays, and many others were convinced, and promised obedience some time soon. I have promised to return there again some time this season. Think at that time there will be others ready to obey that form of doctrine delivered to them.

From there I returned to Warren county, held meetings over the first Sunday in May, one was immersed.

From there I went to Fountain county, had meeting two nights, then the rain stopped our meeting. Got home May 10, found all well. Was gone some twenty-five days. Thank the Lord for his goodness.

From Brother Beck.

Brother Reed:—

As some of the readers of the Restitution would like to hear from me I will take this method to let them hear from me.

We arrived here from Kansas March 31. Found the grain looking much better than in Kansas, and everything plenty. But brethren, the Gospel as it was preached by Christ and the apostles is not known here. They know nothing about the second coming of Christ. They say He comes whenever one dies—the old song. They say I am a universalist and don't believe the Bible. But when the Scripture is put to them with thus saith the Lord they can't stand it, and say that no common man can understand it now, but the preachers, and it is their place to explain it to them, for which they pay them. Thank the Lord I do not want them to explain it to me. I will take the Word of the Lord and no other. I know that I will have a great deal of opposition, but I will not give up the faith for all the riches in the world, for what would it profit me if I should lose my soul.

Your brother in the faith,

I. N. Beck.

NOTICE.

We wish to announce through the Restitution, that brother John Foore, of Galesburg, Kan., is expected to hold meetings at the Indianhill schoolhouse, two miles east of Hartford, on Saturday evening before the last Sunday in May and will continue over two Sundays. The brethren here are five members of the one faith, and are showing their faith by their works. We hold meetings every Sunday and have preaching by the writer every two weeks. We number thirty members, and a number of our neighbors who have been to hear us for some time have searched the Scriptures, and now say are with us. Take courage brethren, the glad tidings of the coming kingdom is being gladly received by many.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND H. V. REED

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God. . . . Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish His Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "Our Rest." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently assist in its circulation. If he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would convey it to others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

THE RESTITUTION.

Beyond this Troubled Sea.

BY REQUEST.

TUNE.—When you and I were young, Maggie.

We are out on the sea of life my Lord,
Where death's dark waters frown;
And beneath its ressitless tide my Lord,
Our fallen race have gone.

CHORUS.—But there's life from the dead in there, my Lord,
A life from sorrow free;
And a home for the weary tribe, my Lord,
Beyond this troubled sea.

When the breakers are thickening fast my Lord,
Thy word shall be our guide;
And when tempests surround our bark my Lord,
In thee we'll still confide.

We are waiting for thy return my Lord,
To be from sin made free;
And to join in redemption's song my Lord,
With shouts of victory.

Then we'll play of that joyous day my Lord,
Earth's promised jubilee;
When the ransomed shall reign with thee my Lord,
In immortality

R. C. SIMONDS.

The Faith Once Delivered to the Saints.

Jude, in his short epistle of one chapter, writes several items that are deeply interesting and very suggestive.

First, he calls himself "a servant of Jesus Christ," a very proper appellation, and a very proper and befitting position to assume, having been called by the great head of the church from the humbler walks of common life, to that of an apostle—one chosen and set apart by Christ to write out the balance of divine revelation, and fill up the measure of Christ's sufferings.

The next very suggestive thought—"preserved in Jesus Christ." How does the domestic do up her sweet meats to have them keep? Pound for pound. Take the thought and make the application. It is worthy of profound consideration. "The common salvation." It was not only the duty and joy, but also the burden of the holy Apostles, to write of the common or great salvation, wrought out by Jesus the Christ in his death, burial, and resurrection; thus becoming our great atoning sacrifice, by or through which men may become reconciled to God. They left nothing undone, or unsaid, to convince the world of the truth of their mission. They frequently put forth strong logical arguments, coupled with affectionate entreaties and earnest exhortations. That the church should contend for the faith once delivered to the saints, the importance of holding or having an intelligent Bible faith, cannot be over estimated. One quotation will settle this point. "Without faith it is impossible to please God." Heb. xi. 6. If we will read carefully this chapter, and believe the word of inspiration, we shall learn the importance of a correct faith, as also its results. The chapter begins with a definition of the word faith, being the "substance, or ground, or confidence of things hoped for," or as the old Methodist lady said to her minister, "It is taking God at his word."

Abraham believed God, and it (his faith) was counted to him for righteousness, being coupled with works, the two must not be separated. St. Paul says: "One Lord, one faith, one baptism." Jude, as in our heading, "The faith once delivered to the saints." The is a definite article. The faith that was once for all delivered to the saints.

In the light of these quotations, there is but the one definite saving faith, and so we affirm our understanding of the truth of divine revelation.

What was the faith once delivered to the saints? The unerring Word alone must settle this important question. We have already quoted that Abraham believed God, and it was counted to him for righteousness. He is called the Father of the faithful. Abraham believed God; what did God say to him? The record says God talked with him, and that He made a covenant with him, and confirmed it with an oath. The reader must turn to Gen. xii. xiii. xv. xvii. with the whole of Scripture teaching upon the point. The covenants of promise made to Abraham, Isaac, Jacob and David related to Abraham and his seed, the Christ possessing the land of Canaan for an everlasting inheritance. Passing strange that not an intimation is given of transporting those holy servants of the Most High God to heaven at death. But the record does say that Abraham died, and they buried him in the cave at Machpelah; and so with Isaac, and Jacob. Paul says, "These all obtained a good report through faith, not having obtained the promises, God having provided some better thing for us, that they without us should not be made perfect." But say our orthodox friends you do not believe that Christ died in our room and stead. I certainly do not believe anything of the kind; if so, then universal salvation is true, and we need give ourselves no further trouble about it. To be plain and place ourselves in a clear Bible light before all men, we believe and preach—Christ the anointed, as God's great atoning sacrifice, the way the truth and the life, the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world, the resurrection and the life, the Savior of the world.

A word on our faith as a people; have we the genuine Abrahamic faith and were we intelligently baptized in the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ, and do we believe these prerequisites necessary in order to salvation, and do we not believe that this is the only way plainly stated in the Word of God whereby men and women can put on Christ by being baptized in water in the name of the Holy Ones for the remission of sins? Allow me to be plain, and press upon your attention and observance the foundation principles of our most holy christianity. If we are what we profess to be—a called out and separated people, let us be careful in our choice of salutations, and appellations, of dear brother in Christ of unwashed Gentile professors. We feel keenly upon the point. Our future, as a peculiar people, depends largely upon adhering to first principles. If we were right (I should not use an "if,") when we believed and obeyed the Gospel, let us earnestly contend for the faith once delivered to the saints. Never mind the cry uncharitable. There can be no two ways of getting into Christ. I am bold to affirm that the Scriptures teach but the one plain simple process—an intelligent faith, and a cheerful obedience, accompanied by the example of Christ and his holy apostles. O, my soul, what consternation will surprise the thousands who are building their house upon a sandy foundation, and who will be found not having on the wedding garment. The sayings of the great teacher will have their exact fulfillment—not a single utterance of the Spirit, of the holy unpolluted lips, will fail of an accomplishment.

Dearly beloved in the Lord, suffer the word of exhortation from one whose sun of human life is fast filling out, who has numbered almost four score years, and after a long and eventful life of toil, and for the last ten years, of excruciating pain from rheumatism, who still has hope toward God, and who has for over thirty years entertained that blessed hope of seeing the King in his beauty, are our garments pure? are we preserved in Jesus the Christ? pound for pound.

I cannot see with my understanding of the fulfillment of Daniel's prophecy of the papacy, in taking away the temporal power of the Pope, and the manner of Christ's second coming, why his chariot wheels should longer be delayed. Surely the vine of the earth is ripe for the sickle; the nations are ready for the great day and battle of God Almighty;—the solemn question—are we ready for the translation? Let there be great searchings of heart, and a speedy packing of satchels, and a bee-line for the station, for soon the angel will whisper in the ear of his sleeping and waking saints, "The Master is come, and calleth for thee."

NEWELL BOND.

Death, the Completion of Sin.

With all his endowments as a creature, it is not that which man is in himself, or in the constitution of his being, that clothes him with consideration and dignity, but that which he was destined to be according to the declared purpose which determined his creation, and invested him with dominion and official relationship; and more especially, in that which he shall yet become, though the power and wisdom of God in accomplishing his redemption, in the future and final overthrow of evil, that his true excellency is discoverable, and the perfection of the Divine wisdom in his constitution is so gloriously vindicated. It is, therefore, without reason, that Rabbi Lesser renders Psa. viii. 4, "What is the Mortal that thou rememberest him? or the Son of Man, that thou thinkest of him?" God has set his Majesty above the heavens, and his purposes are ordained in wisdom and established by counsel, "and out of the mouth of babes and sucklings hath he founded his might, because of his opponents, that he might bring to silence the enemy, and him that seeketh vengeance." It is to this end, God hath chosen the weak things of the world to confound the mighty, and the things that were not, to bring to naught the things that are. 1 Cor. i. 26–27. And in overcoming the evil which had already been introduced into his government, through the voluntary departure of his intelligent creatures, from their first estate, God did not presently and directly interpose by his own might, nor yet mediately, by "angels excelling in strength," but in the consummation of his work of creation, made provision for its final overthrow, through creatures that were lower in the scale of being than the angels, among whom the evil of sin had originated. As the tendency of evil is ever downwards, should its corrupting influence extend to man, it would then have reached its lowest level in the scale of intelligence, and be "finished in bringing forth death," and from that point, God had determined to work out its final overthrow.

In being derived from the earth, man had "no pre-eminence above the beasts," save only in that which was comprehended in the declared purpose of God in his creation and in the secret counsels, or the hidden mystery of his will, relating to his future destiny. It was rather because of his seeming unworthiness and lowly origin (as viewed from the creature's standpoint), that God was pleased to give the dominion of the earth into his hand, without even so much as a reserved right of reversion or revocation, that his goodness and self-sufficiency beyond the operation of law, might be the more strikingly made manifest. In the possibilities of man's apostacy, which involved his life, were included the Divine provisions for the maintenance and the immutability of his counsels, and the overthrow of sin. We did not speak of "impossibilities" as appertaining to the Divine prescience, but only as viewed from the standpoint of creature intelligence, or as contingencies arising from man's volitionary conformity to the revealed will of God, his Maker. As present to the Divine mind, God contemplated humanity as standing in "the seed of the woman," in a redeemed life, beyond the power of law, sitting in judgment upon the great adversary of God and man. But those secret purposes of God do not constitute the rule of life, nor change existing relations.

The trust originally committed to man, clothed him with dignity, and surrounded him with privileges and immunities far beyond any of the creatures of the earth, and is the fullest exhibition of the Divine beneficence that creation could unfold. Man held a life that in itself was as liable to the disposing power of law, as the other creatures of the earth, but through God's abundant grace, was not subject to its operation. It was furthermore secured by his ready access to the tree of life, so that in no sense was its continuance measurable by the operation of natural law. It was all purely a matter of grace—of pure bounty.

But if man by his own voluntary act should render himself subject to the law of creaturehood, there would also be an end of sin. The law of sin would then exact its last farthing, and in enforcing its claim would exhaust itself, and destroy its subject. The possibility of a future for humanity was a mystery beyond an angel's ken, and certainly was not provided for in the completed work of creation. But the redemption of humanity, from the disintegrating power of law, was the thunderbolt of God's wrath and righteous displeasure against sin that struck dismay in Satan and his hosts, when it was authoritatively announced "the seed of the woman shall crush thy head." It told him of a future judge. And since a present justification, through faith in the power and operation of God in accomplishing redemption, is even now, in the life that is under the curse of sin, accorded, we can begin to understand how the "grace that was given us in Jesus Christ before the world began," took hold upon the honor of God and had respect to the immutability of the Divine counsels, and the ultimate overthrow of sin, that had been introduced into the Divine administration through the pride and self-sufficiency of the creature. As angelic life was not rendered mortal by transgression, sin could not be "finished" in them—it never could reach an end, and there almightiness, then his efficiency would have been constrained by the creature, involving a change in his purpose. But through the mortal, a Mediator was brought in, in whom the law of sin and death had exhausted itself and after expending all its fury, he stood again perfected in a humanity over which death has no power, and the law no dominion. The victory is not simply over death, but over him that has the power of death, that is the devil, who is now to be judged by that man whose mortality he effected. And as the greater always involves the less, he who can recover his own humanity from death's cold embrace, can assuredly recover all for whom he died, so that he will ultimately destroy death and hades, and dispossess Satan as the God of this world. But Christ is not yet crowned as the Son of Man, and therefore death still ravens.

If by transgression man rendered himself mortal, he does not perish with the beasts, because at this point God interposed in redemption. But if the law now reigned, it did not frustrate the grace of God; it only made an end of sin, and over that which lies beyond, the law has no significancy. No further curse can attach, save only that which grows out of man's relation to the revealed purpose of God in redemption, or the rejection of the record, which God has given concerning his Son. This is the condemnation, that ye believe not in the only begotten Son of God. It was Satan's effort in the Edenic transgression to limit the grace and loving kindness of God toward the creatures he had made, but in Satan only developed his future judge, and not only so, through the regenerating power of the Holy Ghost, opened up for the mortal a higher destiny, in being made partakers of a Divine nature—sons of God by a new creation; we are no longer lower than the angels in the scale of being, but are fitted to reign over the principalities in the heavenlies, and to judge angels. The law too has been honored and its demands are all fully met ("the soul that sinneth it shall die,") and the grace of God has only the more abounded.

It is thus the foolishness of God is wiser than men, and the weakness of God is stronger than men, and an unfathomable mystery into which the angels desire to look. It was but a hellish triumph to mar God's fair creation, and to put a restraint upon the manifestation of his love toward his creatures, but it was surely a blunder on Satan's part, and inaugurated for him and his hosts the horrors of perdition. Satan saw the error when it was too late, or he never would have put it in the heart of Judas to betray his Lord.

It was God's purpose from the beginning to give the earth to the children of men; and that purpose shall yet be realized and accomplished as perfectly as though Adam had never sinned, while to the regenerate, the justified, and the redeemed, a higher destiny is provided, that as sons of God, they may reign with Christ in eternal life. The law with its murky horizon of death, is but a temporary condition, and cannot limit the hopes and aspirations of humanity, nor God's beneficence toward the man who was created for a nobler destiny. God's goodness is unsearchable and his ways are past finding out. The whole world shall yet be filled with the knowledge of his glory, in the triumph of his grace. His counsels shall stand and all his declared or revealed purposes shall be established. Nothing less than a "restitution of all things" can vindicate the goodness of God in the ordering of his completed creation. The Adamic constitution was perfect in itself, "very good," and secured the highest possible blessedness for man, as originally constituted, and this condition shall yet be realized, established and confirmed, as perfectly as though sin had never defaced the bloom of Eden. But as mortals, we have more privileges secured by the covenant and promise than were ever comprehended in the Adamic constitution, or were sung by the angelic choir when creation's work was done. And this is made possible only through the redemption of a life that was rendered mortal by transgression.

We fail to make the necessary distinction between the created and the redeemed life; the former was made mortal by transgression, the latter is already redeemed by the operation of God, and its good condition is made conditional upon faith in Christ, as the Son of God and the Savior of the world.—C. S. B. in Prophetic Times.

From Brother Kidwell.

Having just returned from a trip to Missouri, I concluded to write a few lines to the RESTITUTION, in order that the brethren may hear from the scattering few that I met with on my route.

I preached twenty-one discourses on my trip. Stopped at a sister Crawford's—preached five discourses in that neighborhood, found the people anxious to hear. I also stopped with brother Benoni Scots, whom I found steadfast in the faith, and very desirous for the advancement of the cause. He invites all travelling brethren to call. He lives near Wheatland, in Hickory county, Mo. I also found a few brethren at Bear Creek, who are anxious to be made known to the brethren at large, that they may have the advantage of the traveling brethren, who may chance to pass that way.

Brother James B. Jones, and the Baker brothers live in that vicinity. They have no preaching, but contend earnestly for the faith. May the Lord help them in their efforts to maintain and spread the truth. I also found a few brethren at Wild Cat, Ark. Preached one discourse there. Brother Wm. Percell seems to be the leading brother there.

Stopped at Fort Wayne, found no brethren, but the people seem anxious to hear, invited me very cordially to visit them again. Also stopped at a place called Shaughigh, Ark, where I met with a Christian preacher, who attacked the doctrine of the One Faith, and proposed a debate,—when we preached one discourse each, he concluded to stop until he was better acquainted with the doctrine. The people all seemed well pleased, and desirous to hear more. The Lord willing, I will visit them again this summer.

Your in the One Faith,
GEORGE KIDWELL.

The Deepest Well.

In the village of Sperenberg, about twenty miles distant from Berlin, is situated the deepest well in the world. It is for some distance sixteen feet in diameter, and is 4,194 feet in depth. It was begun about five years ago by the Government authorities with a view to ascertaining the existence of rock salt beneath the strata of gypsum occurring in the locality. At a depth of 280 feet the salt was reached, but the boring was continued to a depth of 980 feet, the diameter of the bore being reduced to about thirteen inches. The boring was subsequently prosecuted by steam until the final depth of 4,194 feet was attained. At the lowest point the salt deposits still continue, exhibiting the enormous thickness of 2,907 feet.

Report of a Discussion,

Between G. W. Myers, of the Church of God, of Girard, Kansas, and Elder Swarts, of the Campbellites' or Christian Church, so called, of Fort Scott, Kansas.

Resolved, That man in death loses his consciousness.—Myers affirms, Swarts denies.

FIRST SPEECH BY MYERS.

Gen. i. 26—"Let us make man, in our own image, after our likeness," etc. then gives Webster's primary definition of man, from God's definition, Gen. ii. 7; vi. 3. Then showed that this man that was made of dust, by the inbreathing of the breath of life, he (dust made man) became a living soul, and that there was no intimation of an immortal soul being put in the man to make him live, and that all the animals had the same breath of life, for proof of which referred to Eccl. iii. 18, 19, 20, also xii. 7. So that man had nothing more than a beast, they all had the same breath—Pneuma, Greek; Ruah, Hebrew; Spiritus, Latin; Spirito, Italian—and so ended.

SWARTS' FIRST SPEECH.

He commences by saying that he would sanction what Myers had said with reference to the breath, and gave for proof Gen. vi. 17, also vii. 20–23, to prove that both man and cattle and every creeping thing that creepeth upon the earth were destroyed. Then went on, and for a starting point, gave Gen. i. 26 to show that man could not have been made in God's image and form, when made of dust; seeing that God was a spirit; and then went on to show that it was not the being made of dust, that was in the image of God, by quoting John i. 1—"In the beginning was the word," etc.; then went on to prove the pre-existence of Christ, that Christ had the form of God before he was born of the Virgin Mary, and that was the form that man was made in, and lost that image when he transgressed, and so on.

SECOND SPEECH OF MYERS.

He takes up the seed of the woman and shows that according to friend Swarts' position that Christ was older than his mother, and there was not a woman present that would admit that she had a son older than herself. Then showed that Christ was the seed of the woman,—Gen. iii. 15; the second Adam, I Cor. xv. 45—that he was born of the Virgin Mary, and that he himself was made in the express image of his father's person. Heb. i. 2-3.

SWARTS' SECOND SPEECH.

Commences with ridicule, misrepresentations, slang and quibblings, and so on to the end of the discussion, the longer the worse. It seemed the only hold the boy had till the close of the debate. He only quoted three more passages of scripture—Zach. xii. 2; Matt. xxii. the Sadducee to the Savior; Matt. xvii. 3, Moses and Elias.

[I will omit two speeches, as it may not be interesting to the reader.]

SECOND PROPOSITION.

Resolved, That the destiny of the wicked will consist in endless misery.

Swarts affirms, and gives as first proof text, 2 Thess. i. 6–9, and said that the word destroy came from the Olethron which primarily meant to build up, as the word came from the Latin Stuo destroys, to build up, instead of pull down; he also gave Matt. xxv. 46, and a few other texts, such as Mark ix. 44—"where their worm dieth not, and their fire was not quenched." He also, in the run of the discussion, denied the inspiration of Job, and stated that Psalms was poetical, and that some of Genesis was not reliable, and so demolished the Old Testament and spiritualized the New, and made out that the whole thing was nothing but metaphors.

MYERS FIRST SPEECH.

He takes up the same texts (2 Thess. i. 6–9; Matt. xxv. 46) and shows that no one but Swarts would believe that destroy would mean to build up.—so the people saw the ludicrous blunders in the education of the elder of Fort Scott. He made an awful display in his Greek, his logic, and his English. Every proposition that he took, Brother Myers out-generaled him, so all the congregation could see it plainly. Myers took the position that the wicked would be destroyed by fire and brimstone, just as the Sodomites were destroyed, in Sheol, in Gehenna, in Hades, in Tartarus, which was in Hades, and for proof gave a number of refereuces. I will only give Psalms xlix—"like sheep;" Isaiah lvi.; Psalms xxxvii—"like the fat of lambs;" Malachi lxi.; Matt. iii. 12, also viii. 20—"on tears;" Rom. vi. 23; Gal. vi. 7–8; Jas. i. 15; Rev. xx., etc. And so the debate closed with a decided victory in favor of the truth.

Another proposition was to be discussed, viz.: That the kingdom of Jesus Christ was set up on the day of Pentecost, Swarts to affirm, but he backed square out. Myers proposed to affirm that the kingdom of Jesus Christ was yet future, but there was a general stampede among them, like a lot of Texas cattle. They were not willing to debate on any consideration, so the debate had to close on account of there being but one side; the other being "as though they had not been."

There is quite a number of good Campbellite brethern there, and I guess they will come out in favor of the truth, just as all the noble, the good, and honest seekers of truth will do and are doing. Brother Myers was once one of the Campbellite persuasion, but about six weeks ago was immersed into Christ, came out on the side of truth, and has made rather a sore spot for them, and is much to be dreaded by them, as he knows all their forts, and will hold them right to what they teach or try to teach, but cannot always do it; as in the case of Swarts, who would not stick to one thing he said; would say one thing one minute, and the next take it back and deny saying it; but he is by no means a sample man. They have good men and honest men, but I do not think that Swarts possesses any of these good qualities. I am sorry to speak so harshly; but "by their fruits ye shall know them," and very many have learned him just as I have. Would to God it were otherwise.

Brethren, it is not much honor to hold a discussion with such a man. It is calculated to create hard feelings, and had it not been for the meek, quiet spirit that was manifested by Brother Myers, the debate would have done a great deal of harm. So the way it turned out, I think it was a decided victory in favor of truth. Brethren, when you enter into a debate, see to it that you have a man, a christian and a gentleman to debate with. Your for the truth,

JOHN FOORE.

Hearers and Doers.

"But be ye doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving your own selves."—James i. 22.

It is plain from the above statement that the simple exercise of faith alone, will avail nothing. By faith we mean belief, the assent of the mind to the truthfulness of a given statement. To simply confess that the Bible is true, as a revelation from God, is one thing; to obey its commandments to us, is quite another. The first requires only an intellectual exercise, the second a moral change and training in a new direction. The one may be done by a wicked person, the other requires a being who is separated from sinful practices. To be both a hearer and a doer of the Word requires a complete surrender of self and selfish propensities. A truly practical Christian man or woman will be as readily recognized by their actions as the name of the tree will be known by its fruit. This truth Jesus taught—"By their fruits ye shall know them," not by their loud professions, not by their "pious look," not by their smooth oily words, but by their fruits, their works, their actions. One of the greatest, if not the greatest stumbling blocks in the way of sinners, is the great want of practical piety found among professors of christianity. How often is the question asked when a truly good character is described, "Where do you find such persons?" and the earnestness of the question is evidence of its propriety.

We can no more manifest a Christian character without its effects being witnessed by those around us, than we could light a candle and prevent its rays being seen by those in sight of it, or build a city on a hill without it being seen. In the secular affairs of this world we say, That man is a farmer, and that is a merchant, and the other is a banker. How do we know? By their occupation, their actions, their works. Why not be able to say, That man is a Christian, that woman is a follower of Christ? Why? By their conduct, their conversation, their actions, their works. How beautifully might the follower of Christ adorn their profession by doing as well as hearing the Word. Let us not be weary in well doing.

TERMS:—$2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable Invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three and six months at the same rate.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.

All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and immortal saints as joint heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates as a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor is not to be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents, whose letters are published under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is condemned, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrine is encouraged, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Israel and the Covenants.

The apostle to the Heb. v. 10, approaches the subject of the Melchisedec priesthood, but hesitates to proceed, seeing they were so dull of hearing, "of whom he had many things to say, but hard to be uttered," or make intelligible to people ignorant of the first principles of the oracles of God.

It may be possible, if we are not the Hebrews addressed, that we are more or less in their condition referred to; and as the covenants of promise made to the fathers of old, are at the foundation of all that God's people expect and hope for; even at the present day; we do well in striving to come to the right understanding of the doctrines therein set forth, and by so doing come to speak the same things as commanded.

It is one of God's covenants of promise concerning Israel, that there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer who shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob. And this we are told will be fulfilled when the fullness of the Gentiles be come in. Rom. xi. 26, 27; Acts xv. 16. By examining this quotation, Isa. lix. 20, 21, we learn their Redeemer will make the following covenant with them, to-wit: My spirit that is upon thee, Israel after being restored, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, Jer. xxxi. 33, 34; Isa. xxx. 21, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed, nor out of the mouth of thy seeds seed saith the Lord, from henceforth and forever.

We admit Christ to be their deliverer, but many seem to think He has already come to Zion, and has been turning away ungodliness from Jacob over eighteen hundred years past. But this seems not to be the coming the apostle referred to.

Again, it is admitted, that Christ is referred to, as the horn of salvation raised up in the house of his servant David, to perform the mercy promised their fathers, by delivering them from their enemies, and from the hand of all that hate them, that they may serve God without fear in holiness and righteousness, before Him all the days of their life, Luke i. 68.

The fulfillment of this must be looked for in the future, when Israel shall be restored and grafted into their own good olive tree again; which Paul tells us will take place after their Deliverer comes and removes their blindness, and turns away ungodliness from them, Rom. xi. 17-25. This house of Israel and Judah being turned unto the Lord, will be taught by Him, Isa. liv. 13, where great shall be the peace of their children.

Their Deliverer, Abraham's seed, now possessing the gate of his and their enemies, protects them, and a little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation. The grafted in branch, of Christ's planting, the work of his hands, that He may be glorified, Isa. lx, and the glory of his people Israel. Luke ii. 32.

They will now dwell in the promised land, with Abraham and his promised seed, who will from henceforth bless all families of the earth, Gal. iii. 8-16. Now will Israel increase until their number cannot be measured or numbered. Hosea i. 10. "There shall be no more thence an infant of days" as now, Isa. lxv.; and this everlasting covenant of peace will be made with the remnant of the broken off branches, Rom. xi. 27, and will be made and accepted as was the first, the finishing touch of the grafting in process, yet in the future. The first covenant was not made without the people first accepting the terms and promising obedience. Neither will the second, I imagine. Nor do I understand the new covenant is being made with the house of Israel and Judah, when the Gospel is being preached to the world to take out a people for Christ's name. For the apostles in their preaching had but little and seldom anything to say concerning the promised new covenant to be made with Israel, and then as a future event. The few of Israel that have believed in Christ, do not constitute the house of Israel with whom the covenant is promised. Jer. xxxi. 31. Such will become the sons of God, John i. 12, and will be associated with Christ in blessing not Israel only, but all kindreds of the earth, and at that time occupy a far more exalted position than is promised Israel under the new covenant even. The promise is not while they are scattered among the nations, dwelling in their enemies land, but after being gathered out of all nations, back to their own land, Jer. xxxi. 10; Ezek. xxxvii. 28. Now, if this covenant is anywhere spoken of by Paul, as being already made, other than a promise, is he not "calling things which be not as though they were?" The High Priest's offering in the holy of holies was a type of Christ's present position at the right hand of God. The time not having arrived for Him to sit a Priest and king upon his own throne, seems to be the reason why He would not be a Priest if He were now on earth. Heb. viii. 4. Thus proving the law dispensation has not entirely passed away with unbelieving Israel. They are suffering the curses threatened for not believing in the prophet raised up like unto Moses, who was a type of Christ.

Their fathers would not hear Moses the first time he attempted to deliver them. So Jesus is waiting until his enemies be made his footstool. It is "after those days" of waiting, that God has promised to send Jesus Christ, Acts iii. 20, to deliver them from their political enemies—restore them to their own land, and make the new and everlasting covenant with them. Heb. viii. 10; x. 12-16. And under this covenant they will have their priesthood and sacrifices of animals restored if I understand Ezek. xl-xlii. xliv. xlvi. 1-7, and those believing into Christ, during this age, enter a covenant like that made to Abraham, by the new and living way consecrated for them by Christ, whose blood is far more efficacious than that of animals, in purging the believers conscience from dead works, to serve the living God; who has become the one mediator between God and man, and by means of his death, for the redemption of the transgressions that were under the first covenant, they which are called might receive the promise of eternal inheritance, Heb. ix. 14, 15, before the new covenant shall be made with the masses of Israel. These called ones are made equal unto the angels, and enter that blissful state prepared for them, "That since the beginning of the world men have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O God, beside thee." Isa xliv. 4. While the blessings promised Israel under the new covenant are such as the eye of man has seen and heard of ever since the beginning of the world, though measurably withheld from all, especially the called ones, previous to that age. Opposing error with error is a slow way to advance in the truth, and in nothing is it more evident than in the success had in trying to convince good men and women that God had promised a glorious future for literal Israel—restored to their own land of Canaan. The reason seems to be the admission and common belief that the covenant has already been made with them. A strange conclusion it would seem, where there is no promise of this in all the Scriptures, until after their restoration, never more to be pulled up out of their land, when they are promised a greater abundance of the good things of this life, than has ever fallen to the lot of saint or sinner, since the fall of the first pair from Eden. But if the covenant has already been made, may it not all be a spiritual myth, in harmony with the diluted Gospel of the day? Again, the promise of spirit baptism on the whole house of Israel, Joel ii. 28, was promised after the restoration and new covenant made. Now if it has been made and the spirit poured out as promised, where is the evidence? Christians, saying nothing about Israel, do not see eye to eye as promised, but need a great deal of teaching and study, to understand many of the simplest facts of the Gospel message; which is not the promised condition of things under the covenant. We should not forget that facts speak louder than words. It is thought by some that Peter said the promise of spirit baptism is unto you and your children. Acts ii. 39. But I see no reason for drawing such an inference, but rather the forgiveness of sins is promised as stated in the preceding verse. Neither did he say the pouring out of the spirit on the day of pentecost was the fulfillment of that which was spoken by the Prophet Joel, Acts ii. 16. It could not have been a fulfillment, being too soon, and not as general as promised, and was not poured out upon the class the prophet said it should be. Ezek. xxxvi. 31, 32. At that time only a few tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come. Then it was like that promised—a taste by a few of what is promised the whole house of Israel, under the new covenant, after their Redeemer has turned away ungodliness from them. Now if a new covenant has been made it seems not to be the one promised the house of Israel.

The "Lamb" of God slain in type since the fall, has come and consecrated a new and living way to approach God for pardon and reconciliation, and this provision seems to be made for the house of God. Heb. x. 21. The "sheep" for whom Christ gave his life. While the house of Israel have been bowing down in unbelief, suffering the penalties of the broken law, which they still cling to, God hasten the time when they shall see Jesus again, and say blessed is He that cometh in the name of the Lord." Matt. xxiii. 39.

False Positions of Universalism No. 7.

16. Universalists teach that God is the Father of all, and then all will be saved. Just to take a hasty glance at this position, it seems reasonable. But he is not the Father of all. He is no more the Father of the wicked than of the beasts that perish. Jesus, in John viii. 44, plainly teaches this: To the wicked Jews, he said, "Ye are of your father, the devil, and the lusts of your father ye will do." Can a man be a child of God and of the devil at one and the same time? And again; Paul affirms, "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus," Gal. iii. 26. If this witness is true, then none are the children of God by creation, but only by faith in Christ Jesus.

17. Universalists try to make capital by a play upon the words "all," "the whole creation," etc. We now show their interpretation of these words to be wholly false, and subversive of Bible teaching. Mark xvi. 25. "After that he put his hands again upon his eyes, and made him look up; and he was restored, and saw all men clearly." Did he see "all men" in the past, the present, and the future?

Mark xvi. 15. "And he said unto them, go ye into all the world and preach the gospel to every creature." Did Jesus command his disciples to travel all over the whole earth? No! It was "not common," the world, the earth enlightened within the Roman territory. Did he command them to preach to everyone of the race? No! Or their mission was a grand failure. Let Paul explain, Col. i. 23. "If ye continue in the faith grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel, which ye have heard, and which was preached to every creature under heaven." Did Paul or anyone else ever preach to all of the race, past, present, and future? No! It was (pasei te ktisei) to every creature (hapto ton ouranon) under heaven—to all under the Roman heavens.

Luke ii. 25. "Now when all the people were baptized." Were the whole human family, past, present, and future, baptized? But there are so many scriptures with the words "all," "every creature," "the whole creation," etc., that to quote them all would be to transcribe the greater portion of the New Testament. For the present, therefore, I will give one or two more of the strongest for universalists, and for the fair chance, to show that no one can prove either doctrine by them.

Rom. xi. 25. "And so all Israel shall be saved." Now, so far as the Jewish race is concerned, this is the strongest scripture in the Book of God. It seems sweeping, universal, as regards the Jews. How now Paul? Have you turned Universalist? No! By no means. How then do you explain this? Easy enough. Rom. ix. 6-7. "For they are not all Israel which are of Israel; neither, because are they the seed (natural) of Abraham, are they all children; but in Isaac shall thy seed be called." "That is," as Paul explains again, Rom. ix. 8, "they which are the children of the flesh, they are not the children of God; but the children of the promise are counted for the seed." But who, Paul, under the gospel, are the seed of Abraham? "For ye are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus. For as many of you as have been baptized into Christ have put on Christ. There is neither Jew nor Greek, there is neither male nor female, there is neither bond nor free: for ye are all one in Christ Jesus. And if ye be Christ's, then are ye Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise." Gal. iii. 26-29. So, contrary to Universalism, every one is not a child of God.

Rom. viii. 22. "For we know that the whole creation (pasa he ktisis) groaneth and travaileth in pain until now. And not only they—"the whole creation"—but ourselves also." Here the broadest words known to the Bible, the most comprehensive, do not include the whole race; for they exclude Paul and the brethren. Therefore, if the Bible declared in a general way, that the whole creation should be saved in the eternal state, still universalism would be unproven. There are but few, if any, universal propositions in the Bible; but there are general and particular ones in abundance. Particular salvation refers to the few to be saved when Christ first comes, the called out ones, ready to receive him, and to be his associates in his kingdom; general promises include the great salvation to take place during his reign; but universal ones are unknown to the Bible, or are to be applied to all the redeemed of God after the destruction of the wicked.

Consecration.

"I beseech you, therefore, brethren, by the mercies of God, that you present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy and acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

The apostle took a well known rite of that time, to impress upon their minds the necessity of a surrender to God of the entire being. As in the burnt offering, the unclean portions were thoroughly cleansed, and every part of the animal offered in sacrifice, so, to present our bodies a living sacrifice, we must be cleansed from selfishness, ungodliness, and worldly lusts, and live soberly, righteously, and temperately. Are our bodies fit for a sacrifice to God, when, for the gratification of our depraved appetites, they are so filled with breath-destroying substances, that the "whole head is sick and the whole heart faint," the intellectual and moral nature so benumbed as to be powerless to come to our relief, and we have to acknowledge to ourselves with sadness that we have not enough of the love of God in our hearts, to enable us to surmount the temptations. We cannot present our bodies a living sacrifice to God, when we are manifesting an ungodlike selfishness in almost every act of our lives. Selfishness consults only its own gratification, and is the groundwork of every sin and crime known to man. It is the soil that produces the cares of the world, and the deceitfulness of riches, which chokes the word that it becometh unfruitful. It is the basis of the dark list of crimes enumerated by the apostle, of which he says: "They that do such things shall not inherit the Kingdom of God." To present our bodies a living sacrifice, we must yield our desires and wills to the will of God, and give up whatever hinders our progress in God's service. Our appetites and passions must be brought into subjection to the divine law, for how can we present our bodies a living sacrifice to God, while we are captives to our depraved appetites? Has a slave any power to dispose of his own person? If we remain in bondage to our appetites and passions, we are prohibiting ourselves from serving God; for "no man can serve two masters." God has no use for such service. He says, "My son, give me thy heart." Anything less than that is only ministering to the love of self, and is not acceptable to God.

Man is a finite being, a candidate for immortality, his character is being formed by his daily deeds. Each voluntary act has a bearing upon his future destiny. If we obey the injunction of the apostle, and whether we eat or drink, or whatever we do, do all to the glory of God, we will cheerfully give heed to the laws that govern our physical organization;—be faithful to the trust committed to us, and so live that we can thankfully receive the beautiful things so freely strewn along our pathway by our Father's loving care.

Are we so living that, in presenting our bodies a living sacrifice, we may expect it will be said, "Well done good and faithful servant?" Are we being prepared for a place in God's building, or for the hay, wood and stubble the great day? If we are God's children, heirs of God and joint heirs with Jesus Christ to an eternal inheritance, we have no right to ignore any law that comes from God. A great many are very strict in every moral law, but think the physical laws of very little consequence. But the physical laws are made by the Creator, and are his laws, as well as those which refer to our moral nature and work in unison to make a harmonious whole, and we have no right to say by our actions, we will heed those that we choose to, and pass by the rest and call them non-essential. God has no non-essential. If by disregarding His laws, we become diseased in body and mind, unfit by our example to be witnesses for God; sinning and suffering,—knowing what is right, but permitting our appetites to rule to our injury,—how can such a sacrifice be holy and acceptable to God? I do think it is high time that we, as a people who are looking for the return of our absent Lord, were waking up in this matter, and trying to learn how to obey every law that comes from the Creator. Cultivate a spirit of filial love and obedience in every act, crucify self-love, have an eye single to the glory of God, and with prayerful trust in God, resist every temptation. Perhaps we have so often yielded that the struggle will be long and hard; but, if we remain true, our trial will be succeeded by a cloudless day of eternal glory. The prize is great; win the Kingdom of God and His righteousness forever.

The sky presents a variety of phenomena from which, by careful observation, we may learn when to expect showers and storms. There is nothing more common than for people to regard the tokens in the sky and take observations respecting the weather: especially, if they have important business to do which might be unfavorably affected by a change; or if they anticipate a pleasure dependent upon its condition. Jesus said, "When ye see a cloud rise out of the west, straightway ye say, There cometh a shower; and so it is. And when you see the south wind blow, ye say, there will be heat! And it cometh to pass." The Mediterranean Sea lay to the west of Palestine, and a cloud rising in that quarter showed the accumulation of vapor, and indicated a shower. Elijah understood this, when from the top of Carmel his servant saw the little cloud, like a man's hand, rising out of the sea, and giving warning to Ahab of an abundant rain, he escaped to Jezreel before it began. The Desert of Arabia lay south of Palestine, and a wind from that quarter was accompanied with heat. Knowing this, the inhabitants could use means to exclude the hot air from their dwellings. It was something to understand these signs and to profit by them. But a more important science was that of knowing the signs of the times to which they gave no heed, incurring the censure, "Ye hypocrites, ye can discern the face of the sky and of the earth; but how is it that ye discern not this time." It was the time of their visitation, and the concluding period of their national trial, which, on account of their culpable ignorance and unworthy conduct, was about to terminate in their national overthrow, and the destruction of their city and polity. Their lack of discernment arose from their sensuality and pride. Their unbelief was occasioned by their self-righteous formality, worldly-mindedness and hypocrisy. It was not for want of means that they were deficient in knowledge. The word of God and the ordinance of religion were theirs. It was not from any natural defect that they were so stupid. They were intelligent beings, and capable of understanding; but their hearts had waxed gross, their ears were dull of hearing and their eyes they had closed, so that they could not see nor hear nor understand. The doom could be averted only by repentance towards God and faith in Christ: but they had made themselves incapable of repenting or believing. Yet they were inexcusable. The fault was their own.

In the ordinary business of life, men are generally disposed to compromise differences, which, if pushed to a legal result, might end in ruin. A prudent man avoids danger by timely precaution. He makes peace with his adversary before matters come to the worst. We should bring the same prudence to bear on spiritual and eternal things which are of the greatest importance. We are called to the kingdom and glory of God, and urged to make instant preparation for that future state. Preparation can be made only in this life. We must work while it is called to-day; the night cometh when no man can work.

We must get ready and keep ready that whether we live or die we may be found of Christ in peace at his coming: for he will come again to ransom his saints from death and glorify them with himself. We know not the day of his coming yet there are signs which indicate its approach. It will come as a thief in the night upon a careless and indifferent world. It will take them by surprise. It will fall upon them as a snare. But if we watch and wait for it, it will not overtake us as a thief. Let us observe the signs of the times. There is a specialty in the times in which we live. We seem to be approaching some great crisis. What is it? It may be that the Lord is near. Are there no signs to indicate that the day of the Lord draweth nigh? Enough to excite in many minds apprehensions of some fearful overturnings of society in both church and state. Enough to enforce the Savior's admonition to watch. Watch, therefore, for ye know not the day or the hour when the Lord cometh.—Prophetic Times.

"He that believeth and is baptized shall be saved, but he that believeth not shall be damned."

The conjunction "and" joins an active and passive verb; hence the "he" is active in the one and passive in the other. If passive, has the "he" any part to act in this passive further than to receive it? If this is settled as being passive, can water have anything to do with it in this connection? Does it not open the channel of ideas that believing is a progressing and increasing work, until that which we believe overwhelms, covers, immerses us? In this last we are passive, though in the first, the believing, we are active.

Again, if the belief is less than sufficient to thus immerse, it is short of salvation or life giving, when carried to this extent. Let us call this the quickening (in the idea of gestation) "You hath he quickened," etc. Now again, "He shall not be quickened who believes not." Of course he gets no baptism covering overwhelmings in the passive. Yet further in this same light of quickening. If he falls short of it, he is not quickened, and therefore falls short of life, or is a failure, or is damned.

In disciplining the nations, the apostles evangelized or announced the word or words of Jesus, which are also the words of God—"The words which I speak unto you, they are spirit (force) and they are life." John vi. 63. Believing into these words is believing into Jesus who is the life, who is also the Father, and we in him, by believing into him. "By grace (the antidote to sin) we are saved" or have life. Being in him who ministers grace, (the high priest) we are baptized, overwhelmed, immersed (passive) and thus quickened (embryollically) and shall be saved, have life, or be of the good seed and children of the resurrection.

The Genealogy of Jesus.

A CORRESPONDENT ANSWERED.

To the Editor of the Chicago Tribune.]

CHICAGO, May 13.—Your correspondent, "W.," in last Sunday's "Tribune," asks of Charles H. Reed three questions touching the genealogy of Jesus. Last Mr. Reed should not have the time or disposition to answer the questions, I offer "W." the following explanation, compiled mainly from the annotations of several old Biblical critics, who have long ago examined into, and, I think, satisfactorily settled, the point raised by "W." We will take up the questions in their order:

First—Inasmuch as Matthew declares the genealogy of Joseph from Solomon, while Luke traces it from Nathan, the brother of Solomon, which of these accounts, if either, is inspired?

Both are correct, if we except the names of three Kings omitted from Matthew's list, according to the authorized list, but evidently through a clerical error made in translating Matthew's Gospel from the Hebrew, in which it was written, into the Greek; the name Ahaziah in the Hebrew—or Och-Ozias in the Greek—the son of Joram, having been confounded with Azariah in the Hebrew—or Ozias in the Greek—the fourth from Joram. In like manner, and probably from a like cause, the name Jehoiakim, the son of Josias, and the father of Jechonias (see 1 Chron. iii. 15, 17), appears to have been omitted from the eleventh verse of the third chapter of Matthew. It does not follow, however, that divine inspiration was required in making up the genealogy by either Evangelist, as the opening chapters of the first book of Chronicles gave them all the information they required as to the earlier names, and the later ones the Israelitish tribal relationship and pride of ancestry possessed by each family would easily enable them to secure. The point of both genealogies, however, is to prove his lordship by both lines of descent to the Throne of David, and his ability to fulfill the predictions recorded in Luke i. 32, 33; Isaiah ix. 6, 7; and Ezekiel xxi. 27.

Second—Of what consequence is the genealogy of Joseph, since he was not the father of Christ, and how does his descent from David show that Christ was "of the seed of David"?

Much, in the eyes of the Jew; and we must remember that Matthew's Gospel was first written in Hebrew (eight years after the ascension of Jesus), and primarily to the Jewish Church, there being at that time no Gentile Church (the translation into the Greek was not made until thirty years later). By the Mosaic law, the wife and her children became heirs in due course to the inheritance of the husband (witness the story of Ruth and Boaz,) and thus Jesus in this way, if in no other, became heir to whatever inheritance Joseph had in the Throne of David.

Third—If the genealogy of Christ, on the human side, was of any consequence, why was it not traced through Mary, who was really his mother?

It is traced through Mary in the genealogy given by Luke. While the lineage described by Matthew is traced, for the reasons given, from David, through Solomon, to Joseph, that described by Luke (written A. D., 63, mainly for the benefit of the then numerous Gentile churches and addressed to a Greek Bishop) is traced through Nathan, another son of David, to Heli, the father of Mary, thus showing the Gentile churches, first, that Luke at least did not believe that Jesus had any nearer, legally, unto ancestor than his grandfather Heli, and, second, that though the lineage be traced back through the legally line of the mother, it still points to Jesus as a true inheritor of the Throne of his father David; and "W." will doubtless remember that the point that the Messiah must be the son of David is made a strong one by the Pharisees themselves, and is frequently incidentally alluded to by Luke. According to the received tradition of the Jews, incorporated into their Talmud (which national testimony there can be no good reason for calling in question,) Heli was the father of Mary, and as it was the custom of the nations then, including the Jews, not to admit the names of females into their genealogies, the name of Mary is omitted, and the next male in the line, Heli, his grandfather, is taken. The discrepancy between this statement and that of Luke iii. 23 is only an apparent and not a real one. To take the verse as it stands, one might reasonably argue that Luke stated that Jesus was (as well as was supposed to be) the son of Joseph, and it is certain the translators did not intend it to be so understood. The difference in the order of the words in the oldest copy of the manuscript (with probably one exception,)—the Vatican copy,—and in the later copies from which the received text is taken, reveals the error inveterated in the latter. The Vatican copy of the Greek reads thus: on loulos hos enomizeto tou Joseph, tou Eli, or, strictly translated "being the son, while he was supposed of Joseph, of Heli," or more freely translated, being the Son of Heli, although he was supposed to be of Joseph. The "son" here answers equally as well as a Hebrewism for grandson or of a direct kin in the same sense in which he is called the "Son of David;" the mother's name being ignored. GEORGE F. WORK.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....May 26, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

—We hope there will be a general gathering at our June meeting at Antioch. Let all come who can do so. See the notice in this issue.

—We are to spend next Sunday in Harvard, Ill., our old home, and where we preached for twelve years. We hope to meet many of our old friends at this meeting.

—Brother J. T. Prime has located at West Irving, Iowa. He writes us that he expects hereafter to give his whole time to the work of the ministry. We trust the brethren will stay up his hands, and that success will crown his labors in the Gospel of Christ.

—There was one addition to the Plymouth congregation on Sunday last. Our society is gradually gaining, and we hope ere long to see a goodly number join us. Our Sunday School is increasing in interest and we expect that much good will be done by this means.

—We have just published a new tract, entitled The Ancient Gospel, written by brother Wiley Jones of Norfolk, Va. It is very clear and tersely written. They can be had at this office or from the author. Price three cents per copy or 30 cents per dozen.

—Bishop McCloskey, of New York, who was recently confirmed as a cardinal, was made the recipient of a diamond cross, worth $20,000. This, certainly, cannot be the cross spoken of by our Savior—"If any man will come after me, let him deny himself and take up his cross and follow me."

—Brother Halstead closed an interesting discussion with a Methodist clergyman at Dundee, Ind., recently. The debate was conducted in a kindly spirit and much good will result from the investigation. The subject was upon the points of difference between us and the generally received views of the churches.

—We call the attention of our readers to the excellent appearance of the RESTITUTION this week. It is now printed on new type, which greatly improves it. The old type was so badly worn that it was almost impossible to do a good job of press-work. Our printers, Messrs. MCDONALD & GENDES, are both practical men, and deserve much credit for their excellent taste in the selection of material for our new dress. This improvement is rendered doubly pleasant in view of the fact that it is done without any additional cost to the Association.

—Long articles as a rule are never read, and it is a standing mystery to us to know why some brethren will persist in sending us articles which are so long that we cannot publish, without cutting them into two or more articles, and then they are so constructed that this cannot be done without destroying their sense. We have articles before us which are as long as St. Mark's Gospel, and yet brethren wonder why they do not appear. We would gladly publish these communications but they are too long! We must not try to say everything in one article. We hope our correspondents will try and give us their thoughts in short, spicy articles, and do, for the sake of the printer, write so that your words can be read. Some of our manuscripts present the appearance of having been written on horseback. Give us your thoughts in good, plain language and write only on one side of the paper, and stop when you get through.

The Flaming Sword.

The sword is an emblem of war. Sometimes of power. It gleams in the hands of conquerors but sleeps in the sheath of the conquered. Men have pushed their claims forward at the sword's point, they have hewed down armies and won their way to imperial thrones. But it is written: "He that killeth with the sword must be killed by the sword." The world's history is a full confirmation of this adage.

When man had sinned and proved disloyal to his God, he was driven from Paradise to till the ground. War was declared against sin, and the man was made to feel that his treason was to be resisted. The flaming sword was the sentinel which guarded the tree of life. The cherubim and sword of fire or flame were heaven's barriers against the culprit. As long as sin remains, as long as death reigns, so long will the sword be drawn out to vindicate the Word of God.

But beyond the reign of war and battle, there rises an age of peace. Then the swords shall be beaten to plow shares and the spears to pruning hooks. The clarion will not be heard in the realms of life, and when the gates of Paradise are open once more, no flaming sword shall guard the sacred entrance. But angel voices shall welcome the redeemed, and on the bright plains of an earth made new, the tidings of victory over all foes, shall ring in the songs of salvation unto our God. Star-crowned kings, white-robed princes with golden sceptres shall come with the nations of them that are saved to the eternal city, where the day shall be forever, and the glorious Christ shall reign King of kings, in the sweep of eternal years, over a world made new.

Meetings in Goodland.

On Saturday the 15th inst, we took the train for Goodland, where we were to speak the next day. Before leaving the office we were introduced, by brother Chaplin, to a Christian minister by the name of Whitman, who took the same train and accompanied us as far as Miller's Station. Mr. Whitman brought up the subject of hell as a pleasing theme for conversation. He was anxious for us to hear his view of this much talked of and much dreaded place. This clergyman claims to be far in advance of most men on this subject, and goes so far as to say that there may a certain kind of rejoicing in hell! Wicked men will feel as much at home in hell as the saints will in heaven. It was rather amusing to us to hear this somewhat novel view of a place that has been looked upon as the abode of misery and wickedness only. Mr. Whitman was also free to inform us that the devil was bound during the time Christ was on earth; and that the one thousand years was only an indefinite period of time.

In the light of his position we asked him to explain Paul's language: "Wherefore we would have come unto you, even I Paul, once and again but Satan hindered us." 1 Thess. ii. 18. Our friend stated that this meant evil principles, etc. So it seems that Satan himself is bound, but his principles are yet loosed Strange logic this! Whether the devil is personal or impersonal one thing seems certain, that whatever was called devil in the days of the apostles was active in opposition to the truth, and gave no indications of wearing a chain. Paul wore the chain at Rome, and the saints were martyred for their faith in Christ. And yet all this took place after the devil was bound! Such a theory carries with it its own refutation. We hope our friend may yet understand the way of the Lord more perfectly.

We reached Goodland at about two o'clock the next morning, after a tedious ride on a freight train, of nearly all night. The next day we discoursed to the people on the "Bible view of the soul." They were much interested in hearing what we had to say upon this subject. The pastor of the M. E. church at this place had been discoursing for sometime upon the immortality of the soul. Brother Stafford is zealous for his theory but not having a "thus saith the Lord" to prove that the soul is immortal, he finds it a difficult task. We know how to sympathize with him, as we once believed the same thing. But when we found that the word immortality was nowhere in the whole Bible applied to the soul of man, and that God had declared, "the soul that sinneth it shall die," (Ezek. xviii. 4.) we ceased to believe the theory.

The interest was so great that we remained and preached on Monday evening upon the subject of hell. We took up the general view and showed that it had no place in the plan of God. The large audience present evinced the deepest interest in our expositions of Bible truth, and a number came to us after the meeting and expressed themselves fully satisfied upon the subject. The little band of believers in Goodland are full of hope and are united in their work for Christ. May they all stand firm unto the day of Messiah's coming and kingdom.

On Sunday brother and sister Halstead from Renssalaer, and a number of brethren from Remington were with us. From all directions we hear the Macedonian cry—"Come over and help us." The people are becoming interested in the ancient Gospel, and we long to see more efficient laborers in the field. Let the Word go forth with power. God will bless all those who put their trust in Him.

Kentucky has her centennial this year. One hundred years ago, Richard Henderson purchased from the Indians all of Kentucky south of Kentucky river. One hundred years ago Daniel Boone surveyed it for him. One hundred years ago Boone completed the fort at Boonesborough, Madison county. One hundred years ago his wife and daughter (sweet "boons" to him) came as the first women to Kentucky, and one hundred years ago the first sermon was preached at Big Spring, in Harrodsburg, Kentucky.

The Generations and Prophetical Periods.

We do not give our readers the continuation of our subject, in regular sequence, as anticipated. The writer defers, in order to give the following communication from Brother J. P. Weethee. We commend his article to the careful consideration of all interested in prophetical investigation. His professional standing, literary acquirements, prophetical researches, and historical reading, entitle his opinions to more than ordinary respect. We simply follow his article with some reasons and authorities for our own conclusion, as given in the paper to which our brother alludes.

REVELATION X. 6, 7.

Seeing an article in your excellent paper, giving some thoughts relative to the meaning of the above verses, allow me to express a few thoughts on the same. The book is worthy of close investigation. Truth, like pure metal, shines by use.

Let us investigate, but in kindness. Allow us to examine each other's views, and thus learn. I do not allow myself to found a theory on a false translation. It is building on the sand.

Verse 6 closes with these words:—"ote chronos ouk estai eti"—that time (the) is not yet. Verse 7 reads thus:—"Alla en tais hemerais tes phones tou hebdomou angelou, hotan mellei salpizein, kai etelesthe to mysterion tou Theou, hos euengelisen tous heautou doulous tous prophetas"—but in the days of the voice of the seventh angel, when (while) he shall be about or delay to sound a trumpet, the mystery of God shall be accomplished, as he (with declared by his servants the prophets."

The seventh trumpet has a VOICE as well as a SOUND. Between the close of the events under the sixth trumpet and the sounding of the seventh trumpet, there is a DELAY. That period is called the voice of the seventh angel, Why so denominated is not stated. Its work is the finishing of the mystery of God.

The meaning seems to be this:—The rainbow angel, with a little book open stands. Seven thunders uttered their voices. John was about to write when a voice from heaven said, Seal up those things which the seven thunders uttered and write them not. It is not now the time to make them known—the time is not yet—it is not yet the time. Between the sounding of the sixth and seventh angels there shall be a short delay, called tachus—quickly. Rev. xi. 14.—also the voice of the seventh angel, from the fact that the events of the seventh angel, or perhaps what the seven thunders uttered will be declared to the world. Then may what the seven thunders uttered be unsealed and the book of Daniel also, and all the mysteries connected therewith cleared up and finished. One point remains to be explained:—Does the word mello, translated in our version begin, mean DELAY? Here lies the burthen of proof. This we now propose to establish.

Mello is from mello, to be about, on the point of, to design, intend, be bent upon; to be wont or accustomed; to linger, delay, loiter; procrastinate, defer; to hesitate, demur.—Grove. Parkhurst says thus:—To delay.—Acts xxii. 16. This is the use of the best Greek authors. With an infinitive following, to be about to be, or to do any thing. Matt. ii. 13. Herod WILL seek the young child. Matt. xvi. 27. The Son of Man shall come—what is to come. Matt. iii. 7. Flee from the wrath to come. Matt. xii. 32; Acts xxiii. 28. Lying wait being told me as ABOUT to be. Acts xxiv. 15; Acts xxii. 16. And now why TARRIEST thou. Rev. i. 17. The things which shall be hereafter. Rev. iii. 2. Ready to die. Rev. vi. 11. That should be killed as they were. Rev. viii. 13. Angels which are yet to sound. Rev. x. 4. I was about to write. Rev. xii. 4. Ready to be delivered. Verse 5. Is about to rule all nations. The word is found one hundred and ten times in the New Testament, and means the certainty of some future event—and carries the idea of delay.

J. P. WEETHEE.

MT. AUBURN, OHIO.

Although the conclusion to which Brother Weethee comes, and the rendering of the Greek which he favors, have the support of learned and able translators and expositors, still there is some respectable authority on the side of the writer. John Albert Bengel, a learned writer on the Apocalypse, who wrote on this subject about 1740, considers the Greek term xronos as a prophetic period. It is true that he makes the time designated by it 1111 1-9 years. Of this writer, Dr. A. Clarke gives the following short account: "John Albert Bengel is author of an edition of the New Testament, with various readings, and such a judicious division of it into paragraphs, as has never been equaled, and perhaps can never be excelled. He wrote a very learned comment on the Apocalypse, and short notes on the New Testament, which he entitled, Gnomon Novi Testamenti, in quo ex nativa verborum vi, simplicitas, profunditas, concinnitas, salubritas, sensuum, Calestium indicatur. In him were united two rare qualifications—the deepest piety and the most extensive learning." John Wesley, who had the best of opportunities for acquiring a knowledge of the original language of the New Testament translates the phrase—ote xronos ouk estai eti—"that there shall be no more a time."

Rev. E. Bickersteth translates the phrase—"a time no longer."—See Practical Guide to the Prophecies, p. 140. He differs from Bengel and Wesley in making its duration 800 years, instead of 1111 years.

These writers all employ the commonly received Greek Text. For this Dr. Bloomfield says "there is little or no authority (scarcely more than Erasmus' one wretched MS.) and internal evidence is against it; since it seems to have been an alteration made to effect the sense contained in our Common Version." Accordingly Bloomfield edits the reading—ou xronos eiste eteti—The most literal translation of this emendation is—That (a) time no more shall be.

Griesbach edits this phrase in the same manner as Bloomfield; and also gives an authority for the reading—ouketi estai o chronos mou—which literally rendered would be: "That there shall no more be another time." It is fair to say that Bloomfield favors the idea of delay, but he says: "This sense of delay cannot, I think, be proved to exist, as they imagine in the word xronos. It should rather seem to rest on the tense, which is probably used provincially for tarries." How he deduces "delay" from a form of the verb that signifies "shall be" is more than I can understand.

David N. Lord renders the words in question—"That the time shall not be yet." Others concur in this rendering. We thus give our readers both sides. In a future paper, we shall have a little more to say on this in connection with Daniel's prophecies.

S. A. G.

What a Friend We Have.

"If God be for us, who can be against us? He that spared not His own Son; but delivered Him up for us all, how shall He not with Him, freely give us all things."—Rom. viii. 31-32.

When a man is surrounded with enemies, with not a friend to help him, how must his heart be gladdened at the sight of one who declares that he is on his side, and will stand by him. Like David and Jonathan, their souls will become knit together as one. This is the position we were in—enemies of the worst description surrounded us on every hand; there was "no eye to pity, and no arm to save," when suddenly God's eye pitied, and his arm saved us. He declared Himself on our side, and gave His own Son as a sacrifice for us. He even loved us to the degree of adoption into His own family as sons. Well might the poet exclaim:

Behold the amazing gift of love
The Father hath bestowed
On us, the sinful sons of men,
To call us sons of God!"

But do we realize, brethren, the full force of this expression, that God is for us? Do we attribute to it a meaning that applies to the future age only? If so, it seems to me that we fall far short of what is intended. Does it not mean that he is for us now and evermore? This would teach us to look upon Him as a God present, and not future only—as a God nigh, and not far off. I think there are many testimonies that will bear out this idea. For instance, the following from Heb. xiii. 5-6: "Let your conversation (conduct) be without covetousness; and be content with such things as ye have; for He hath said, I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee. So that we may boldly say, the Lord is my helper, and I will not fear what man shall do unto me."

This exhortation of the apostle Paul is right in point. He warns us against a covetous disposition, and declares that we must be content with such things as we have. "But," replies one, "I cannot be content with what I have got, it is not sufficient to keep me in years to come." Oh, this is the reasoning of worldlings; but true Christians will trust God, who has said, "I will never leave thee, nor forsake thee." They will regard Him as a God at hand, who will supply our present needs. And when I say our needs, I do not mean more than what the apostle Paul includes in his list when he says, "having food and raiment let us therewith be content." There are many things used nowadays by men, and those that call themselves Christians, that cannot be classed under the head of food or raiment. Tobacco, snuff, liquors, and many other superfluities, are not food. We might name many articles of adornment also, that are used on our persons, that cannot be regarded as raiment. The word raiment signifies a covering, clothing. Our needs truly are very few, but our desires are almost unlimited. It is the supplying of the needless things that causes so much anxiety, and taxes the energies and pockets of those who are not content. Depend upon it, brethren, it will be safer to obey the injunction of the apostle, than to disregard it. If we can exercise faith sufficient, it will bring us into closer relationship to God, and we shall not fear. It is the lack of this faith that makes us fear, and the presence of fear urges us on in the direction of the world. Let us practically realize that God is for us, now, and fear will depart. Comfort will come; a sweet peace and a calm confidence will possess our souls, that will be a rich possession, compared with the anxiety and constant fear of those who trust in themselves and not in God.

And if we put our trust in God, up to the end, manifesting it every day in our conduct, what will be the result? We are told that God who is for us, will, with Christ, "freely give us all things." I like that word "freely." It is characteristic of the giver. His hand opens wide toward those that put their trust in Him. He will freely give to them all things. This covers everything. "All things are yours," says Paul. What richest what bountiful supplies! what stores of glory! The utmost stretch of our imagination can grasp but the outer edge of it.

In conclusion, brethren, let us try to live out the precepts of Christ, and the teaching of His apostles. Do not let us try to quiet our consciences by applying them to the early church, and not to ourselves, as some do. What was for their good, will prove to be for ours also. The commandments of Christ apply to all, and not a part only. Do not be afraid of doing too much for Christ, of keeping too many of His commandments, or of observing them too literally. Better be found erring in our efforts to observe, than in our efforts to spiritualize away the meaning of His words. Let us not fear man, but the fear of God should always be present. "If God be for us, who can be against us."

Eternal and Everlasting.

The words eternal and everlasting occur about 130 times in the Old and New Testaments. Some 40 times these words are found in connection with the word life; and all but one passage, (Dan. xii 2.) are found in the New Testament. There is no difference in the signification of eternal and everlasting, as they are both translated from the same Greek word, and are used interchangeably. It is generally understood, and the dictionaries define, that eternal means, endless, ceaseless, and perpetual. That this is the true meaning in some passages we admit, as for instance, when applied to the Creator, "the eternal God is my refuge;" "from everlasting to everlasting thou art God;" now to the living eternal, (or "of the ages as the original is) be honor," &c.; but the same term is connected with created things of limited duration,—as hills, mountains, habitations, doors, chains, fire, light, glory, Gospel, house priesthood, &c.; hence, we conclude that these terms do not essentially imply that which is endless or unlimited in duration. We cannot find this meaning in the original word aeons, aionias, the adjective form of the word aeon, aion, an age. The word aionios cannot very well be translated into English; the nearest approach that we can give is age-lasting—pertaining to, or enduring for an age. As the word is derived from the name aion, signifying age, it must have a similar signification. An age may be of any length, from that of the insect of a day to that of three score years and ten of a man—from the flower of a few months to the giant of the forest of thousands of years.

The Mosaic dispensation had its aions or ages, consisting of jubilees, occurring every fifteen years; this is sometimes called the Gospel dispensation or age; and the "dispensation of the fullness of times" is styled the age to come, (rather ages to come.—T. W. W.)

Of the same class and having a similar signification, are the phrases "FOREVER AND FOREVER AND EVER," which occur over 200 times in both Testaments. There are over 100 passages in the Greek New Testament where aion occurs in its singular and plural form.

Sometimes the word is translated in the common version, ever, forever, never, forever and ever world, worlds, course twice, eternal and once ages (twice, ages, Eph. ii. 7; Col. i. 2.—T. W. W.) The true and uniform rendering ought to be age or ages. And if that had been the translation given so that the readers of the scriptures had become familiar with its use, instead of the various significations given them would have been a better understanding of the words of the Holy Spirit. The words ever and forever, so frequently used, better convey the idea of endless duration, which the translators evidently had derived from their creeds, than if literally translated age, and so they warped the word to suit their theology. But the fact is, that it matters little whether we take the word aion or aionios, the radical idea is an age or the duration of an age, according to that with which it is connected or applied, whether past, present, or to come.

ETERNAL OR EVERLASTING LIFE. The word aionios is found in connection with the word life in the New Testament some 45 times as a qualifying term, and shows that the life spoken of, is to be possessed or enjoyed in some particular age referred to. Here it is called age-lasting life, or life of the ages. Theologians of the sectarian order generally speak of the world to come or the state upon which the soul enters at death, as the eternal world, or eternity which they describe as an ocean without a shore,—an unfathomable depth,—a limitless expanse,—and duration without an end. And, as according to their Platonic notions, the soul is immortal when it enters upon its eternal state, happiness or misery must be enjoyed or endured without the possibility of a termination. This we are glad to know is only foolishness. The Scriptures teach a different doctrine, and are more in harmony with the Divine attributes. The life and the Gospel is the life of the age to come, and the Gospel which reveals it is "glad tidings of the kingdom of God." The salvation promised is a deliverance from condemnation or death. This is equivalent to a promise of life. Hence we read in 1 John ii. 25, "This is the promise which He has promised us, even eternal life," or life in the age to come. And again, "He that believeth on the Son hath (by promise) aionion or age-life; and he that believeth not the Son, shall not see life (in the age); but the wrath of God abideth on him," (in the age.—T. W. W.) John iii. 36. "The wrath of (God" here spoken of, is the sentence of death under which mankind is placed by reason of sin. The believer is delivered from this curse, and is "passed from death unto life"—that is future life, to be possessed in the age to come. * * * There are many passages which speak of this future life, where the simple word, life, is only used without any qualifying word. But in nearly every case the context shows that eternal life is meant. For instance—"I am come that they might have life;" "if thou wilt enter into life, keep the commandments;" "and that believing, ye might have life," &c. These are only a few out of many texts, which clearly show that the present life is not meant at all, but that life which comes through Him who is the "resurrection and the life."

We copy the above, for we deem it very good and correct in the main. The same writer says in the appendix to his translation of the New Testament, called the Diaglott, which of course from the nature of the locality, stands more defiant to criticism. Eternal or everlasting, as generally understood, is an improper translation of aionios; in fact, we have no proper equivalent in the English language. Being an adjective derived from aion age, it cannot go beyond its meaning. We are glad to be able to find the above important concessions from the classic pen of Brother B. W. They cannot pass without weight and influence in this and all countries where he is known. A Campbell in his debate with Skinner on these terms, concedes about the same when he says, that as we know the last aionia rendered forever, has the same force or expresses the same duration in connection with a verb as the adjective aonios aionios, rendered eternal and everlasting, has in connection with a substantive. They are only different forms of phraseology to express the same thing. The former is an adverbial phrase with aion (age) in construction with the preposition eis, and is used to modify a verb; while the latter is simply the adjective form of aion and is used to modify a noun. Then in any context we can change either of the expressions to the other and preserve the true meaning of the language. "Everlasting or eternal (aionios) life" is exactly equivalent to "life for the age" (eis ton aiona). "He that eateth the bread which came down from heaven, shall live for the age" (eis ton aiona) can be changed to "he that eateth the bread which came down from heaven, shall have eternal (aionios) life," and vice versa.

Now, from the foregoing, we deduce the following very legitimate conclusions, to-wit:

1. As eternal (aionios) life is simply life for the age, it cannot be proven to be endless life unless it first be proven that the age (aion) to come is an endless age. And everything else, such as —punishment, distinction, wrath, &c., modified by the same word must be limited to the same time.

2. If the age to come is proven to be endless, it must be done independent of all lexicons and lexicographers, for they furnish no more proof for the endless duration of that age (aion) than they do for any other age; for they do not treat the word theologically, but etymologically.

3. The age to come cannot be endless for not only do the Scriptures speak of the age, but also of the ages to come. We are willing to admit, however, that the promise of eternal life or life for the age to come, may give ground for a legitimate inference that the life of those spoken of will be endless. But it is only an inference. If one who knows and whose word was good, should tell me I would live a thousand years, from my knowledge of human life I would very likely infer endless life from the intelligence; for the same miraculous power that could change my nature so as to extend my life a thousand years would cause me, at least, to hope that I would be preserved for all time. But, suppose he should tell me I would rest in the silent slumber of death for a thousand years, it would not be equally as consistent to infer the endless duration of that state.

The endless duration of the saints is not to be predicated only from the very doubtful and equivocal phrases eternal and everlasting life; but from the positive and unequivocal statements of the Holy Scriptures that they shall "put on immortality," that "they shall die no more" and that "there shall be no more death."

4. The age to come is the dispensation to follow this one expressed in symbolic Revelation, as "A THOUSAND YEARS" to live in which time the saints are raised to life before it begins, while the "rest of the dead live not again until the thousand years be fulfilled."

5. Hence all those passages of Holy Writ placing the saint and sinner in contrast—the one as obtaining eternal life or life in the age, and the other not obtaining it cannot be construed to arrest anything concerning either after the time spoken of, or in the ages to follow.

"These shall go away into everlasting punishment, but the righteous unto life eternal" asserts nothing about either after the age to come. "The wages of sin is death (for the age), but the gift of God is eternal life, or life for the age" has no application to the ages that are to follow. "He that sows to the flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption (for the age), and he that sows to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting, or life for the age," is only to be applied in harmony with the plain Bible doctrine, that in the age to come the children of God shall live because "accounted worthy" of it, while the "remaining ones of the dead ones" live not in the thousand years, but "reap corruption" for the age.—Gospel Banner, Selected by T. W. Woodrow.

What a Misplaced Comma Did.

The comma (,) that little dot which is a very insignificant thing to the eye, sometimes plays an important part in language. Though the rules for its use, like its relatives, are somewhat obscure, nevertheless its function in some cases is very clear and of considerable moment, as has been discovered in a law of Congress passed in 1872. In the tariff bill which went into effect that year there was a large addition to the free list, and among the articles added were "fruit plants, tropical and semi-tropical," designed to encourage their importation and cultivation. But in the process of engrossing or transcribing the bill to be officially printed, a comma was interpolated between fruit and plants, whereby all fruits were put on the free list. The customs officers, if they "minded their p's and q's," did not mind the comma, and went on collecting the duties. At length some lynx-eyed importer discovered the comma, and demanded that it should be recognized, and customs officers had to stand on the order of Prosody and pass fruit free. The result has been that about $3,000 has been illegally collected through this interpolated comma, at which Uncle Sam will have to stop and count more than one, and refund. The Ways and Means Committee will report a bill to expunge the comma, and thus remand fruit back to the list of dutiable articles. This will prove a most expensive comma.

Through a Glass Darkly.

I cannot see—the light is dim;
But yet I feel that all is well
And that the soul that leans on Him
May always have Him near.

I do not know—the cloud is dark
That hides from me His guiding hand;
But I will trust it leadeth me
Toward the better land.

My limbs are weak—my feet are slow,
I never feel lively too and fro-gual,
Unless I take the dear Lord's staff
Who loveth so my soul.

Who loveth so my soul—and yet
When on my good heart's little force,
That I have yet one spark of faith
His tender mercy proves.

I know not where in place my feet,
Except the Day-Star shine for me;
Lord be my faith that line of light
That leadeth to Thee.

MRS. M. P. A. CROSBY.

What is Mind.

In perusing some back numbers of the RESTITUTION, my eye rested on one, dated Nov. 15, 1874, in which was an article with the above heading, signed G. F. Gelletey, in which the writer says, (to begin with) "It is sometimes painful, sometimes very amusing to hear the different answers given to this much agitated question, and the idea suggested itself to me to add to the many attempts at definition, my humble opinion." So far I agree with the writer, word for word; and for the same reason would add my humble opinion.

The writer gives us two quotations from Good's "Book of Nature," viz: "The essence of mind or soul," and "Is the essence of the human soul material or immaterial?" To these quotations, Brother G. finds two objections: the first is, "Is his confounding the terms mind and soul, and the second is, the idea of an essence of mind." I object to both terms and to the objector's objections; for both seem equally in error. What is mind? Is "this much agitated question." It is like the chemical elements of matter, undefinable; for instance, what is iron? The question itself puts an answer at defiance. All we know of it except its name is its properties, qualities, combinations with other things, and its uses. So of mind, a simple element of its qualities, effects, etc.

Brother G. complains of Dr. Wood for "confounding mind with soul." Can Brother G. separate them? Can soul exist independent of mind? What would soul be without a mind? There is such a thing as mental action none will doubt. But the soul can act only by the impulse of mind; there is, therefore, no confounding mind with soul, or separating them.

So the Doctor's theory would unite two things that never were but one; and Brother G's theory would separate two things that never were but one; and my theory will not divide or unite any indivisable thing.

What then is the human mind? It is not matter, but it cannot exist independent of matter; like gravitation, it is not matter; but it cannot exist independent of matter.

It has its qualities; in it we find all the human passions; love, hate, fear, etc., and a mysterious power. Suppose a medium sized man to weigh 150 pounds: this is the weight of so much matter, the same as if it was a stone. but the stone has no power within itself; but the living man has. He moves his 150 pounds of matter, to a limited extent, by the power of his will. Now why cannot the stone do the same?

Because the stone has no living mind. And as mind and soul are but one, if there are living minds, there may be dead ones, and we have the warrant of Scripture that there are living souls and dead souls; consequently, living minds and dead minds, as we will soon show.

In the living man the mind is connected with matter by a still more mysterious link, called life; or more philosophical, the electro vitatis. But when that link is broken, the connection ceases; the mind is dead, the will is powerless and the body of the man has no more power within itself to move itself than the stone. Therefore, as the living mind cannot exist independent of matter, it is utterly impossible for the dead to communicate with the living; else there is no such thing as death.

But mind, will, and action, are but one and the same thing, and when "set so justly true," constitute what is called reason which runs through all created things, and is stamped on every particle of matter, notwithstanding man boasts of being the only rational creature on earth. This is a fact which ought to be better known than it is. The question at issue is, What is mind? Brother G. answers: "Mind is nothing. It is an attribute, not a thing; nor an accumulation of things. You may have the essence of ginger; but ginger is something from which essence may be extracted. But mind is an attribute or power of the brain." . . Grant it; then the essence of ginger possesses the attributes of ginger, and the essence of matter is mind; for according to Brother G. mind is the essence of brain. And brain is matter; therefore, mind is the essence of matter. Now let us see if it is not even so. The whole brute creation is but matter, and the whole is possessed of mind, will, and action, by nature "set so justly true" as to constitute, in some degree, what is called reason in man, and in many cases a degree above the reason of man.

Man is able to provide himself with all the natural wants of life, and so are beasts, birds, fishes and insects. Brutes possess all the passions of men, love, hate, connubial affections, tyranny etc. Man takes a parental care over his own offspring. The pious mother folds her young and tender infant to her bosom from which it receives a due degree of warmth. She wraps it up in blankets to protect it from the cold, damp air. So does the equally pious hen gather her brood under her wings for the same reasonable purpose. Brutes generally take a provident care over their young, and are ready to defend them by force; or stratagem from approaching danger. Nor does this universal mind of matter stop in animated beings; or rather, should we not say, what form of matter is not animated?

In vegetables the rudimental seeds exist while in blossom. Some of these cannot bear the scorching rays of the sun; and to protect them, the mother vegetable wraps them up in the morning in her petals and sepals. These are her baby-blankets, used with the same degree of reason as the Christian mother uses hers. In other vegetables, the infant seeds cannot bear the cold, damp air of night. These the mother plant wraps up at evening with the same kind of blankets. Some plants of the Helianthus genera require all the light and heat of the sun to protect their infant seeds. In this case, the Helianthus mother, from morning till night, turns her young brood in the blossom to the sun. At night the blossom is presented to the west; in the morning to the east. How does the mother plant know which way the sun is going to rise; or whether her infants can, or cannot bear the light of the sun? Plants are impregned with the one electro vitatis which pervades all matter, and is alike in all to a greater or less extent, and sufficient in every form of matter, to supply its wants.

All brute animals seek their food according to the wants of their respective natures, as wisely as man who boasts of doing it by the dictates of human reason. And so do plants. The grazing herds will leave the coarse, sour grass of swampy lands to feed on dryer places, where the grass is sweeter and more nourishing. Man will leave his coarse and dry hoe-cake for roast beef and plum-pudding. And plants will do the same. In a poor soil place a quantity of rich manure, or bone dust near the roots of a young plant and immediately the roots will run into it. It is said that an apple tree planted near the grave of Roger Williams, in Providence, R. I., sent a root into the body and four limbs of the once living man. This is very natural. The barbarous cannibal will eat what he likes best, which is human flesh. No wonder then that uneducated vegetables should be tainted with cannibalism.

Now which possesses an intelligent mind, the plant the brute or the man? The fact is, the intelligence exists in the electro vitatis, the talent germ of life which prevades every form of matter from a grain of sand to Sir Isaac Newton; for all are of the dust and all return to dust again. Nor does the electro vitatis sleep in the dust. Crystals are made up of exceedingly minute particles of matter, so united as to form regular bodies, "originated by a certain number of plain and smooth surfaces." They are of various forms; and the process of crystallization seen by means of a solar microscope wonderfully displays the talent life of matter, under consideration.

A single drop of a menstruum, holding in it the substance dissolved, and being magnified hundreds of diameters, exhibits a circle several feet in diameter. And as the liquid evaporates, the infinitesimals of matter are seen coming together, turning over and around so as to unite in due order to form a perfect crystal.

Now by what law of mind, will and action, do they arrange themselves? Or who is the marshal to arrange them into prisms, rhombs, cubes, and a multitude of other forms? It is the talent principle of life, the electro vitatis, "the promise and potency of life" in every particle of matter. But if we call it chemical affinity or attraction, still the term is as unintelligible as electro vitatis, and more so; for chemical affinity does not always exist between different substances while the former exists in every substance, and all we know of either is their similar results, produced by one cause, or one agent.

Brutes too, besides their faculty of providing for and defending themselves, and their offsprings, possess another, still more wonderful. It is an intuitive knowledge beyond that of man. The musk-rat and the beaver are ahead of our learned astronomers in their foreknowledge of tides and tempest. Even the groveling swine will prepare his retreat before a storm that astronomers know nothing of. The beast is the better physician. He deals only in vegetable medicines, and has never been known to lose a patient. He is the better navigator; he will traverse sea or land, by day or by night with unerring certainty, and that without chart or compass. The bee is the better legislator; for nowhere among men do we find so wise and good a government as in a beehive.

Now we may call this instinct, or reason, just which we please; but if every man had enough of it to make him rational we should not hear authors using such a chaos of words and jumble of terms in answer to the question, "What is Mind"

ANTIOCH DISCIPLE.

Report of Restitution Relief Fund.

DEAR RESTITUTION:

For the information of those who have so nobly and generously responded to the call for help from the grasshopper sufferers; and, also, in behalf of those needy ones, who have shared the benefits of those donations, I submit the following as a brief, but correct report of the receipts and disbursements of the RESTITUTION Relief Fund:

Received from March 6 to May 17, 1875,.....	$532 27
Forwarded to the needy ones, from March 10 to May 17,.....	$340 38
Total amount,.....	532 27

A record is preserved in the RESTITUTION office of the names of all the contributors, with the amount of each one's donation; as also that to whom forwarded. Receipt having been acknowledge through the RESTITUTION each week as the contributions came in, and also a report made, it is not deemed necessary to report the same in detail. No regard was paid to public aid societies, but in every case the money was sent direct to the needy individuals, and, with very few exceptions the receipt of the money sent was acknowledged. Great care was observed in guarding against imposition, and possibly this may not have been wholly avoided, yet circumstances warrant the conclusion that the principal part, if not all, went to worthy and needy ones.

Noble as has been this response of the brethren and sisters of the "household of faith," to their suffering friends; yet want and suffering still continue to a great extent, and much anxiety is felt for the future welfare, of the country scourged by the grasshoppers. Individual aid cannot hold out so long, and if this state of affairs continues, some other plan will have to be adopted for the relief of the suffering. Pestilences, with other multiplied calamities, are prophecied, as signs of the last times," and surely this must be of that number. May the time soon come, when the curse shall be removed, and our earth once more hallowed by the footsteps of our returning Lord, is the earnest prayer of your Brother,

E. K. HARSHILL.

PLEASANTON, IND., May 21, 1875.

Be Kind to the Aged.

Age, when whitening for the tomb, is a worthy object of reverence. The passions have ceased—hopes of self have ceased. They linger with the young, and pray for the young—and O, how careful should the young be to reward them with tender affection and with warmest of love, to diminish the chill of ebbing life! The Spartans looked on reverential respect for old age as a beautiful trait of character. Be kind to those who are in the autumn of life, for you know not what sufferings they may have endured, nor how much of it may still be their portion. Do they seem unreasonably to find fault or murmure? Allow not your anger to kindle against them; rebuke them not, for doubtless many have seen the crosses and trials of earlier years, and perhaps their dispositions, while in the spring-time of life, were less flexable than your own. Do they require aid? Then render it cheerfully. Forget not that the time may come when you may desire the same assistance from others that you render to them. Do all that is needful for the old, and do it with alacrity, and think not hard if much is required at your hands, lest when age sets its seal on your brow, and fills your limbs with trembling, others may wait unwillingly and feel relieved when the coffin has covered you forever.

General Items.

The foreman of a Mississippi grand jury, recently had his pocket picked of $75 by another juror, while they were preparing indictments against thieves.

The New York "Tribune" editorial rooms are on the ninth floor, and when a man comes round to the author of an article, he is told that the elevator is broken. By the time he reaches the sanctum, he can be floored with a penholder.

A Kansas paper says that Indians used to eat dogs, snakes, buzzards, crows—entrails and all—and thought them good; but now, when the government is giving them beef, if it is not up to stall-fed, they want to scalp some one. There is something in the argument.

Col. D. R. Anthony, the editor of the Leavenworth "Times," and postmaster of that city, who was recently shot and dangerously wounded by the editor of a rival paper, has been a prominent leader of the Republican party of Kansas, ever since its organization. He was a brother of Miss Susan B. Anthony.

Mr. S. H. Long, a Chicago merchant, has in his possession a rare curiosity, in the shape of a petrified rattlesnake, measuring twelve feet in length, and showing distinctly the formation of twenty-five rattles and a button. The formation is perfect, and represents a snake in the act of creeping.

Do Boston women chew tobacco? That's the question. Rev. Mr. Lathrop has declared it a fact before the Women's Temperance Union of that city. He not only makes this charge, but, generalizing a little, claims that he can get ten men to leave off chewing, where he can induce one woman to say that she will never more use "the cut" or "sweet navy." Can such things be?

The amendment to the postal laws smuggled through at the close of the last congress for the benefit of the express companies, pans out immensely for those corporations. Under the new rate for third class mail matter, the shipment of bullion from the gold producing regions to Chicago and the East will be taken from the mails and transferred to the express companies, who will be able to exact from shippers three or four times what it cost them before.

Both political parties recognize the fact that Ohio is now the Keystone state as far as politics are concerned, and are organizing for a desperate conflict in October of this year. There are now only four states in which October elections are held, and of these Ohio is the only one that holds an election in October of this year It is therefore in some sense the battle ground of the next presidential election. The result will have a powerful influence not only on the November elections, but may practically decide the contest of 1876.

Boston offers some prodigies in the way of cats. Five kittens were born in one of its suburbs recently, each of which was joined to another after the manner of the Siamese twins. The owner, who had doubtless never heard of Barnum, had them all drowned. At the South end, the Boston "Herald" says, a lady has a kitten, now two months old, which has five heads—one in the usual place and one at each knee joint, on both front and hind legs. The tail grows perpendicularly up from the back, and cannot be bent downward without causing the animal to cry.

The longevity of toads is again under discussion, owing to a discovery made near Orway, Eng. In digging up a garden some workmen unearthed two terra cotta vases, which they at first supposed to contain treasure. On breaking them, however, two live toads were found clad in green velvet. This strange attire showed that they must be at least 200 years old, as an ancient treatise on magic and demonology mentions that at the beginning of the seventeenth century sorcerers dressed no toads in this manner for the accomplishment of certain charms. The same treatise tells the fate of an unlucky citizen of Suissons who babtized a toad, which he had gayly caparisoned for the ceremony, and was burnt alive for the sacrilege.

A curious structure is rapidly rising, or rather, sinking, in England. It is a church designed to accommodate the crowded fishing population in one quarter of the city. Land being difficult to procure, it was determined to build a church under the street. The floor of this underground edifice lies 30 feet below the surface of the road, and is reached by descending a flight of stone steps. In form, the church is a long parallelogram, 132 by 60 feet. The altar is at the north end, opposite the base of the stairs. The structure is to have an organ in the west aisle, which is divided from the nave of the columns of Bath stone. Attached to the church is a vestry-room, also subterranean. The cost of the whole building, £8,000, is borne by a clergyman of Brighton.

Important Statistics.

Inquiries are frequently sent to us respecting the statistics of the liquor traffic in this country. A correspondent of the New York "Evening Post" furnishes the following figures on this subject, claiming to have taken them from official documents.

Statistics showing the amount of money spent in the United States for intoxicating liquors during the year 1870, as taken from official records:

Imported and domestic distilled and spirituous liquors	$1,214,000,000
Brewed and fermented liquors	1,200,000,000
Pure cider and wine	150,000,000
Pure cordial wines	2,000,000
Total	$1,567,000,000

Add to this, $900,000,000, the cost of litigations, crimes, prisons, etc., caused in part by intemperance, and we have for a single year the enormous sum of $1,574,151,895.

The cost of flour and meal was	$500,000,000
The cost of cotton goods	113,000,000
The cost of boots and shoes	200,000,000
The cost of clothing	750,000,000
The cost of woolen goods	60,000,000
The cost of newspaper and job printing	40,000,000
Total	$2,005,000,000

—There were 400,000 more persons engaged in the liquor business in the United States than in preaching the Gospel and school-teaching; and from the effects of intoxicating drinks, 100,000 are annually sent to prisons, 150,000 to drunkards' graves, and 200,000 children are reduced to want. The total number of persons engaged in the business is 500,000 of which 50,000 are employed in making and selling annually 5,833,333 barrels of beer.

It is estimated that the clergy of the United States cost annually $12,000,000; the lawyers, criminals, prisons, etc., $90,000,000; and intoxicating liquors, as before said, $1,488,000,000.

—The key of the book of Job is the key of the whole Bible. In that book we have 1. a perfect man untried; 2. he is tried; 3. he falls; 4. he cries out for a "daysman;" 5. he learns this lesson, "I am vile;" 6. he is accepted; 7. his last estate is better than his first. That is the Bible history of man in epitome.

NOTICE.

We wish to announce through the RESTITUTION, that brother John Foore, of Galesburg, Kan., is expected to hold meetings at the Indianhill schoolhouse, two miles east of Hartford, on Saturday evening before the last Sunday in May and will continue over two Sundays. The brethren here are few members of the one faith, and are showing their faith by their works. We hold meetings every Sunday and have preaching by the writer every two weeks. We number thirty members, and a number of our neighbors who have been to hear us for some time have searched the Scriptures, and now say are with us. Take courage brethren, the glad tidings of the coming kingdom is being gladly received by many.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND H. V. REED

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God. . . . Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-establishment in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish His Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "Our Rest." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can conscientiously assist in its circulation. If he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would convey it to others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

No More Sea.

"And I saw a new heaven and a new earth: for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away; and there was no more sea."—REV. XXI. 1.—Bible Soft Tone.

There shall be no more sea; no wild winds bringing
Their stormy billows to the rocky strand,
With its scant grasses, and pale sea-flowers spring-
ing
From out the barren sand.

No angry wave from cliff and cavern hoary,
To hearts that tremble at its resounding roar;
Breaking on shattered sail and spar the story
Of one who comes no more—
The loved and lost whose steps no more may wander
Where will is one with Love in the new Abiding Gold,
For o'er his fairest where mountains rise beyond her
Along the heavenly wold.

Nor e'er again through misty clouds wending,
To the hushed stillness of the sacred room
By sharp words spoken, who re tell perhaps, Darling,
Forever the dividing sea,
Shall wild-eyed terror leave his awe-struck children gazing
In the gray boulder's single place of grave,
Beyond the low tomb where sleeps his white-haired father,
Yet from the wake of waves.

There shall be no more sea, no surges sweeping,
Over love and youth, and childhood's sunny hair,
Naught of decay and change, nor voice of weeping
Riffle the fragrant air
Of that fair land within whose pearly portal
The golden light falls soft on found and free:
Vexed by no tempest, driven from those shores immortal
Where there is no more sea.

Report of a Discussion.

BEAVER DAM, Wis., May 8, 1875.

BROTHER REED:

I send you as I promised, first a brief report of my debate with Mr. Leavitt at Ft. Atkinson, and then with Mr. Jamison here.

Mr. Leavitt is a young man of talent, now pastor of the Universalist Society at Ft. Atkinson, and highly thought of by his own society, and standing well with all the people generally there. This was his first debate, and under the circumstances, he did extremely well. His position was, however, anomalous and unfortunate to himself. Of course he could only go over the old round of oft exploded arguments in favor of the immortality of the soul, but this he did in a manner quite creditable to himself. The rich man in hell and the spirits in prison gave him no trouble, but he boldly avowed himself a believer in purgatory. Taking the position that matter cannot think and conceding that the lower animals do think, he was of course driven to concede that all sensient creatures are immortal even to the bugs and worms. This he did in right manly style. I will say here that in consequence of his want of familiarity with the subject, and want of experience in debate, I consented to take the affirmative, and lead off with the proofs that man has not an immortal soul, thus working backwards not anticipating what his position in its favor might be. Of course I could safely do this, having perfect familiarity with all the arguments pro and con, and knowing every thing he could say and the positions he must take. This of course would compel him to follow me and examine the negative proofs I offered, but he declined to do so in any legitimate manner, making no effort to solve the many declarations of Scripture favoring our view. Job's testimony he got rid of by saying that it was not inspired. Not that the whole book was not inspired, but only just so much of it as I had quoted, and which clearly taught my doctrine. Moses' account of the creation was passed by as of no importance. The entire testimony of the Old Testament was discredited, as belonging to a dark age. The resurrection of the dead was positively denied, and a spiritual resurrection substituted for it.

The young man in the most illogical manner continually urged that "Christ brought life and immortality to light by the Gospel." I do not think that I succeeded in making him see that this was our position and utterly subversive of his doctrine.

Of course all parties on both sides claim the advantage, as is usual in all such cases. My object however was attained and a new interest is aroused in my own vicinity to investigate these things. I propose hereafter to speak once in two weeks there, or at least as soon as I get through with some extra appointments. One dozen copies of Eyes on the soul was readily sold, and some other books and tracts.

BEAVER DAM, WIS., May 10, 1875.

Discussion with W. F. Jamison, the Spiritualist.

I have just closed this contest for the truth and am satisfied with its results. We debated two questions: 1. That the Bible teaches that the spirits of the dead have communicated with the living, and 2. That the Bible contains a revelation from God.

Mr. Jamison is a shrewd, talented but unscrupulous opponent. He has both skill and ability but no principle in debate.

I will not tire the patience of the readers of the RESTITUTION with recounting the many absurd positions taken by him nor his many changes of front, nor the shocking blasphemies which he uttered during the eight sessions spent in debate. A brief report will suffice to give an idea of the thing.

On the first question he offered four passages of Scripture in support of the proposition. The witch of Endor, on which he spent three evenings. The appearance of Moses and Elias on the Mount. The words of the angel to John. "I am thy fellow servant," etc., and amazing to say, the appearance of Jesus after his resurrection. These were his only proof texts. As to my opposing evidence he paid me the compliment of making not the least attempt to answer, harmonize or even to notice a solitary text or fact, but freely acknowledged that the Bible most clearly teaches our views. Spiritualist-like, he affirmed that the Bible teaches ALL sides of ALL subjects.

As to the second question he paid as little attention to my affirmative arguments on it as to my negative proofs on the other. He spent his time in collecting and commenting on the several difficulties with which the Scriptures abounds. His whole argument was of the same class with the "144 self contradictions of the Bible" so ably answered by sister Reed. He offered no hypothesis to explain the phenomenon of the existence of Judaism and Christianity—if we deny their truth, made no effort to extricate himself from the many dilemmas into which such a denial throws him, would not affirm anything in relation to the matter, only to hold up with all the sarcasm he could command, David's adultery, Solomon's wives, Abraham's lie, God's cruel destruction of the Canaanites, etc. etc., to the end of the chapter.

I was disappointed in him, for I thought from the loud boasts and sneering challenges repeated by him and his friends so constantly, that they had some intention and ability to enter into the merits of the case. However, I think that good will come out of it. A class of people who rarely go to church or read anything but infidel literature have had a chance to hear and see the contrast between the two systems.

REPON, WIS., May 12, 1875.

To-night closes my special contest with W. F. Jamison. Three nights have been spent in the investigation of the following question: Resolved that man has a spirit which exists in a conscious state after the death of the body and communicates with the inhabitants of earth." One more session closes the debate. The debate has been a profitable one for the truth, at least I do not think the time spent in it thrown away. I have had the privilege of presenting the truth on this subject in a clear and connected form to people who never heard it before.

As to Jamison himself, I have found him entirely unscrupulous. His power consists not in reason or facts but in misrepresentation and ridicule. Woe be to the man who falls into his hands with a poor case and a lack of ability to give him as good as he sends. I think with a good cause and the love of Christ in his heart he would be a powerful man, but I cannot help thinking that he is too far gone to be reached by "the power of God unto salvation." He is not only a spiritualist but an infidel. Not only an infidel but an atheist. Hence nothing is gained by debating with him except what may result from the presenting of the truth to those who never have heard. This is the man who debated with Moses Hull and converted him to spiritualism. But I can say from my experience with Jamison that the conversion was previous to the debate, and the debate was only a blind, a mere pretext to furnish a plausible excuse for the change. No man anchored in the truth of man's nature as taught by the Bible could be convinced by the stale arguments, absurdities and insanities—not to say blasphemies of Jamison. One thing more I have learned in these contests with Jamison. The public generally have become heartily disgusted with spiritualism. Its innumerable frauds constantly being exposed, its abominable free-love doctrines and its absolute silliness are bringing it into universal contempt.

Jamison and other prominent advocates of the system publicly acknowledge that ninety-nine-hundredths of its so-called phenomena are "bosh." But the work of spiritism is well done. Its mission was to immortalize modern society with atheism and lust and it has too well succeeded. Looking over the entire ground I am convinced of the startling truth that we in America as in all Europe, are deeply poisoned with the horrible atheism and free-love lust of France before the revolution. There is a deep-seated and growing alienation from God and the restraints of his Word everywhere manifesting itself. So while the silly insanities of spiritualism are being laughed at, its horrible doctrines of infidelity, atheism and free lust are gaining ground everywhere, and seriously threaten to engulf our country and the world.

This is the monster we are called on to meet. And it behooves every lover of God and the Bible to be on the alert. Let all of our preaching brethren everywhere burnish their armor. Let them pest themselves thoroughly if they are not already posted in the modern tactics of the enemy; let them furnish their minds with a perfect familiarity with the innumerable arguments for our glorious faith and be ready always to give an answer to every man that asketh a reason of the hope that is in them with meekness and fear.

Some most excellent books are now appearing from the press in defense of the Bible, which by an arrangement with a Chicago house, I am able to furnish to our brethren at reduced rates. And would urge them to buy and read and be ready to meet the enemy on his own ground. Of course we cannot obtain any book entirely free from defects, but we have learned not to swallow bones, but to carefully pick the meat therefrom. A list will be furnished all who desire by application, enclosing ten cents to pay expenses.

As ever battling for truth,

J. F. WILLCOX.

—The question whether gold ranges at 130 or 160, will excite men until their brains are ready to give way; but the question, "What must I do to be saved?" is always to be regarded without emotion. The question, Whether four young men of England, can row a boat a given distance, six seconds quicker than four young men from this side can do the same thing, is important enough to throw two continents into a perfect furor of excitement but it is very improper that people should get excited over questions pertaining to their eternal welfare in the world to come.

The First Resurrection at Hand.

"Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first Resurrection." Rev. xx. 6. "If by any means I might attain unto the Resurrection of the dead." Phil. iii. 11.

The Apostle Paul did not doubt that he should share in the resurrection of the dead. He could never have entertained an idea of the possibility of his being left behind in the darkness of the tomb, when all the nations that are in their graves "shall hear the voice of the Son of Man, and shall come forth." He looked forward to the resurrection of the dead as to a future, but divinely predicted, and, therefore, certain event. He anticipated that glorious morning, when "this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality," and "when death shall be swallowed up in victory." He saw, with faith's clear sight, that, when his earthly tabernacle should be dissolved, there was prepared for him "a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens." And, in the hallowed rapture of that hope, he could say, "Now is Christ risen from the dead, and become the first-fruits of them that slept. O death, where is thy sting? O grave where is thy victory? The sting of death is sin, and the strength of sin is the law. But thanks be to God, which giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."—1 Cor. xv. 20, 42, 51-58. 2 Cor. v. 1.

But, then, what is the apostle's meaning, when he also says, "If by any means I might attain unto the resurrection of the dead?"—Phil. iii. 11.

An explanation is furnished, by referring to the original Greek for the word resurrection in this passage. The word is exanastasis, which denotes the resurrection out from among the dead, that is, the resurrection of the righteous, exclusively, out from among the whole of the dead, both righteous and wicked. It is in short the elect resurrection or First Resurrection of the Saints, which is to take place at the Second advent of Christ, at the commencement of the 1,000 years of the millennium. Rev. xx. 5.

1. This first resurrection is the special resurrection of which our Lord speaks, when He says, "They who shall be accounted worthy to attain that world and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry, nor are given in marriage, neither can they die any more, for they are equal to the angels and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." And this He elsewhere calls the resurrection of the just; viz., "Thou shalt be recompensed at the resurrection of the just." This, therefore, must be styled the resurrection of the just, as distinguished from the resurrection of the unjust. And to attain it, is to receive a peculiar privilege, and to be awarded a special honor. For our Lord speaks of those who shall be accounted worthy to attain it, as the children of God being the children of the resurrection. Luke xx. 35, 36; xiv. 14.

St. Paul also announces that "the dead in Christ shall rise first." As our Lord was the first-fruits of this eclectic resurrection, so the just seem to be a kind of first-fruits of the general resurrection of the dead, as it is written, "Christ, the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming."

It was with this resurrection in view that the martyred saints suffered and endured, counting it all joy, "that they might obtain a better resurrection." And it is on those who attain to the same reward of grace that St. John pronounces the solemn and emphatic word of blessing, "Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection." This, then, is the elect resurrection to which, above all things, St. Paul desired to attain. It is a prior resurrection. Those who participate in it will live and reign with Christ our King during the thousand years of millennial glory. Hence arises the importance of preparation. Hence the being counted worthy to obtain it is, indeed, a peculiar privilege. 1 Thess. iv. 16; 1 Corinth. xv. 23; Heb. xi. 35.

It will be the commencement of inconceivable happiness and glory to such as shall then rise, to be with their Lord where He is. They will "behold his glory," and see Him "face to face." They will be "like Him." As they behold Him they will reflect the beauty of his perfections. Love, joy, and peace will form their moral character, and beautify their glorified bodies. As was the Savior on the mountain of transfiguration, so shall they be. They shall be clothed in raiment "white as the light, exceeding white as snow, so as no fuller on earth can white them." They shall "eat of the tree of life," and "of the hidden manna." They shall be "crowned with the crown of life." They shall possess "the white stone with the new name written in it." They shall have "power over the nations." They shall be "made pillars in the temple of God, and go no more out." They shall "walk in white in the streets of the new Jerusalem." Never shall their names be blotted out of the book of life. And to them it shall be granted "to sit with the Savior of his throne." Such are the rewards or children of the first resurrection. 1 John iii. 2; Rev. ii. 7, 17; iii. 5, 12, 21; Mark ix. 3.

2. The wise virgins, or 144,000 sealed christians, who are waiting for and desiring the personal advent of Christ, will escape beforehand from the great tribulation which will usher in the dawn of the millennial day.

The millennial thousand years are to be preceded by a night of troubles. And that night will come suddenly upon the earth. Brief, indeed, will be the premonitory twilight. For, when the world is saying "peace and safety, then sudden destruction cometh; the day of the Lord will overtake them as a thief in the night." No more warning will be given than the thief gives of his approach. "As a snare will it come upon all them that dwell upon the face of the whole earth." Then will be the overwhelming flood. "The overflowing scourge shall pass through." For "this will be God's controversy with the nations." It will be "the shaking of all nations," it will be "the gathering of the kings of the earth, and of the whole world, to the battle of the great day of God Almighty."

Then will "the earth reel to and fro. The earth shall be utterly broken down. Fear and the pit, and the snare, will be upon its inhabitants." The breath of the Lord, when He cometh in his anger, shall be as an overflowing stream. Then "the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day—then shall men enter into the rock, and hide them in the dust, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his Majesty, when He ariseth to shake terribly the earth." Isa. xxiv.

But deliverance out of these troubles is secured to the sealed people of God. As, in Ezekiel's vision in chapter ix., the man clothed with linen, with the writer's ink-horn, was commanded by the Lord "to go through the midst of the city, and to set a mark on the foreheads of the men that sigh and cry for all the abominations done in it," nor could the destruction come upon the doomed city until they had been sealed; even so God's servants must be sealed now "unto the day of redemption" by the Divine Spirit, that they may be delivered from the destruction which impends upon the apostate nations of christendom.

ALL THE 144,000 SEALED ONES,

the definite and selected number, who shall stand with the Lamb upon Mount Zion will be caught up into the air, and changed, when the parousia of the Lord takes place (that is, his coming into the air near the earth, as distinguished from his apocalypsis or subsequent manifestation upon the earth at Mount Olivet),—when "one shall be taken and another left," and they will be exempted from entering into the "great tribulation of 31½ years," or the final development of the Papistico-infidel power which will persecute, unto the death, the remnant of the saints of the Most High. Ezek. ix.; Rev. xiv. 1-5, 15; Luke xvii. 34.

For this is the special promise made to those who, at the sound of the Archangel's trumpet, shall be found waiting for, and desiring the coming of the Lord. They shall "escape all those things that shall then come to pass." They shall be delivered from the great tribulation. They shall stand in their lot at the end of the days. Being clothed in the wedding garment, they will be admitted to the marriage supper of the Lamb. Having oil in their vessels, they will be ready for their Lord's coming, and will enter in, like the wise virgins, whilst the foolish will be left outside the doors of the palace. It is of such that the sweet Psalmist of Israel sang, "Thou shalt hide them in the secret of thy pavilion from the pride of man," in the day of Antichrist's pride, when as the Leviathan of Job, the Assyrian and Lucifer of Isaiah, he shall finally assail the saints remaining upon the Roman earth. Matt. xxv. 1-10.

In this storm of Divine wrath upon christendom—to the translated saints "A Man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest." Thus, in that day of trouble, Habakkuk hoped to rest; and Zephaniah said, "it may be that we shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger;" and Malachi prophesied, "The day cometh when all the proud, and all that do wickedly, shall be as stubble." "But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings." Whilst Isaiah, speaking of the elect resurrection, had before prophesied, "Come, my people, enter thou into thy chambers, and shut thy doors about thee; hide thyself, as it were for a little moment, until the indignation be overpast. For, behold, the Lord cometh out of his place to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity." Isa. xxvi. 20, 21.

3. These prophecies so far tend to fix the period of the first resurrection, that evidently it must take place previous to the pouring out of the Lord's anger, during the great tribulation of 3½ years upon the Anti-christian powers, i. e., before the overflowing stream or deluge of wrath descends.

Noah must be in the ark before the fountains of the great deep are broken up. Lot must be out of Sodom before the fiery tempest can descend. Elijah must have ascended in his chariot of fire before the threatened evil fall upon Israel. The Christians must have reached Pella before the armies of the Romans finally beset Jerusalem. So the church of waiting believers must escape before the sword of the Lord finally devastates christendom. The salt must be taken away before the elements of destruction can ferment.—Sir W. Wilson Marsh.

The Michigan Conference.

As our Conference is appointed to meet again with the church in Mendon, I want to say, in behalf of that church; that although our numbers are not large, we are prepared to receive all that may come, and more than that, are anxious to have a large gathering. We want a meeting of interest and profit to all who may attend. To secure this, the first thing is numbers; the next, a fervent love of the truth. If the attendance at such a meeting is small, it so disheartens that no amount of zeal on the part of those present can make up the loss. Hence, brethren, every one, it is a first duty to be at the Conference if possible.

As we are making an effort to give greater efficiency to our organization, by a revision of our constitution, it is especially important that all parts of the state be represented. Let all believers of the one Gospel, and all who are seeking to learn our faith, come, whether residing in the state or not. Again I say, come. Strangers as to our locality, will find us on the Grand Rapids and Indiana railroad. Stop off at Mendon. Come on Thursday if possible. Let such as come with teams, bring such articles of bed covering as they can, to help us out in regard to comfortable lodging. E. MILLER.

You have no time to teach your children? You, a christian mother! No time to give to their mental and moral training; no time to weave around their feet the golden meshes of the web of truth, that they may not, dare not, go astray. You cannot spend the precious hours in making the "old, old story" plain to their eager, willing ears. There is so much to do. And how can they understand the "faith of Abraham?" How see into "the covenants of promise?" How learn that through the seed, or offspring of Abraham, all nations are to be blessed? That this seed is Christ? That to Abraham it was promised that Christ should "possess the gate of his enemies?" And that this possession means rulership, dominion, a kingdom?

That the land of Canaan was promised to Abraham, and through him to Christ? That that land is to be the future inheritance of all who believe and obey the gospel and thus become heirs with Christ to the covenants of promise.

How can they understand that Christ died for them?? That in him only can they have hope of future life? That through his precious blood they may obtain the pardon of all their sins, and that it is in the act of obedience, going down into the water and being buried with Christ in likeness of his death, that this blood is applied? That when baptized into Christ, we belong to him, we become a child, are adopted into the family, have hope of a resurrection unto life? That in no other way can we get into Christ, that nowhere else has he promised the remission of our sins?

And how can they, so young in years, be faithful to Christ, even admitting that they may understand and obey the gospel? How could Samuel, and David, and Timothy? Ah! but these, you say, were called of God, gifted for a particular work. Give your child to God even before its birth; show by your holy living, your daily walk and conversation, by all your acts, that you mean to fulfill your vows, as did Hannah and Elizabeth, and who knows what blessedness may fall upon your house; for what work your child may be called.

Take time. Learn the gospel story yourself and teach it to your children. While you bend in weary toil over ruinless locks, labyrinthine embroidery, delicate folds, meaningless ruffles, that you may decorate the bodies of your little boy and girl, Satan is stealing their souls, stealing them from you and from God,—and you are responsible.

Where are the sober, holy women of old, clothed in neatest apparel, who took their children to God on the strong arms of prayer, believing that he would hear? Where are the simply clad children, the modest, shrinking children, who loved the hour of prayer, who believed that they could "Remember their Creator in the days of their youth," and could give themselves to Him.

Are you like those praying women? Are your children like their children? If not, why? Is not pride and love of pleasure stealing your heart to God? You want your child to appear beautiful and attractive,—to whom,—oh, to whom? To the eyes of wicked, lecherous men, and folly loving women! For this you would give up its soul! For this, you would throw away the precious time that God has given you wherein to train it for him. And again, you want your children to enjoy themselves while they are young, you do not want them to unite with the church, it would keep them from so many pleasures, did you ever question yourselves about these enjoyments? If they are something in which a christian can take no part, is it right that you suffer your child to engage in them? Are they true pleasures, such as will last forevermore? Are there snares in the path which you choose for them? No temptations that will lead them down to death? The lessons learned in youth are hard to forget. The child that is rightly taught, both by precept and example, whose conscience is kept tender, whose feet are firmly placed upon the rock of principle will seldom be caught by the crafty devices of the evil one in after life.

Then teach your children! Make time, take time. Make no excuses. You can find time for other things, a thousand times less important. Read with them, pray with them, pray for them, and may God bless your efforts, and keep the little ones safe amid the perils of these last evil days, is the prayer of their friend.

S. ROXANA PRICE.

Integrity.

It becomes the Christian never to enter upon any course of conduct, however trivial, while a doubt of its propriety continues on his mind—never to hamper, under any circumstances with a conscientious doubt. "He that doubteth is damned if he eat, because he eateth not of faith; for whatsoever is not of faith is sin." Aim, therefore, in all things to act as "one that feareth always." Walk circumspectly and cautiously through the world, seeking purity in the midst of its pollutions. Always in a questionable matter adopt that course which is more likely to tend to the glory of God, than to the gratification of the propensities of your own deceitful heart.

Let your motives be the love of God—your aim the glory of God—and the result for which you are in search, God's blessing and favor. Let it be your endeavor, as far as possible, to give to earth, in your society, your pursuits, your affections, and unearthly characters—to breathe in it something of the holy atmosphere of heaven; to spread the sacred influence of Scriptural principle over the sphere in which you move; to win others round you to join in the same blessed course; and endeavor daily to attain a nearer resemblance to Him whom you adore, and a more intimate fellowship with Him whom you love. This is to keep yourself "unspotted from the world."—Rev. E. Craig.

False Security.

It is a well known fact that a proportion of every community seems to have little or no interest in the great moral and religious questions,—involving, as they do, an eternity of consequences. On what a trifling consideration, subjects the highest and grandest, relating to the most glorious hope for the faithful, and the most fearful destiny for the disobedient, are disposed of. They are allowed to flit through the mind like fugitive dreams. They are dismissed as unwelcome intruders on the business concerns and interests of the present life. Questions relating to the vanities of this age, to business, pleasure, politics, any thing and every thing, must claim our thought and attention, while the weightier subjects of life and death, of judgment and a kingdom, receive but a passing notice. If God had given no revelation of the future, but left man wholly to the guidance of his own reason; if then some man, like Socrates, or Seneca, had constructed a theory in reference to a life beyond death, the masses might be excused for not waiving the consideration of questions pertaining to the present life, in order to fix their minds on, and to investigate a theory which after all, might be purely conjectural. Men, who accept the Bible as God's word, have no such excuse. They know that it is written: "Search the scriptures," yet they neglect to heed this solemn injunction from the lips of the great Teacher.

The contrast between the manner or way in which subjects involving the most important issues, and those pertaining to worldly interests, are treated, is too painfully apparent. For example: Before men will embark on an enterprise of trade, they will look at all the sides, and all the possibilities of the speculation. Every power of the mind is taxed, the physical energies are aroused, and a deep concern is felt and shown in every step of the undertaking. Compare this with the loose and careless way in which they make up their minds about the chance of life in the age to come. How ready they are to quote some false maxim of security as a bar to an earnest and prolonged investigation of the subject. Some hastily assumed principle of religion is called up—not for the purpose of fixing their minds upon it; but with a view of diverting their thoughts from the solemn question of eternal life, and the necessary fitness for a future state of happiness. It must be observed that however thoughtless and indifferent most worldly men are about the claims, promises, and threatenings of divine revelation, they are not without some opinion in reference to these matters. They have their little systems of theology and religion, and these are so shaped by each individual, as make his future salvation look quite probable, however destitute he may be of the faith of the gospel, or of the righteousness which Paul assures us abounds unto eternal life. Without some theory of the kind, absurd and unscriptural as it may be, the most regardless of men would feel troubled about a coming destiny. However seldom the thought of a future state may enter into their reflections, however slightly it may affect them, and however soon it may give place to the more urgent vanities and interests of this life, most of men have made up their minds, have come to some settlement on this awfully important subject. This opinion, generally speaking, will serve them through life; quieting all fears within, resisting all demonstrations from without; rendering powerless the tenderest appeals, and the most earnest warnings of God's word, echoed by the voice of the proclaimer of the gospel.

This security or self-satisfaction, rests not on the fact of the lively application that Christ died for the ungodly, or that a deep interest is felt in all the schemes and enterprises which God has sanctioned for the maintenance of the christian system, and for diffusing the light of truth in the regions beyond, that all the commandments and ordinances of the Lord's house are kept blamelessly, and that prayer and communion with God are the well-springs of peace and happiness in this pilgrim state. This class of persons are too honest to claim any such thing. Their peace of mind is maintained on some other ground. Aside from the fact above mentioned, that each one of this class has his petty theory of religion, there exists this impression with self-confident ease; that the Lord's coming, with its terribly impressive scenes; its solemn sequences and consequences; its fiery sentence of wrath executed on the disobedient; with all the imposing display which will attend the apocalypse of the Great Judge; is far away in that dim future, which is always coming but never gets nearer. These things seem so far away in the background of the picture of contemplation never disturb them. They are discerned so faintly as never to carry with them the importance of a subject on hand.

Oh, sinner! sinner! on your blind and easy confidence beware! The Judge standeth at the door. Your subterfuges will not hide you, nor avert God's vengeance; in that soon coming day of wrath, when your awakened and self-condemning conscience will prompt you to cry for rocks and mountains to fall on you, and hide you from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb. Seek mercy and pardon through God's Son in the way prescribed by the goodness and wisdom of Jehovah. Believe the gospel of the kingdom, and obey its requirements in repentance and baptism, and in a continuance in well-doing to the end.

J. L. WIRGE.

—Coldness of love to God and contempt of serious piety, are sad prestages of final apostasy.

We may judge of the state of our hearts by the earnestness of our prayers. You cannot make a rich man beg like a poor man; you cannot make a man that is full cry for food like one that is hungry.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.

All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the fact and "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immediate alleation of the righteous, and the eternal destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrine on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

"And I appoint unto you a kingdom, as my Father hath appointed unto me." Luke xxii. 29.

In previous articles I have shown, 1. That the Saints will be recompensed in the earth; 2. That they will be rewarded at the coming of the Lord, and the resurrection of the dead; 3. That the one final motive or reward for the people of God will be the Kingdom; and 4. That the kingdom that will be given to Christ and the saints, is the kingdom which was prepared when the world was made, and consists of the earth and its inhabitants.

My object at this time is, to show why this kingdom will be given to Christ and the saints. What good will be secured by it, and to whom?

Why was this promise made? Why will Christ and the saints be made kings unless over the kingdom? Will it be done in order to secure the greatest good to them? Will it be that they may occupy a good, honorable, and glorious position as their reward? Or, will it be that good may come to the kingdom which is now under the curse? That all things in it that offend and them that do iniquity may be gathered out of it, that the curse may be removed, and that the inhabitants thereof may do the will of God in it as it is done in heaven? Will it be for the good of the rulers, or for the good of the kingdom as a final result, that this arrangement was made? What are governments for, for the good of the rulers, or for the good of the people? Why do the officers in our government have a good place, and why are they well paid? Is it that they may have a good place, and be well cared for? Or, is their good position given them that good may come to the people? But out the people under this government, and what would become of the good, and honorable, and well paid positions of its rulers? Why will the rulership of this kingdom be given to Christ and the saints? Will it be that good may come to them personally, or that good may come to the kingdom?

IT WILL BE DONE THAT GOOD MAY COME TO THE KINGDOM.

God's covenant with Abraham. "Thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies, and bless them that bless Abraham, and curse him that curseth Abraham, and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Gen. xii. 3; xxii. 17, 18. This position will be given to the seed of Abraham, that all the nations of the earth may be blessed.

God's oath to David. "Thy seed will I establish forever, and build up thy throne to all generations." Psa. lxxxix. 3, 4. He shall judge the poor of the people, He shall save the children of the needy, and shall break in pieces the oppressor. In his day shall the righteous flourish; and abundance of peace so long as the moon endureth. All nations shall serve Him, be blessed in Him, and call Him blessed. Psa. lxxii. This covenant and promise is, that the nations might be judged, and subdued, and blessed as long as the sun and moon endureth. Psa. lxxii.

Isa. ii. 4. "And He shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into ploughshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." This promise brings good to the people who have been in the practice of war.

Isa. ix. 6, 7. "For unto us a child is born, unto us a Son is given, and the government shall be upon his shoulder. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it with judgment and with justice from henceforth even forever." This government will bring to the people judgment, and justice, and peace forever.

Isa. xi. 1, 9. "But with righteousness shall He judge the poor, and reprove with equity for the meek of the earth; and He shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall He slay the wicked. and the animals shall become docile, and the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters of the sea." This judgment brings good to the poor, and to the meek of the earth, and destroys the wicked. It brings peace to the animals, and fills the earth with the knowledge of God. Dan. vii. 14, 27. "And there was given Him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages should serve him." The object of giving this kingdom to Christ is, that they may serve him.

Isa. lxvi. 15, 23. "For, behold, the Lord will come, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For, by fire, and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many; and it shall come to pass, that from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another, shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord." The object here, is to subdue all flesh, that all flesh who were not slain, might come and worship before Him.

Zech. xiv. The Lord comes with all his saints, and is made King over all the earth. He subdues the nations, and every one of them who will not be slain in the subjugation shall come up to Jerusalem to worship the King the Lord of Hosts. Good to the kingdom is the object and the result of this reign.

In the Lord's prayer the greatest conceivable good is to come to the kingdom, so that the will of God will be done in it as it is done in heaven. In the parable of the tares of the field, all things that offend and them that do iniquity, will be gathered out of the kingdom. In this parable the final motive is the good of the kingdom. In the reign of Christ all this in the kingdom will be subdued to God. This is the object for which the kingdom will be given to Christ and the saints. In every place where the Gospel, or glad tidings concerning the kingdom is mentioned, it is the good of the kingdom that is had in view, and not the good of the rulers.

WHAT PERSONAL GOOD WILL COME TO CHRIST AND THE SAINTS?

I will bless thee, and thou shalt be a blessing. They will first be blessed, and in this they will become qualified to be a blessing. And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon them, the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge and of the fear of the Lord; they become godly in their characters, and in their sympathies. They become worthy of the kingdom and the resurrection of the dead. They have been tried, they have overcome. They are personally qualified to reign. Because they are thus qualified, they will be raised from the dead, and receive eternal life. They will be raised up incorruptible and immortal, so that they can die no more. They can no more return to corruption. They will be spiritual and heavenly beings like the angels. Thus they will be personally blessed.

WHY WILL THEY BE THUS BLESSED?

Christ was raised from the dead to sit down on David's throne, and have power over all people, nations and languages, that they may serve Him. The saints will be raised from the dead to sit down with him in his throne, and have power over the nations for the same reason. Christ was made a spiritual and an heavenly being in order to judge the world, the saints will be made spiritual and heavenly beings for the same purpose, to judge the world. Christ received eternal life before He received the kingdom, and in order to receive it. The saints will receive eternal life before they receive the kingdom, and in order to receive it.

WHAT GOOD WILL COME TO THE KINGDOM?

A righteous government will be established, judgment and justice will be executed throughout the earth. All things that offend, and them that do iniquity will be gathered out of the kingdom, and the righteous of the kingdom will flourish, and abundance of peace so long as the sun and moon endure. During the reign of Christ and the saints, the restitution of all things spoken by the mouth of all the holy prophets since the world began will be accomplished. And the kingdom which was once uncursed, and which has for a long time been under the curse, will again be uncursed, and the will of God will be done in it, by the nations who have been healed by the leaves of the tree of life, as it is done in heaven forever and ever under the reign of Christ and the saints.

Thus, the kingdom will be given to Christ and the saints, not that they may have a good, and honorable, and glorious position in it, but this position will be given to them that good may come to the kingdom, that all the nations of the earth may be subdued to God, and blessed, so that the will of God may be done by them in it, as it is done in heaven.

JOEL A. SIMONDS.

GRAND RAPIDS, Mich.

Rome and Jerusalem.

Rome signifies a priestly government with worldly tendencies, under the guidance of a high priest, in imitation of the tribe of Levi in Israel, and of the tribe of Aaron especially. But this imitation, my friends, has, as we shall soon learn, degenerated into a misrepresentation and supercilious arrogation of privileges, powers, and prerogatives, which the high priests in Israel never dared to assume.

Israel's priests according to the etymology of the term, were ever servants of Jehovah and the nations. Their official duties, in connection with the Levites, were entirely limited to the service in the temple, and whatsoever may have belonged to it. He who was called the high priest had especially to officiate on the day of atonement, and had a vote in the council of judges; besides this preference and some restrictions, binding him exclusively, he was subject to all the rules, regulations and duties of his brethren, the other priests. They owned no property of land and were of no official authority at the royal court. The ministry being hereditary, they of course had to be married, and in spite of the prominency of their position, they dared not assume the nominal or positive dignity or quality of a ruling prince. "The lips of a priest," says the prophet Malachi, "shall guard knowledge; instruction one shall seek from his mouth, for he is a messenger of the Eternal of Hosts." The Rabbis add, the high priest must be beautiful through humility, wise by learning from everybody, invincible in the suppression of passion, and rich through contentedness. He dared not accumulate fortune, for in his capacity as spiritual guide, he had to remain an humble servant of God and the people all his lifetime; he dared not remain single, or else how could he understand and appreciate the relative condition of a family, its joys and sorrows, its wants and needs? He had to be a man of unblemished character, seen and known and judged of accordingly by everybody; to call him "holy" or "infallible" would amount to blasphemy; on the contrary, he was considered as much subject to sin as any layman, and had publicly to atone for it, even more severely and heavier, than the common man. All the year round he was to prepare for the great Sabbath of Sabbaths, in order to be worthy of entering the most holy place, dressed in his fancy garments. Priest that people should sanctify themselves when the sacrifices were being made, and then the (high) priest entered the sanctuary to make atonement first for himself and house, and then for the people. He also made confession of his own iniquities, of the iniquities of the entire house of Aaron, and of the children of Israel. He acknowledged before God their transgressions and their sins thus:

"O, God, I now acknowledge that we have sinned, committed iniquity, and transgressed against Thee, even I, the house of Aaron and thy people, the house of Israel. I beseech Thee, everlasting One, to pardon the sins, iniquities and transgressions, which we have committed before Thee, even I, the house of Aaron, and Thy people the house of Israel!"

The high priest, by this confession of sin, and prayer, had demonstrated his own frailty, and paid proper homage to his creator and acknowledged the condition of human equality among all children of Israel, irrespective of position or office. Thus he was able to enjoy, in unison with them, the solemnity of the day of atonement; the joy was depicted in his face, when he left the temple: also the people were joyful; in holy devotion they had prostrated themselves in the court of the temple, when they heard the ineffable name of Jehovah pronounced by the high priests, but when he appeared before them, they stood upright, none dared kneel down, nobody would think of kneeling before a human creature!

That is Jesusalem, my friends, that is not Rome; that is a high priest in the holy city, but not the high priest in the "eternal city;" that is the divinity of truth, which must and will triumph over the abomination of falsehood. The city of Rome stands and flourishes, the clerical government of Rome trembles and is sure to fall and be no more; the city of Jerusalem is destroyed, and is no more; the government of Jerusalem, however, stands and lives forever.—Jewish Chronicle.

What Has Infidelity Done?

Scepticism, infidelity, false religion, and no religion at all, have had time enough and opportunity enough to do something besides boast, and ought ere this, to be able to show some substantial results; some progress that could be cited as proof of the utility of such teachings and the excellence of such inspirations. Infidelity has long ruled at Christianity; let it plead now its own cause. What has it ever done for the world, even in the realm of material benefits? What countries has it discovered? What lands has it settled? What governments has it established? What cities has it builded? What inventions has it produced? What poets has it inspired? What missionaries has it sent forth? What savages has it civilized? What school has it established? What colleges has it founded? What hospitals has it erected? What charities has it fostered? What statesmen, and orators, and patriots and examples, and heroes, has it produced?

What is the record of infidelity with all her boast of wisdom and power? Can she name a Columbus, or a Livingstone? A Bacon or a Galileo? A Shakespeare or a Milton? A Fulton or a Morse? A Whitefield or a Wesley? Where are her Penns and her Washingtons; her pilgrim fathers and her patriot sires? Where is her Plymouth Rock, around which nations stand uncovered; her sacred tombs where her martyrs' ashes repose? What has infidelity done? Where are her cities, her empires, her conquests, her triumphs, her works of art, her discoveries in science? Has she written poems? Who has read them? Has she chanted hymns? Who has sung them?

"Infidelity has no hymn books, sings no hymns, enjoys no visions of a better life than this. Christians sing of an eternal home. They lift up their eyes to the heavenly hills, whence cometh their help. They exult in the prospect of a certain inheritance where sickness, sorrow, pain and death are never known. But the infidel cannot frame a hymn of praise about his vague nowhere! Non-existence invites no song, stirs no affection, enlarges no capacity of the soul. What a poor miserable theory is that which opens no light hereafter, chains no life and joy beyond the grave; and, instead of praises and thanksgivings, utters nothing better than murmurs and criticisms from the cradle to the grave!

The great doors in history have been men of great faith in God; men whose eyes have been anointed to see invisible things, and behold eternal glories. Compared with them, infidels with all their boasting are as ciphers in the world—their belief a mere negation, their hearts without inspiration, their legions a routed rabble, without guide or head, without aim and without hope, mere camp-followers in the great warfare of life. After faith has fought the battle, infidelity comes and claims the spoils. After faith has founded an asylum for the oppressed, infidelity comes and struts through it, and boasts of her liberty. After faith has constructed society, infidelity digs, and roots, and decays, and rots, and burns, and tears down the tairest creations of faith and hope and love. After faith has planted the tree and produced the apple, infidelity gnaws a hole into the middle, eats out its heart, and claims it as a home. Faith builds, infidelity destroys. Faith plants, infidelity uproots. The Bible—ay believed and obeyed—would make any community happy, prosperous, and peaceful; infidelity carried to its legitimate conclusions, would break up families, subvert society, blast civilization, paralyze industry, and ruin the world. And if infidelity is worthless in life, what is it in death? What martyr names can it record? What death triumphs can it celebrate? What light plays above the skeptic's tomb? What glory lights the great and glad beyond? Near the end of his days, the profligate Byron wrote—

"My days are in the yellow leaf,
The flowers and fruit of love are gone:
The worm, the canker, and the grief,
Are mine alone."

Near the close of his life Paul wrote, "I am now ready to be offered, and the time of my departure is at hand. I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith; henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness, which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day." Which is the better, the infidel's despair or the Christian's hope? Choose ye this day whom ye will serve. If the Lord be God then serve him, but if Baal then serve him.—The Christian.

False Positions of Universalists No. 8.

10. Universalists teach the coming of Christ and judgment took place at the destruction of Jerusalem. We are authoritatively warned to believe no one who teaches that doctrine. Matt. xxiv. 23-26. "Then (at the destruction of Jerusalem) if any man shall say unto you, Lo, here is Christ, or there, believe it not. For there shall arise false Christs, and false prophets, and shall shew great signs and wonders; insomuch that, if it were possible, they shall deceive the very elect. Behold, I have told you before, wherefore, if they shall say unto you, behold he is in the desert; go not forth; behold he is in the secret chambers; believe it not, for as the lightning cometh out of the east, and shineth even unto the west, so shall the coming of the Son of Man be."

If heed were taken to this scripture, Universalists could not make any one believe that Christ came personally at the destruction of Jerusalem. His second coming is to be like lightning, instantaneous and to be seen. Titus and his soldiery coming from Rome, on the ground, six months in coming, is no more like the coming of the Son of Man, than the flash of powder in the pan of a gun is like the terrible flash of lightning from a dark and terrible cloud. No one ever saw Christ at the destruction of Jerusalem. Josephus records the events which took place then, and they fill the bill of warning of false Christs, false prophets, signs and wonders which culminated in that event, and which conclusively demonstrates that Christ did not then come. Contemporaneous and startling events must occur at Christ's second coming, as the return of the Jews to the native land, the resurrection of the righteous dead, the establishment of the kingdom of God, and the abolition and destruction of human governments, mighty signs and wonders exceeding those which took place when God redeemed ancient Israel from Egyptian bondage. Did any of these occur at the destruction of Jerusalem?

20. Universalists teach that the resurrection and judgment took place at that time. They are therefore false teachers "who concerning the truth have erred, saying the resurrection is past already; and overthrow the faith of some." If universalists do not identify themselves with Hymeneus and Philetus, who, in Paul's day, taught the resurrection had past already, when they teach the same doctrine, then I confess I do not understand the meaning of language.

There are so many positive declarations describing his second coming personally, in flaming fire to destroy the wicked, his coming with the great God, coming to raise the dead, to lead Israel, scattered and peeled, back to their native land, to establish his kingdom, to break the oppressor's yoke, to reign and rule with equity and justice, to deliver a groaning world, etc., that, without them, the whole scheme of God would dwindle into utter insignificance. To be living since his return, since the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgment, and we not know it, is but the bare assumption of half-headed universalism!

21. Universalists teach that all, no matter if they die in their sins, shall be saved in the great hereafter. We shall now give a few of the vast amount of scriptures which are totally subversive of this assumption.

1. Faith a condition of salvation. Gal. iii. 26. "We are all the children of God by faith in Christ Jesus." If faith be a condition, then those who die without faith, will be lost. "He that believeth not shall be damned."

2. Worthiness a condition. Matt. xx. 34-36. "The children of this world marry, and are given in marriage; but they that shall be counted worthy to obtain that world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage; neither can they die any more, for they are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection." No adult can be raised to immortality and eternal life without worthiness here.

3. Holiness a condition. Rom. vi. 22-23. "But now being made free from sin, and become servants of God, ye have your fruit and holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." A man must believe and obey God to become holy, and, without holiness no one shall see the Lord. As all are not holy in this life, so all shall not see the Lord, or be saved hereafter.

4. Coming to God a condition. Heb. vii. 25. "Wherefore he is able to save them to the uttermost who come unto God by him." None will be saved, none can be saved, at least where the gospel is preached, only those who "come unto God by him."

5. Eternal salvation conditional. Heb. v. 9. "And being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation to all that obey him." This obedience must be rendered here; for there is no promise of a post mortem gospel. There is not a word anywhere in God's word which says there shall be a gospel after death, mercies and pardons then offered, but, on the contrary, as we sow here, so shall we reap in the eternal world.

Eternal life contingent upon obedience here. Rom. ii. 7. "To them who, by patient continuance in well doing, seek for glory and honor, and immortality, eternal life." This must be in this life. Paul would not talk to persons about "well doing" here, and yet know that the gospel promised "eternal life" by "well doing" after death. He could not declare the whole counsel of God, as he said he did, if he omitted to tell his cotemporaries that salvation would take place after death, by obedience then, even if they died impenitent here.

7. An immortal crown contingent upon the Christian race here. 1 Cor. ix. 24-27. "Know ye not that they which run in a race run all, but one receiveth the prize. So run, that ye may obtain. And every man that striveth for the mastery is temperate in all things. Now, they do it to obtain a corruptible crown; but we an incorruptible. I therefore so run, not as uncertainly; so fight I, not as one that beateth the air: but I keep under my body, and bring it into subjection; lest that, by any means, when I have preached to others, I myself should be a castaway."

In those Grecian games, to which Paul alluded to illustrate his doctrine, though many run, only one received the prize. He taught that we must run if we would receive the prize. But Christians need not be like the Grecians i. e. all may receive the prize if they run to the end, instead of only one. Paul said he run, fought, kept under his body to Christ all the time, lest that, after preaching to others, he might be a castaway. If Paul, an inspired apostle, had to do this in order to be saved hereafter, surely no man now can reasonably expect salvation hereafter unless they do as Paul did. Therefore universal salvation is unscriptural.

Am I Wrong?

Indeed, I have been wrong, many times in my life. If I am now, he who calls my attention to that fact and teaches me the truth, is my best friend. I read with much interest the letter of Brother John Foore upon the Lord's supper. The paper has "gone from me," but if I remember it correctly, I approved of the positions taken by Brother F. generally, although it is possible, that upon a critical reading, I might differ with him upon some points of minor importance.

I do not wish to discuss the matter at length, but to simply state my position, so that the question which heads this article may be appropriate. But I submit to Brother E. Miller that the statement,—"Surely Anna, Ill., is not Jerusalem,"—is neither argument nor evidence against Brother Foore's position. I agree with him that "as regards the time for eating the Lord's supper, no time is specified in the word. Then my first position is, that it may be eaten at any time. Second, "the first day of the week is not the time adapted," because "no time is fixed for celebrating the supper." Third, no day in the week is specified, but the death of the Lord occurred upon Thursday and not Sunday, and "ye do show forth the Lord's death till he come. 1. Cor. xi. 26. If the statement, "this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me," (v. 25) is evidence amounting to proof "that no time is specified in the word," as Brother Miller argues. I wish to submit for his consideration this question: Was it wrong for my wife and I to sit at our own table and eat the Lord's supper, at 8 o'clock p. m., on the 13th of April last? Was it wrong for me, on the night of the 1st day of February last, immediately after the immersion of my dear old father and mother, to sit with them in a private room, in their own house at Golden City, Mo., and then and there partake with them of the emblems of the broken body and shed blood of our Lord Jesus Christ? Was it wrong for the brethren at Hero, Kansas; Carthage, Mo., and other places all over the land, to sit at the table on the night of the anniversary of the Passover Supper, and "show forth the Lord's death" by eating the Lord's supper? Was it wrong for me to publish notice in the RESTITUTION, requesting any of the "one faith" to come to my house, in Anna, Ill., and partake with me of the Lord's supper, on the 14th day of the first month, or at any other time? Brethren, let us be consistent, and "love one another, for love is the fulfilling of the law," that we may go to Jerusalem at "the time appointed."

AMOS SANFORD.

If He Come not Again.

One of the saddest features in the faith and life of the modern church of Christ is the almost utter ignorance of, indifference, and in some cases, active opposition to the second personal advent of our blessed Lord. That "evil men and seducers" and the latter day "scoffers" should hate and despise the doctrine is not to be wondered at, but it is an amazing wonder that christians should not only allow "that blessed hope" to fall into darkness and disrepute, but should array themselves against it, as though it were a strange doctrine and fraught with evil.

When we consider how the consummation of the whole purposes of God in our redemption hinges on the second advent; when we remember that no "crown of righteousness" can be given to his faithful servants (2 Tim. iv. 8), that there can be no resurrection of "the dead in Christ," no glorification of living saints (1 Thess. iv. 13-18); no millenium (Rev. xx. 4); and indeed none of the glorious things of the future concerning which our Lord speaks, what must be the folly of shutting our eyes to and opposing "the promise of his coming." For if the second personal coming of the Lord is not sure, the first coming, the garden, the cross, the sepulchre, the resurrection, and the ascension are all vain. Indeed, the second coming of the Lord is the dome of the whole structure of christianity. When he comes who is our life, then shall we appear with Him in glory, and then will his great prayer in John 17th be answered. "Even so, come, Lord Jesus."

A Florida correspondent writes to the Newark "Advertiser:" "There are many curiosities in the neighborhood of Ocala. It is the region where Osceola and his braves made a stand for their hunting grounds, and the place is historic. Here was the massacre perpetrated which broke the treaty and brought on the Seminole war, and there are plantations which were invaded and made desolate at that time, and which never recovered. The country rests, too, upon a bed of limestone, through which porous substance subterranean rivers are flowing, and these rivers have in ages past formed caves, some of which are now dry and accessible, while later the same dark flow of waters have caused the land to cave in, forming "sinks" sometimes to the depth of a hundred feet, and in these sinks there are wonderful specimens of shells from the sea and other evidences of the late formation of the peninsula. Marl also is abundant, such as is found on the coast of South Carolina. It is formed of small shells, lime, the bones of birds and fishes, and is a valuable fertilizer. Frequently it crops out to the surface, and wherever so found the soil is good.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....June 2, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ We hope to see a general gathering of the brethren at our June meeting at Antioch. The friends will cheerfully take care of all who come.

☞ Prof. J. Stanley Grimes gave the best definition of spiritualism that we have heard of late. He says: "Spiritualism is infidelity with a ghost in it."

☞ We accidently met brother C. C. Marston while in Chicago. Brother M. is now attending the Chicago University. He is studying the languages and reports that he is making excellent progress. He is preaching every Sunday in one of the parks near the city.

☞ Our meetings in Harvard, Ill., last Sunday were largely attended. We met many of our old friends and enjoyed our visit very much. The truth has some staunch friends in that locality. We hope ere long to see some arrangement made that will enable them to have regular preaching.

☞ While in Chicago we called on brethren Wilson & Peirce. Found them busy in their work. They report that "Our Rest" is doing well. We were glad to find them doing well in their labors. Brother Wilson has been giving a series of Sunday evening lectures in Austin during the winter and spring. A goodly number have become interested in the way of life.

☞ Brother J. F. Willcox of Wisconsin is stopping with us a few days. He is on his way to the Michigan Conference. On Tuesday evening he gave our people an excellent discourse on the message to the Philadelphian Church. Brother W. reports that his recent discussions with Jamison the infidel spiritualist have resulted in good. The Bible view of man and his destiny is the only effectual method of meeting the rising system of unbelief.

The Generations and Prophetical Periods.

In a former paper, we traced the fulfillment of prophecy in the desolations of God's sanctuary and the overspreading of abominations, to the Saracenic conquest of Jerusalem in 637. In defiance of prophecy, and to falsify the predictions of our Savior, Julian, about 363, resolved to erect a stately temple on the site where the demolished Holy Places once stood, and to reinstate the Jewish worship on Mount Moriah in all its pristine splendor. To carry out this design, the Jews assembled from all parts of the empire to that holy mountain, which, in their estimation, is by far the most hallowed spot on earth; for here, according to Rabbinical tradition, was where Jacob reposed his head on the stone which he set up afterwards, and poured oil upon it in commoration of the heavenly vision recorded Gen. xxviii. This place, which he called Bethel, was also sacred in their estimation, from being the reputed spot where the faith of Abraham was so severely tried in his determination to offer up Isaac. Here was where the Divine presence had been made manifest in the Holy of Holies. The splendid temple of Jupiter Capitolinus, it seems, had shared the fate of those magnificent structures that Babylonian and Roman conquest had demolished. Although Helena and Constantine greatly adorned the city, and built church edifices over the supposed sacred localities of Calvary, Gethsemane, and on the Mount of Ascension, still the site of the temple was neglected, as it was supposed to be under the Savior's ban. Accordingly it had become, in Julian's time, covered with the accumulated rubbish of years. Under the direction of Alypius, the minister of the emperor, the gathered children of Israel set about the work of rebuilding the temple.

In this hopeful design of re-erecting the sacred edifice, the historian says "men forgot their avarice, and women their delicacy: spades and pickaxes of silver were provided by the vanity of the rich, and the rubbish was transported in mantles of silk and purple. Every purse was opened in liberal contributions, every hand claimed a share in the pious work; and the commands of a great monarch were executed by the enthusiasm of a whole people." A prophet of God had however said, that "both the sanctuary and host should be trodden under foot for 2,300 prophetic days"—or years; and One, whose word will stand though heaven and earth shall pass away, had declared, that "Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles, until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled;" and both Daniel and the Lord Jesus had predicted perpetual desolations for the house of sacrifice and oblations, till the consummation of time, and the coming of Messiah in the clouds of heaven in power and great glory, and, consequently, neither the enthusiasm of the Jews, nor the power of a mighty monarch, could frustrate the designs of the Most High. The elements warred against the builders. A whirlwind swept the surface with the "besom of destruction" and an earthquake shattered the rocks of the old foundations. A fire issued from the temple mount for a whole day and, not only consumed their tools, but consumed the workmen themselves. Gibbon is compelled to record that "the Christians entertained the natural and pious expectation, that, in this memorable contest, the honor of religion would be vindicated by some signal miracle. An earthquake, a whirlwind, and a fiery eruption, which overturned and scattered the new foundations of the temple, are attested, with some variations, by contemporary and respectable evidence." After alluding to Ambrose, Chrysostom, and Gregory Nazianzen, he gives the following from Ammianus Marcellinus;—"Whilst Alypius, assisted by the governor of the province, urged, with vigor, the execution of the work, horrible balls of fire breaking out near the foundations, with frequent and reiterated attacks, rendering the place, from time to time, inaccessible to the scorched and blasted workmen; and the victorious element continuing in this manner obstinately and resolutely bent, as it were, to drive them to a distance, the undertaking was abandoned." The ground, where once stood the temple of Solomon so interesting to every Christian; which the whole Mohammedan world regard as the foundation of all architectural knowledge; and whose glories the Jews still recall, and whose loss they bewail through the ages, is, to use the language of Gibbon himself, "now covered by a Mohammedan mosque, which still continues to exhibit the same edifying spectacle of ruin and desolation." What a striking comment in few words, on Daniel's prophecy. Thus, while the pagan emperor could, unimpeded, build a temple to honor an idol deity, and the Mohammedan Khalif could, without hindrance, erect a mosque in honor of a false prophet, heaven frowned in fury upon the attempt of the Jewish people to build a house for the worship of the Most High God during the interdicted times of Gentile domination.

We now return to the leading events connected with the fulfillment of prophecy in Mohammedan history. As stated in a former communication, Jerusalem was captured by the Saracens under the Khalif Omar, in 637. The bitter feelings entertained by the nominal Christians toward the Jews, had induced them to cover the sacred site of Solomon's temple with all manner of rubbish out of contempt to the unbelieving Israelites; so that when Omar would erect a mosque on the venerated rock, he found it necessary to remove a mass of filth before commencing the sacred building. After assisting, with his own hands, in the removal of this mass, thus accumulated, he erected a modern house of prayer—a plain quadrangular, large, though mean structure. A half century or so, later, Abd-el-Melek erected the splendid edifice that, to the present time, goes by the name of the Mosque of Omar, at an immense cost. It was erected in 688. The whole temple mount is surrounded with a high wall inclosing, according to Dr. Barclay, about thirty-six acres. Access to the holy grounds of the "Haram es-Sherif" as the Mohammedans term the sacred enclosure, is through carefully guarded gates; the entire locality being intrusted to a guard composed of blood-thirsty savages, the Mauritanian Africans, whose clubs and cimetars deal death to the infidel who has the temerity to intrude within the forbidden limits.

Says Dr. Barclay "It is an ascertained fact that every religious community in the Holy City has a firman from the Sublime Porte, empowering them to kill the members of any other communities trespassing on their premises; and that the Moslems, at least, delight to execute the decree upon any infidel, whether Jew or Christian, that may be caught intruding upon this sacred spot is well known." Such is the condition of the "down-trodden outcasts of Israel," and so completely disfranchised and maltreated are they, not only by their Turkish masters, but even by those who style themselves Christians and philanthropists, that it would cost any Jew in Jerusalem his life to venture into the so-called Church of the Holy Sepulchre, or even within the Outer Court of his beloved temple.

Says Barclay, "It is enough to swell the bosom of a brazen statue with indignation, and draw tears of pity from the eye of cold marble, to witness the grinding oppression under which they groan, soul, body, and spirit." He also says, "The portion of the Temple wall approached by a narrow lane through the Mogrebin Quarter, is esteemed the most sacred of all places to which they have access, on account of its vicinity to the site of the Holy of Holies, and there they repair every Friday—indeed in greater or lesser numbers every day—and weep and pray for the advent of Messiah."

The "wailing place" occupies a space of about forty yards in the wall surrounding the site of their once "holy and beautiful home;" so, we see, Jerusalem is trodden down of the Gentiles, Daniel's people are scattered, or oppressed in their own land, and abominations of desolation overspread the Holy Places of the Most High. Jewish suffering, Jerusalem's desolation, and Mohammedan supremacy have been too much ignored. We hope to make a continuation of the subject interesting.

Should the Lord's Supper be Observed Annually?

God has never left his people to infer a commandment or duty. Every institution in which time is involved, the time has been as definitely stated, and as imperatively commanded as any other part of the institution. There is no exception to this rule. Every time an institution involving time is referred to the time of its observance is repeated. Take a few examples. "And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, and say unto them concerning the feasts of the Lord which ye shall proclaim to the holy convocations, even these are my feasts. Six days shall work be done, but the seventh day is the Sabbath of rest," etc. These are the feasts of the Lord, even holy convocations, which ye shall proclaim in their seasons. In the fourteenth day of the first month at even is the Lord's passover. And on the fifteenth day of the same month is the feast of unleavened bread unto the Lord. And the Lord spake unto Moses, saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, In the seventh month, in the first day of the month shall ye have a sabbath, as memorial of blowing of trumpets, an holy convocation. Also on the tenth day of this seventh month there shall be a day of atonement; it shall be a holy convocation unto you; and ye shall afflict your souls, and offer an offering made by fire unto the Lord. And the Lord spake unto Moses saying, Speak unto the children of Israel, saying, the fifteenth day of the seventh month shall be the feast of tabernacles, for seven days unto the Lord. Also in the fifteenth day of the seventh month when ye have gathered in the fruit of the land, ye shall keep a feast unto the Lord seven days; on the first day, there shall be a sabbath, and on the eighth day there shall be a sabbath."

In the recapitulation of these feasts the time of their observance is as definitely stated as any other part of these institutions. Why was it necessary to state so minutely the time? The only answer that can be given is that time was a part of these institutions. If time had been involved in the Lord's supper it would have been as definitely commanded as any other part of that sacred ordinance. It cannot be claimed that it was an ordinance of less importance than those referred to in the foregoing quotations. The death of Christ was of infinitely more importance than all the Jewish sacrifices and ordinances. How in view of the transcendent importance of the grand and glorious event commemorated in the ordinance of the supper, can we account for the absence of a commandment, or even an intimation that the time in which Christ died should be commemorated by the bread and wine, or held in remembrance at all? If such time had been stated it would not be necessary to go to Palestine to find a data for the commencement of the first month; and then subtract the time necessary for the earth to roll its surface from any given latitude in our country, up to that of Palestine. Nor would it be necessary to infer the day of the week on which Christ died. Nor would it then be necessary to violate the law regulating the manner, time, and place of killing the paschal lamb. If the original law were in force in this country it would inflict the death penalty upon every one who had a hand in killing the passover on the nineteenth day of last April. Paul does not intimate that the Lord's supper should be observed the same night in which He was betrayed. He refers to the time in which this ordinance was instituted as a historic fact. He says, "For I have received of the Lord that which also I delivered unto you, that the Lord Jesus the same night in which he was betrayed took bread. And when he had given thanks he brake it, and said, Take eat; this is my body, which is broken for you; this do in remembrance of me." After the same manner also he took the cup, when he had supped, saying, this cup is the new testament in my blood; this do ye, as oft as ye drink it, in remembrance of me. For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup ye do show the Lord's death till he come." 1 Cor. xi. 23-26.

1. Paul does not say that the same night in which Christ was betrayed he commanded his disciples to eat the bread or to drink the cup.

2. He does not say "take eat this bread, or drink this cup, in remembrance of the time Christ died or the supper was instituted," but "this do in remembrance of ME."

3. He does not say, "For as often as ye eat this bread, and drink this cup ye do show the time the supper was instituted, or the subsequent time when Christ died;" but ye "do show the Lord's death till he come." This institution has nothing whatever to do with time, but with the event of Christ's death. Those who try to weave in time misapprehend the design of the supper altogether. It is designed to show forth the Lord's death till He come. No matter what time it is observed, it shows forth the Lord's death. Whether observed weekly, monthly, or yearly, it has just one object in view, that is to show forth the Lord's death. Time is no part of this institution, nor is time embraced in its design.

Those who observe the supper weekly have the example of a church founded under the auspices of inspired apostles. The very construction of the language in Acts xx. 7, shows that it was the custom of the church at Troas to meet upon the first day of the week for the purpose of breaking of bread. It reads: "And upon the first day of the week when they met together to break bread."

1. The foregoing language is tantamount to saying upon the first day of every week.

2. For what object did they assemble? Answer, to break bread. No other object is mentioned for which they assembled. No one has the right to assume any other object. Paul's being present was accidental; but the church having assembled on that day was by appointment, and for a specific purpose; and that specific purpose was to break bread. Such language never occurs in reference to assembling for the first time.

It cannot be denied but what it was the custom of that church at Troas to meet together to break bread every first day. Let the advocates of the annual observance of the supper find such an example in favor of their theory, if they can. They know that there is no such an example. They know that there was no such a custom. If there ever was, the Bible is silent as the grave in reference to it. If they could only find one text where it reads, "upon the fourteenth day of the first month, when the disciples assembled together to eat the passover, with what alacrity would they quote it, and with what tenacity would they cling to it. It would be the key-note to all their reasoning. We would ask our good brother Foore to give the chapter and verses, if he pleases, where any church in apostolic times was in the habit of meeting together upon the first day, or any other day of the week to eat a common meal with a congregational capacity? Was eating a common meal a church ordinance in that day? As recorded in the second chapter of Acts, the brethren had all things common, and ate their meals by course from house to house. But did they meet together for that purpose? Was it their custom to meet together upon the first day of the week for that purpose? And is it not strange that no mention is made of meat in Acts xx, and that it should be so definitely mentioned in chapter second? The reason these Christians at Jerusalem had all things common was that a great persecution was coming upon them, when all their property would be confiscated any way. And after this persecution came, Paul raised contributions for them at Corinth and other places. The example of these Christians at Jerusalem does not teach a system of Fourierism among the churches of those days, as brother Foore would seem to teach. The Apostle Paul repudiates the custom of the brethren at Corinth coming together to eat a common meal. And did he justify the brethren in one place for doing what he condemned them for doing in other places? He says, "Then again your coming together to the same place is not to eat the Lord's supper." 1 Cor. xi. 20. Why was their coming together to one place not to eat the Lord's supper? Was it because the Lord had no supper? No. It was because every man eat first his own supper. Thus he reasons in the next verses. "For (he says) each one partakes first his own supper." How a man could partake his own supper before he partook the Lord's supper, if the Lord had no supper, we cannot conceive. It is just as though brother Foore should invite a number of his brethren to assemble at his house to partake his supper; but when they come together each man has brought and partakes first of his own supper. Brother F. would indignantly say to them, when ye came together it is not to eat my supper, because every man partakes first his own supper. Would such language prove that brother F. had not provided a supper for them? It would prove just the reverse.

In the next verse the apostle condemns the practice of eating a common meal as a church ordinance, as being a provision of the design of the Lord's supper; and then proceeds to give the true design of it, having received a fresh revelation from his Lord. He says, "Have ye not houses in which to eat and drink? Or do ye despise the congregation of God, and put to shame those who are poor? If this is not a repudiation of eating a common meal, whether paschal or any other kind as the supper which Christ instituted on the night in which He was betrayed, we know not what language the apostle could use in condemnation of such practice.

Brother Miller has handled so well the only texts which say anything about Christ being our passover, that I will pass it over. The only argument we have read looking toward the annual observance of the Lord's supper is the unwarrantable inference that because the type was observed annually that therefore the memorial should be observed annually also.

This really looks like memorializing the type instead of the antitype. The great event memorialized by the supper occured but once for all. They grope among the shadows, when we have the substance. As often as we eat the bread and drink the cup we show the Lord's death, not the type of his death, or the time of his death. But the argument under consideration proves too much. Christ's resurrection was the antitype of the first fruit offered as a waive offering before God. 1 Cor. xv. 20.-23. Baptism is a memorial of Christ's resurrection. Rom. vi. 3-5. Col. ii. 12. Psa. iii. 21. Now, if because the type of an event was observed annually, therefore the memorial must be observed annually also, then we should be baptized every year, because the type of Christ's resurrection was observed every year.

The death of Christ is an immovable event, how then can it travel like the sun round a tree so as to throw a shadow on each side of it?

The contexts clearly show that Paul had no reference to either eating Christ literally or by proxy in 1 Cor. v.

The Substance of a Sermon,

We have met under solemn circumstances to pay our last tribute of respect to one of our number, a daughter of Adam's race, and a faithful and devoted member of the household of faith, who has fallen a victim to the enemy death, and now lies crushed beneath its power, while friends and relatives are left to mourn as it were over broken ties and ruined hopes.

The question naturally presents itself to all reflecting minds, and one too which demands a solution. Why do people die? The aged and the infant alike die. The wicked, the righteous, the rich, the poor, the high and the low, the king upon his throne, and the peasant in his hut, all alike fall beneath death's oblivious surge.

Some regard death as a mysterious infliction of divine justice. I refer not to its remote cause, but to its approximate cause. Thus they speak of it as a visitation of providence, administered to make some sinner become a christian, or some professor become more devoted to God. On funeral occasions of infants it is quite common to hear the minister remark: "The Lord has seen fit in his providence to take your child from you, and you must be reconciled to his will." Last fall I heard a noted orthodox minister make this very remark. He further stated to the grief stricken parents that the Lord had planted their child a brilliant star in the world above, and all this he had done to wean their affections from the world, and lead them to repentance. He then called upon them to give their hearts to the Lord, and prepare to meet their child in heaven.

Thus we are taught, both from press and pulpit, that God in his Providence kills infants, men, women and children, to make some of the human family become either christians, or more devoted to his cause. Such ideas are irrational, superficial, and derogatory to the character of God; and in Scripture have not the least shadow of a foundation on which to rest. The true physiologist, with repugnance, repudiates such wicked, superstitious notions as preposterous and absurd in the extreme.

When an infant dies, or any one else, and he is unable to discover the approximate cause he does not, like the ignorant theologian, charge the death of that infant or individual upon God, but from his stock of valuable knowledge, observation, and experience, he knows that all premature deaths are traceable only to mismanagement, accidental circumstances, or physiological transgression.

Prof. Bennett, of Edinburg, in one of his elaborate lectures, says that 100,000 persons die annually in that country from causes easily preventable. Now all physiologists know their lives could be saved by an observance of the simple laws of health which are daily transgressed, and, as a result, disease and death follow.

The many ills which afflict, and rob us, not only of our time, means and pleasure, but even of our life, might be easily avoided by suitable measures. To illustrate; scurvy, once so prevalent and fatal among sailtudes, that it was thought to be unavoidable is now entirely avoided by the observance of certain physical laws—cholera, that dreadful contageous disease, at the very name of which we shudder; once so unmanageable and destructive in its character, that it was regarded as a special visitation of an over-ruling power, is but the penalty for filthy streets, bad drainage, and underground tenements, of late it is ascertained to be quite manageable and even preventable by suitable sanitary measures. These things serve to show that disease, and premature death, are not a visitation of Divine Providence, but generally the result of the violation of physical law.

Modern science teaches us that when we observe the laws of our being all the organs work in perfect harmony. Concord produces health, preserves life—but when we transgress the laws of health, which are God's natural laws the organs become deranged, and inharmonious in their action, discord, produces disease—it wastes of life—and death follows.

God who is a being of love and justice, and who deals with his creatures on the principal of benevolence does not, will the death or destruction of any one. He designed, no doubt, that we should wear out by the general decay of all the organs, and not that any one organ should give way; thus producing imperfect harmony—resulting in premature decay, and untimely death. But he designed that all should work together harmoniously until the vital force should become exhausted, and man, like a shock of corn fully ripe, be brought to the tomb.

Solomon says, "God made man upright but he has sought out many inventions. In examining the history and tradition of ancient tribes and nations, we find that those who were careful to observe the laws governing their existence were remarkable for longevity. Such were the ancient Chines, Pythagorians, Essenes, and others, which were able to impart to their posterity a robust and vigorous constitution. It is a physical fact, well understood by peisiologists, that diseases and physical defects of parents are transmitted to their children. The children suffer and die on account of the physical transgressions of their progenitors. But to return to the Bible; Abraham, the chosen one, who was obedient and faithful to the laws of his creator, died an OLD MAN FULL OF YEARS. Gen. xxvii. 8. Sarah and Rebecca too, faithful women, fully ripe in years, were laid away to rest in Machpelah's cave until the resurrection morn, when they shall be remembered and called out to inherit eternal life.

The remote cause of death is stated by the Apostle Paul in Romans v. 12; "By one man sin entered into the world and death by sin." It is worthy of remark that Adam, our federal head, while in the Garden was subject to the possibility but not to the necessity of dying. But after he had transgressed, and was driven from the Garden, being left to the operations of the laws of his own nature, it became a law of necessity that he should die God said to him, "dust thou art and unto dust thou shalt then return." Gen. iii. 19. Thus we read, "And all the days that Adam lived were nine hundred and thirty years and he died." Gen. v. 5.

We, being his children, have the seeds of death sown in our constitution, and are subject to the same waste of vital force; and in process of time must literally and surely die. Death, as styled by self righteous creed makers, is not a personality, nor an angel of light,—to conduct us to superlative felicities beyond the skies, but is a condition to which the human family have been and will be reduced—"Dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return," is the sentence written o'er the brow of every son and daughter of Adam. In the creation God gave man the breath or spirit of life. This is all and this is all that leaves him in death Said Solomon, when speaking of the event of death, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it." Eccl. xii. 7. Then shall the dust, not bodies, but the dust, an element out of which your body and my body is made. Then shall the spirit, not the spirits, in the plural, but the spirit one spirit, an element by which you and I live, whether righteous or wicked, return to God; and man, the intellectual, moral, responsible, agent returns, not to heaven or hell, but to the dust.

I know that popular theology teaches that a part of man does not go to dust. Let us see how much of man is embraced in the expression "dust thou art and unto dust shalt thou return." Does not the singular pronoun thou embrace the whole man without exception of parts; again how much of man is comprehended in the language, "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was?" It will be conceded by every intelligent unbiased mind in this vast audience—that the text includes, just what was formed of dust. Moses, the inspired historian, says the whole man was formed out of the dust. His language is very concise and lucid—touching this point. In Gen. ii. 7, he says, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and breated into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Now put the two statements side by side—"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was." "And the Lord God formed man of the dust" and you cannot fail to perceive the force of the language which is that the whole man was made of dust, and goes back to dust. The spirit which returns to God is not man nor any part of man. The spirit which God gave is to return and no other. When did he give man this spirit and what did he call it? Did he like the the theologians of the present day name it the immortal soul or "inside man?" He gave it at creation and called it the breath of life. Gen. ii. 7. The original word for spirit in Eccl. xii. 7. is rendered breath twenty-eight times, the same word is found in Psa. civ. 29., where we read "Thou hidest thy face they are troubled thou takest away their breath or (spirit) they die and return to their dust." Man in the state of death is unconscious. "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it and they are brought low but he perceiveth it not of them." Job xiv. 21. For the plain Bible reason. "The dead know not anything. Eccl. ix. 5. Such is the condition of our sister." She sleeps the unconscious dreamless sleep of death; and if the master tarry long, we must soon follow and sleep in silence under death's oblivion wave. Our sister, cut down in the morning of life, has faded from our sight. Her form we no longer see, her voice we cannot hear, her eyes are closed. She is hid from our view and all is hushed in the stillness of death. She sleeps but not forever.

We mourn but not without hope. For we are not ignorant concerning them which are asleep—But with joyful anticipation look forward to the glorious dawn of the resurrection morn when God's holy ones shall live again. "When the Lord himself shall descend from heaven with a shout with the voice of an archangel and with the trump of God and the dead in Christ shall rise first. Then we which are alive and remain shall be caught up together with them in the clouds to meet the Lord in the air and so shall we ever be with the Lord. Wherefore comfort one another with these words"—What a glorious promise—sweet words of future life, glory, peace, and eternal union. O, ye desponding ones—cheer up the heart—refrain thy voice from weeping and thine eyes from tears—thy loved one shall come again. Yes she shall return from the enemie's land—the land of darkness and shadow of death—and come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon her head, then we shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

These words uttered to the Apostle Paul concerning the coming of Jesus and the resurrection, which he said were words of comfort, and in fact the only words of comfort, written on the pages of inspiration concerning the dead—all words interwoven with his coming and their reliving again these words of Paul contain the very substance of all the teaching of the patriarch's prophets and apostles. They all looked forward with anxiety to the second advent of Christ and resurrection of the dead as the period when they wear the crown, enjoy the reward and be with Christ. Paul's only hope was in the coming of Christ and the resurrection of the dead. His testimony speaks in tones of thunder against the teachings of modern theology. "I have fought a good fight, I have finished my course, I have kept the faith. Henceforth there is laid up for me a crown of righteousness which the Lord the righteous judge shall give me at that day, and not to me only but unto all them also that love the appearing." 2 Tim. iv. 7. 8. And again he says he "labored if by any means he might attain unto the resurrection of the dead." Phil. iii. 11. And to those who thought there would be no resurrection of the dead he replied as follows: "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus what advantageth it me if the dead rise not let us eat and drink for tomorrow we die." And they also which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished. 18th ver. Under no circumstances whatever can we dispense with the coming of Christ and resurrection of the dead. We believe he will come and that God's sainted dead will live again, this was our sister's hope. She died in this faith, believing that in due time the chief Shepherd would appear and that she would live again. The sweet promise which falls gently on the christians' ear is, "I will come again," John xiv. 2. and the dead shall hear the voice of the son of man and live. John v. 28. 29. Let us live for this time that whether we wake or sleep we may be Christ's at his coming—to share in the beauties and glories of his unending kingdom. Then the conflicts and disappointments incidental to this life will be over and we immortalized shall wear the crown and sing victory over death and the grave. Reported by S. Black, M. D.

…ought, a… which princes in long-forgotten years had dotted palaces and temples from far up, down to their present abode; the river which Abraham saw; and over which Moses stretched his arm in vengeance, where the golden barge of Cleopatra swept with perfumed breezes; and when, but a few years later, she was dead, and her magnificence gone: when the feeble footsteps of the Son of God, in infancy, on earth, hallowed the banks that the idolatry of thousands of years had cursed; the river of which Homer sang, and Isaiah prophesied, and in whose dark waters fell the tears of the weeping Jeremiah; the river of which all poets wrote, all philosophers taught, all learning, all science, all art, spoke for centuries. The waters at our feet, murmuring, dashing, brawling against the foundation of the palace, come by the stately front of Abou Simbal, had loitered before the ruins of Philoe, had dashed over the cataracts, and danced in the starlight of Luxor and Karnac. From what remote glens of Africa, from what Ethiopian plains they rose, we did not pause to think. We drifted slowly down the river, by the spot where tradition says that Moses was hid in the rushes, to the village of the dervweshes, that stands on the bank, among the palaces that stretch from Boulak to old Cairo.

They received us with the utmost politeness. There was no bigoted hatred of Christians visible; on the contrary, they gave us seats in the cool court-yard, under the trees, and brought us coffee, and talked as pleasantly as heart could desire. Fifty wild looking men stood around us, gazing curiously at our costume; but not in the least offended at our visit; and when the hour for commencing worship arrived, they conducted us into their mosque, where we took our seats on the matting.

About eighty men stood in a semi-circle with their faces to the south-west, the center of the circle on the side toward Mecca, by way of guiding the prayers of the faithful in that direction.

The service consisted in swinging backward and forward in time with the leader, a noble-looking man, who walked around the inner side of the circle, and uttering at each swing a violent groan, or rather a deep, strong sob. For half an hour this motion was steady; then it became more rapid. They swung the body forward, leaning down till their hair swept the floor in front, and threw themselves backward with a sudden swift bend until it again touched the floor behind them. The velocity of this motion may be guessed at, from the fact, that for the space of more than an hour, the hair never rested, or fell on the head, but continually described a larger circle than the head in this motion. In the meantime a man, dressed in a long white hooped dress, tight at the waist, and some twenty feet in circumference at the bottom of the skirt, slid into the entrance of the half-circle, and commenced a slow revolution, apparently as gentle and easy as if he stood on a wheel turned by machinery. After a minute, during which he swung out his skirts, his speed increased. For twenty-four minutes, without pause, rest or change of speed, he continued to whirl around like a top. The velocity was exactly fifty-five revolutions to the minute. This was not a long performance. It is oftentimes two or three hours in duration. After this man retired, another took his place; and all the time the excitement in the outer circle was increasing. Some shouted, some howled out the name of God. "Allah! Allah!" rang in the dome of the mosque from eighty voices; and now all the musical instruments, including a dozen large and small drums, added to the terrible noise. Suddenly the noble-looking man, the leader of the revel, turned and faced the city of the prophet; and instantly all was silent. Some fell on the pavement in convulsions; others stood trembling from head to foot, evidently past all

We believe that "every man shall give account of himself to God," "for God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good or evil." Such are a mere tithe of the many things the Christian's creed teaches concerning God.

Article 2. Concerning Christ. We believe that "all power belongs to Him both in heaven and upon earth," that "He is the way, the truth, and the life, and that no man can come unto the Father, but by Him," that "there is one mediator between God and men, the man Christ Jesus, who gave Himself a ransom for all, to be testified in due time," that "He is able to save to the uttermost, all that come to God by Him," and that "being made perfect, He has become the author of eternal salvation, to all them who obey Him." We believe that He has received "a name above every name," and that "there is none other name given under heaven or among men, whereby we can be saved." We believe that He is the Savior, the Messiah, the Shilo, the Immanuel, God with us; that He is the prophet like unto Moses, the seed of Abraham, the star of Bethlehem, the stem of Jesse, the root and the offspring of David, the bright and the morning star. We believe that He is a Priest forever after the order of Melchisedec. The man whose name is the Branch, the Lord our righteousness, the desire of all nations, the prince of the kings of the earth, the king (dejure) to rule in righteousness, the sun of righteousness arising with healing in his wings, the great shepherd of the sheep, the Savior born in the city of David, which is Christ our Lord, the chiefest among ten thousand and the one altogether lovely. We believe He is the Lamb of God, the Son of the tribe of Judah, the bread of life, the effulgence of his Father's glory, and the express image of his person. We believe He is the Apostle and the High Priest of our profession, God manifest in the flesh, the only Potentate, King of kings, and Lord of lord's. We believe that He is the amen, the faithful and true witness, whose name is called the Lord God, the sure foundation, the chief corner stone, the head of the body of the church, the true vine, and the true light, which lighteth every man that cometh into the world. We believe that He is the mediator of the New Covenant, the shepherd and bishop of our souls, the king of saints, the first born among many brethren, the first fruits of them that slept, the resurrection and the life, the Alpha and the Omega, the beginning and the end, the first and the last, the Son of mercy, the Son of David, and the Son of God. Such, dear friends, is but a brief sketch of *what is taught in the Christ*ian creed relative to two of the most prominent articles of religion. And, now, what say you to this matter? Is this Book, without any human legislation, or sufficient rule? If so, then for the sake of truth, love and unity, throw aside those imperfect appendages, and meet us on the Bible, and the Bible alone, as the creed of every true follower of Christ. This is the dictate of wisdom and we are constrained to believe, is the feeling of every pious heart.

Yours in faith,

WM. J. B. PENSIMORE.

Christian Union.

"Neither pray for these alone, but for them also who shall believe on me through their word; that they may all be one, as thou Father art in me and I in thee, that they may also be one in us, that the world may believe that thou hast sent me."

The union of all who believe, is not only practicable, but it is an object greatly to be desired, or the Savior would never have prayed for it. Those, then, who argue for division among the people of God, are sufficiently answered by the fact of their being directly in opposition to the Savior. Union among all true believers, is both desirable and attainable. It is desirable, because in union there is strength. This is clearly demonstrable from all the laws of nature, the history of nations and the word of the Lord. That rippling rivulet,--a genuine type of beauty and innocence--when combined with others no stronger than itself, forms a mighty torrent, that sweeps before it towns and cities, and upon whose majestic bosom floats the commerce of nations. The soft and gentle snow-flake falls harmless at your feet, but that one combined with others, forms a mighty avalanche that will bury a whole city in ruins.

But men tell us that there are no two persons who believe alike, although they may belong to the same church. I suppose that is true, but that does not militate against union; but, rather argues in favor of it. The apostles, perhaps, did not see all things alike, hence the convening of a council at Jerusalem to decide certain points of doctrine.

But did they fall out, and divide, and Paul set up a church of his own, and write out a lot of opinions, and make them the test of membership in his church; and exclude all who were not willing to own eternal allegiance to them, and have his converts known by the name of Paulites, and did the other apostles do the same? No; they were willing to let the Spirit decide these questions, and investigate them by the light of the written Word of Truth, "which was able to make them wise unto salvation." It is not the ideas that men entertain of certain Bible doctrines, but it is the fact that they write them down and make them their articles of faith instead of the Bible. But men say there is nothing in these names. Suppose you were to marry, and after the ceremony your wife would coolly inform you that she preferred to be called by the name of neighbor A. Would you not take it as an insult? But, says one, I love the name that distinguished my forefathers, and I do not like to give it up. But do you love that name better than you do the name by which the Lord said his Church should be known? Remember, the Lord--the husband of the Church--has gone to prepare a home for his wife. He has been gone for a long time, and his bride, it is feared, has forgotten him; for she has taken the names of a variety of other men. Now, when the bridegroom comes to receive his beloved, to dwell with him in that beautiful kingdom which has been the theme of all the prophets and holy men of God, will He own her? or will He spurn her from his presence as an unfaithful spouse, saying, I put upon you, when I left home, my own name; but now, as you have chosen to wear the names of other men you must look to them for protection; you can never share in my estate. There is not an honorable man in the world who would not divorce his wife should she serve him as the professed Christian church has served her Lord and Redeemer. Do you say the church must have a creed, a book of discipline, that it cannot exist without one? Well, the Lord foresaw this and gave the church a creed, and, perhaps, I could do no better their very dust went away on this wise. There is, perhaps, no place in Egypt that, could it have a voice, would utter more strange and splendid histories of men and kings than this island.

The Three-Fold Appearing.

There are three distinct appearings of the Savior, of unspeakable importance to his people, mentioned in a brief section of God's blessed word. "Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true; but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us; nor yet that He should offer himself often, as the high priest entered into the holy place every year with blood of others; for then must He often have suffered since the foundation of the world; but now once in the end of the world hath He appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself. And as it is appointed unto men once to die, but after this the judgment; so Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many; and unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time, without sin, unto salvation." Heb. ix. 24-28.

Not in the order in which they are here described, but in the order in which they are related to each other in the work of redemption, we have in this remarkable passage, first, a past appearing; second, a present appearing; and third, a future appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ. The first refers to the atonement He has already made; the second to the advocacy He is now carrying on in behalf of believers; the third, to his personal advent, when He shall descend from heaven with a shout to awake those whom He has put to sleep in the grave, and to change the righteous then alive, that together they may be caught up in the clouds, to meet the Lord in the air, and so shall ever be with the Lord.

First, "once in the end of the world hath He appeared, to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself." Here the design and consequences of the first appearing are distinctly declared to be the putting away of sin, and the language obviously sets forth that aspect of the Atonement, which bears directly upon the honor of God's character and the interests of his government. We are prone to make our little selves the center of the universe, forgetful of the fact that Jehovah's throne is the center, and that the vindication of the rights of that throne, and the manifestation of his glory, are of infinitely greater moment than the salvation of men. Not only is this the plain teaching of the Scriptures, but it is cordially approved by every true Christian, who would not enter heaven if he could, unless its blessedness may be gained without tarnishing in the slightest any one of God's attributes and perfections.

Hence the Holy Ghost is constantly presenting the work of Christ, not only in its relation to us, but in its relation to his Father. Thus in the types of the Old Testament, the Ark of the Covenant, with the Mercy seat, was described and ordered before the brazen altar was mentioned, and in the sacrifices of Leviticus, the whole burnt offering, which was a symbol of the acceptableness of Christ to God as "a sweet smelling savor," stands at the head of the list, and the trespass offering at the end. So in the words before us, we are told that Christ appeared to put away sin by the sacrifice of Himself, and this would have pleased and glorified God perfectly, even if not one soul had been saved. There is a difference between putting away sin in the 20th verse and bearing the sins of many in the 28th verse, for the one defines the results of Christ's death towards God, as in John i. 29, John xii, 32, and 1 John ii. 2, and the other its results towards believers. The effects of that wondrous death reach out both to the visible creation below, and to the creation above, for which it could be said in the days of Job, "the heavens are not clean in his sight" (Job xv. 15), it can be said no longer, since it is written in the verse immediately preceding the passage under consideration, "it was therefore necessary that the patterns of things in the heavens should be purified with these; but the heavenly things themselves, were better sacrifices than these."

But while the atonement is thus shown to be of such immense value in the sight of a holy God, it is of no avail whatever to the sinner, until it is received by faith as the only ground upon which he can stand in the presence of the Majesty on high. Nay, if rejected or neglected, it adds a heavy weight to the burden of his condemnation, and digs for him a deeper woe in the pit of darkness. When, however, he is led by the Holy Ghost to trust in Jesus alone for salvation, he has positive evidence that his sin is put away. It is not merely that it may be, or shall be, or is beginning to be put away, but IT HAS BEEN put away forever out of God's sight. The word translated put away properly means to set aside, to displace, and all the sin, outward and inward, of a believer is displaced, set aside, cast behind God's back (Isa. xxxviii. 17), cast into the depths of the sea (Mic. vii. 19), separated from him as far as the east is from the west (Psa. ciii. 12), a forgiven and forgotten thing.

Second, yet while this is beyond all doubt true as to our standing before God, we too often fail to walk in the light, as He is in the light, and hence our communion with him is disturbed, though, blessed be his name, our relationship as dear children can never be destroyed. It is to meet this need of our humiliating condition Christ has entered *into heaven itself, "now to ap*pear in the presence of God for us." We ought to live up to our high privilege of preventing the evil nature within us from manifesting its loathsomeness in actual sin, for the Holy Ghost very tenderly says, "My little children, these things write I unto you, that ye sin not" (1 John ii. 1); and "This then I say, Walk in the Spirit, and ye shall not fulfill the lust of the flesh" (Gal. v. 16). But alas! we are not always careful to walk in the Spirit, and if we sin--what then? Ask God to make a fresh application to us of the blood of Christ, as we often hear it expressed in our prayer-meetings? Nay, this would be to call in question the efficacy of the atonement. But "if we confess our sins, He is faithful and just to forgive us our sins, and to cleanse us from all unrighteousness" (1 John i. 9); and "if any man sin (that is, any believer, of course), we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ, the righteous" (1 John ii. 1). The same word here rendered advocate is translated comforter in John xiv. 16; and so abundant are the provisions made for believers, that they have an an advocate down here to keep them from sin, and another advocate up yonder to restore their broken communion with God if they do sin, by leading them to see their failure, and to confess it, and still to trust in Him as their all and in all.

Third, "unto them that look for Him shall He appear the second time without sin unto salvation." His past appearance to make atonement for sin, and his present appearance in heaven as our advocate with the Father, properly engage the constant attention of his followers; but his future appearing, and it may be in the very near future, seems to have dropped out of the thoughts of most modern Christians. They substitute death, or the Holy Spirit's work, or startling providences, or something else, in place of his own personal appearing; and it has come to pass that a precious and prominent truth of God's word exerts little or no influence over their hearts and lives. It may well be asked by what authority do those who profess to receive that word as the man of their counsel heeds its testimony concerning the two appearings, and then turn away from the third appearing mentioned in the same connection, as if it were a forbidden topic? May the grace that saves teach us to stand every day, "looking for that blessed hope, and the glorious appearing of the great God and our Savior Jesus Christ, who gave Himself for us, that He might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto Himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works," (Tit. ii. 13-14).—The Truth.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

1.—All communications for the RESTITUTION should be written in a plain, legible hand; and, before sent, carefully revised and corrected.

2.—Business notes and communications, if on the same sheet, should be written so that they can be taken apart, without defacing the communication. If necessary, a separate slip may be enclosed in the same envelope.

3.—When you send names of new subscribers, let them be marked as such.

4.—Be careful to write all names of persons and places plainly and distinctly.

5.—In all cases, give the name of the post-office, county, and state. When a town or village is called by one name, and the post-office by another, be sure to give the name of the post-office.

6.—When the direction of a paper is to be changed do not forget to name the office to which it has been sent. Unless this is done, it is out of our power to make the change.

7.—When subscribers remove, let us know immediately. Otherwise, the papers will continue to be sent, and to their charge, until such notice is given.

8.—When subscribers wish to discontinue, let them remember that all arrearages must first be paid.

9.—Parties ordering BIBLE returned, must prepay the postage; otherwise they will remain in the office.

In the whole of which is added a valuable Alphabetical appendix. 611 pages, in neat bound double volume. Price, plain, Roan binding, $5 75.

THE RESTITUTION.

Rest in the Lord.

BY FRANCES POWER COBBE.

God draws a cloud over each gleaming morn.
Would we ask why?
It is because all noblest things are born
In agony.

Only upon mountains of pain or woe
God's sun may lie;
Each soul redeemed from self and sin must know
His Calvary.

Yet must we grave for neither joy nor grief;
God chooses best;
He only knows our sick soul's fit relief,
And gives us rest.

More than our feeble hearts can ever plead
For holiness,
That Father, in His tenderness divine,
Traineth to bless.

What though we fall, and bruised and wounded lie,
Our life is hid?
God's arm shall lift us up to victory;
In Him we rest.

For neither life, nor death, nor things below
Nor things above,
Shall ever sever us that we should go
From His great love.

Red-Hot Religion.

There is this to be said in behalf of revivalists like Varley and Moody and Sankey, that they warm up people's religion when it is cold, and put a little temporary life into it. They do not pretend to teach new doctrines, nor to inculcate new precepts. Their hearers are presumed to know, and in fact do know, all about the subject of their discourses. Their task is to revive faded impressions, rouse dormant feelings, and quicken dead emotions, and in some aspects of the case they do good. Just as vice, by familiarity, becomes less odious, so virtue, after long practice, sometimes loses its attractiveness, and by dressing it in a new garb and setting it in a new light, men may, perhaps, be won back to their first love for it. Old truths gain additional force by being presented in an unusual form, and when the soul is heated red hot in the fire of stirring eloquence it may be more susceptible to good influences than in a state of cold worldliness.

The drawback to this possible benefit is that souls get cool again as easily and quickly as they get hot. Virulent emotions are, from the very nature of the human constitution, transitory. If it were not so, revivalists would soon exhaust their field of labor. If all religious converts stayed converted, there would remain, after a while, no more work of the kind to be done. Preachers thrive upon the recurrence of sinfulness in their hearers as doctors thrive upon the repeated violations of the laws of health by their patients. Statistics show that not more than one-third of the members admitted to the Methodist church on probation persevere in their religious course, and the same fact is presumably true of other denominations. Nor does this third continue in anything like their primitive fervor. They settle down into the usual humdrum, easy-going style of Christian, and need a fresh revival as much as their backsliding and unconverted brethren.

Worse than this, after a soul has been heated red hot and then cools off, it is not so easy to warm it up again. Cast-iron melted over once or twice becomes refractory to the fiercest furnace, and men are something like it. There is a certain amount of kindling in them, and when that is burned out they defy the match. They become seasoned to the stimulus of eloquence as the toper becomes seasoned to Jersey lightning. They resist the pleadings of the orator as fruit trees blossoming out of season and then nipped by the frost resist the wooing of the summer sun. The germs of a religious life once killed, require another year in which to form, and fortunate is he to whom that additional year is granted.

Nor is this red hot religion, while it lasts, of much practical value. Life is not made up of prayer-meetings and sermon hearing. Men must do their work in the world, and women must attend to their households. It is in the trials and exigencies of every-day affairs that religious principle is really tested. It is easy enough to sing hymns and shout amen to a preacher's exhortations, but how is it about dealing honestly in business, doing justice to one's neighbor, and living generally according to the ten commandments? It may be a popular error, but there is a wide-spread belief that eminent piety in the church is no hindrance to profound rascality down town or vinegar-tempered behavior in the domestic circle. The revivalists do nothing to destroy this conviction, because they are aiming at something else. They start a work which they do not stay to finish, and unless some one else takes it up, it comes to an end. So that after all the best fruits of religion are due to the patient, steady minister, who never makes a sensation, but who attends to his daily duty, and, by words of warning, reproof and advice, faithfully cultivates the field which his Master has allotted to him."—N. Y. Paper.

Past and Future.

Whilst the historian is borne back to ages so remote that gray tradition cannot recollect them, and athwart oblivious centuries, in nooks of brightness and in oases of light, sees the patriarch groups clear, vivid, and familiar as the household scenes of yesterday, there is also a picture sketched for the explorers of the future. For whilst the apocalyptic curtain slowly rises—whilst through its fringe of fire, the new Jerusalem comes down from heaven; and gazing on the pearly gates, and peaceful streets, and bowers of sanctity, our planet can scarce believe that she is gazing on herself, that this is old mother earth grown young again—that this vision of holiness and bliss is nothing more than Paradise restored—that new but yet ancient earth in which dwelleth righteousness. —Hamilton.

Jerusalem.

Jerusalem! Name ever dear! What hallowed memories and entrancing recollections spring at the mere mention of that name! There is music and magic in the very thought! Jerusalem, the joy of the whole earth! The city of the great King! Zion, the city of solemnities—an eternal excellency! "The hill which God desireth to dwell in; yea, will dwell in it forever!" The theatre of the most stupendous events that ever occurred in the annals of the world. Jerusalem! the world-attracting magnet of the devout pilgrim of every age, and the stern warrior of every clime; a spot at once the focus and the radiating point of the strongest emotions of three powerful religions! The land of hallowed associations, endearing reminiscences, and glorious anticipations! The renowned metropolis of the children of miracle, of prophecy, of promise, and of Providence—a people near and dear unto the Lord, and still beloved for the father's sakes!

What are the recollections associated with the monuments and antiquities of Memphis, Babylon, Nineveh, Rome, London, or the cities of the Aztecs, compared with those that cluster around the city of the great King! Whose antiquity is of ancient days—even the days of the diluvian patriarch Shem!—the city where the "King of Peace and Righteousness" commenced with the "Friend of God."—when the son of Jesse tuned his soul-stirring harp, and penned his Psalms for the saints of all ages; where Solomon reared a house for the Lord of hosts to dwell between the cherubim; where the Son of God suffered and died, and rose again—whence He ascended on high, and whither He will come again on the clouds of heaven in like manner as He went up—"and his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives," and "Jehovah of hosts shall reign in Mount Zion, and in Jerusalem, and before his ancients gloriously," sitting upon his throne in the sublime metropolis then brought near—the new Jerusalem above. Then shall the Holy City truly become "the joy of the whole earth!"

"Glorious things of thee are spoken, Zion, city of our God!"

—Barclay.

Heathen Records of the Deluge.

It is a curious illustration of the folly and perversity of the human heart, that skeptics will often accept the statements of heathens who justify falsehood, and excuse or approve all manner of vice, and at the same time reject the testimony of Christians who believe that falsehood is wrong, and that all liars shall have their part in a lake that burneth with fire and brimstone. Hence what is contained in the Bible is rejected at once, as a matter of course, without examination, as priest-craft and deception, while an equally wonderful story related in heathen tradition or rapped out by the lettering legs of a dancing table, is accepted as law, gospel, and common sense. Why this is so may seem a mystery to some; others will remember that you can lead a man by a hair, wherever he desires to go.

If a man is morally and logically honest, it matters little how skeptical he may be. He may be as cautious as Thomas of old, who said "Except I shall see in his hands the print of the nails, and put my finger into the print of the nails, and thrust my hand into his side, I WILL NOT BELIEVE;" and there will be no trouble in finding evidence enough to satisfy every reasonable doubt of such a man, because you have got his terms, and can meet them. But it is impossible to bargain with a man who will never name his terms. If there is logical honesty at the bottom of a man's mind, the fabric of evidence will at last rise through the mire of doubt, when evidence enough has been dropped into its depths. But if there is no conviction, no logic, no conscience, but only an unfathomed abyss of prejudice, crookedness and unbelief, it is useless to sink foundation-stones into such a quagmire. The man needs, not argument, to convince his head, but grace, to renew his heart, purge out his hypocrisy, and make him an honest man before God.

We are all Missionaries.

Every Christian man is, by his oath of allegiance, a missionary. There is not one law for minister and another for hearer. The Gospel does not bind the preacher and absolve the people. There is not one solitary line in God's revelation which says that the one must work and sacrifice, and give, and the other may hoard and keep. You may be tied down to the dull routine of daily toil, and yet your life, hid with Christ in God, may make you one of the best preachers of righteousness in the world. You may be a great stammerer, and your life of love go to every heart. We can all give our example. A chance word of reproof, a wayside word of warning, a loving invitation, an act of Christian courtesy done in a Christian way, may lead others unto Christ. It is not so much where we are, and it is not alone what we do, but the why we do it. A man who loves the Savior must in some way be the refuge of the weary. If he speaks, it must be as one tempted man speaks to another who is battling with temptations. It is not done by fierce warnings. It is not by assailing sinners as you would besiege a city. It is the old and blessed story of God's love leading weary souls to Jesus, helping them to grope out of the dark and tangled wilderness, and cheering them at every step on the way to deliverance and safety. There is no one so poor that he cannot do something for Christ. Whether it be the widow's mite or the rich man's gift, God will bless it.

—Mutual friendship is sanctified by joint worship.

—Man's extremity is generally God's opportunity.

Startling.

The Chicago Times prints a letter from a Methodist minister in the course of which he says, addressing the Methodist ministry:

Brethren, is it not about time we had begun to be honest? Is it not about time we had come to ourselves? I have read the semi-liberal discourses of Hews, Swing, McKaig, and others, and so far as they go, they please me much, but in my opinion they fall far short of the mark. We do not, any of us, believe in a literal hell. Then why do we preach and hold up Christ as a Saviour to save men from a place that has no existence? If all the hell there is, is mental, then common sense and common honesty would indicate that we quit that kind of preaching, and that we hold up the teaching of Christ and all other good men, and call upon sinners to conform to these teachings, and thereby secure happiness—secure heaven. If this is the reasonable view of the case,—and I affirm it is—then away goes the dogma of vicarious atonement; of Christ being a God; and many other dogmas that are only a bar to the church.

It appears to me and it is but a short time since I came to myself) that if we are honest, we will, one and all, abandon these unreasonable things, and come straight down to our work—down to the real needs of humanity.

He must be blind indeed who cannot see that the tendency of the most enlightened thought of this age is dead set against the dogmas of old theology. Science, and I may say the true God of science, with adamantine strength has spoken, and we tremble to the very marrow.

I have said that the tendency of enlightened thought is against us. The literature of a people may be said to be a confession of their faith. If this is a fair proposition, then the dogmas of theology are doomed.

It is a notorious fact that there are no men or women of culture or enlightened sense converted in our prayer meetings. The converts are ignorant, and mostly young persons that have no minds of their own.

If the creeds that we require persons to assent to, before admitting them to our churches, are false, then I say, in the name of God, of honesty, of truth, let us abandon them, let us come to ourselves. I trust that my brother ministers of evangelical denominations will unite in calling a meeting, and unanimously make a clean sweep of the dead-wood of theology. I am sure, if they will, that there will be such rejoicing in this city, and throughout this country, as has not been heard since the surrender of Lee.

A METHODIST MINISTER.

"Brick" Pomeroy on the Bible.

In a private letter to brother Amos Sanford, of recent date, Mr. Pomeroy says:

"You are pleased to notice my belief in the Bible. There is no beautiful truth that is not found in its teachings. Did you ever see the shimmering heat rising in waves from the sun-warmed earth, telling that summer had come? From the recitals and histories of years times events and traditions, as recorded in the Bible, there rises the same inexpressible proof that that which we call the Word of God is all we have of his word and proof convincing to me that if that is not the Word of God then we have none.

There may be Bibles unwritten floating in time, laden with great truths for mortal minds to study when minds are ripe enough to understand inspiration, but the book we call the Bible is enough for me now. It suggests grave thoughts and these are the ladders by which we will reach heaven. The duty I owe to my country is a great one. The "Democrat" goes far and wide. Thus I must work, study, be earnest, vigilant and constant in my endeavors for the right. When I am able to lay aside the political harness, I wish a year or two for quiet literary work, writing mellow chapters for children in the endeavor to teach the same religion as was taught by Christ, "Peace on earth and good will to men." But I must have men more honest than now before I can make peace with all of them."

Brother S. expresses the hope that Mr. Pomeroy may yet see the truth and use his pen, which is "mightier than the sword," in teaching those things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ, which will in the age to come, bring "peace on earth and good will to men." But he must learn to forgive men their trespasses and love his enemies—"all of them"—before he can be qualified for writing "mellow chapters," even for children.

Proclamation of the Truth in Austin, Illinois.

Austin is a pleasant little town, situated on the Chicago & Northwestern railroad, six miles west of Chicago, and is inhabited mostly by people who do business in Chicago. We have four church societies, viz: Methodist, Baptist, Presbyterian and Brethren of the Abrahamic Faith. The brethren at Austin, formerly composed about one-half of the church at Chicago, but left not on on account of any trouble whatever, but entirely as a matter of policy, travel being both inconvenient and expensive, and it was thought advisable to proclaim the Word in that locality.

We assemble every Sunday morning for worship, and in the afternoon to preach the good news to those without, and every Thursday evening for mutual improvement.

About Jan'y 1, we secured the Town Hall for the purpose of having brother Thomas Wilson deliver a course of lectures. Two lectures were delivered there when the Baptists offered their house on condition that we find a man to take care of it. The offer was accepted, and we have had lectures every week since that time. Brother Hoffner, formerly of Philadelphia, lectured for us two weeks ago, and is to speak again a week from Sunday. He has also consented to alternate with brother Thomas Wilson. Brother Thomas Wilson lately lectured upon the subject of the "Great Egyptian Pyramid," illustrated by diagrams, which caused some interest.

We have also from time to time circulated quite a number of tracts, which speak when we are silent.

We have encouragement to proceed as quite a number take interest in the things spoken, and with a little more labor hope to see them put on Christ by baptism, and be ready to meet Jesus when He comes.

The Living Vine.

I do not know a more expressive or suggestive portrait of the true church of the Lord Jesus Christ, than that which our blessed Lord presents in the opening part of John xv. He likens Himself to the vine, full of life and vigor; He likens all true Christians, scattered throughout the world, by whatever name they may be distinguished or branded among mankind, as the living branches united to that vine. And He tells them that the fruit they bear is the evidence of their living union with Him, and gives, by His fragrance and its plentifulness, glory to Him who grafted them on the vine, and He invites to accept the blessed relationship, them that are by nature aliens, and strangers, and foreigners, without God, without Christ, without hope in the world.

It is easy to see therefore, what is true Christianity. It is no incorporation with a church, however excellent; it is not a name, however musical; it is not a profession, however loud; it is not a subscription to a creed; but it is a living, vital—the most close, the most intimate union and communion with Christ, the vine, the root, the life, the way, the truth. Are we united with Him? The best evidence that we are is the fruit we bear; and if we be not united unto Him, our privileges will only aggregate our ruin, our light will only guide our steps to misery. Were men to think less of the church they belong to, and more whether they are branches of the living vine, the whole church would be happier. Christ's cause would spread faster, and the people would make ready for the coming of the Lord. Our Lord tells us that "every branch that beareth not fruit, he taketh away."—Cumming.

There were the great Scripture giants Goliah and Og. The former was six cubits and a span high (1 Sam. xvii. 4) variously estimated to be from nine feet six to twelve feet. During the reign of Augustus Cæsar, we read of two giants, Edualo and Secundilla, who were each ten feet high, and after their death their bodies were kept for a long time as a wonder. During the reign of Vitellius, he sent Damlas as a hostage to Rome with presents, and among these was a Jew by the name of Eleazar, who was ten feet two inches high. Gabara, the Arabian giant, was nine feet nine inches high. The Emperor Maximus was eight feet and six inches high. Jacobus Damian was eight feet. William Evans, seven feet six inches high.

Conscience an Avenger.

Conscience is an avenger. It stands at its post, ready to vindicate the majesty of broken law; it rebukes sin with stern voice, and passes its sentence on the transgressor; it is man's best friend or his dreadful enemy. There is a torture of regret felt for evil deeds, neglected duties, corrupted minds and wasted lives, which, in depth and keenness, surpasses all other suffering. It haunts a man everywhere. It is a flame kindled in his soul, which inwardly torments and consumes him. It is an eternal fact that he cannot reject the guardian cure of conscience, or escape the pains of its avenging lash. It is a gnawing worm, which secretly preys upon his vitals. Though its avenging power may not be felt at once, and though we may sin and seem to prosper, and, absorbed in the engossing excitements of the world, despise demands upon us until we think we have conquered conscience, it will come and have its debt of us, and it will claim its prerogative; it will rake over the ashes of our indifference, and rekindle the extinguished fire. In some season of thoughtfulness, in some day of disappointment and trouble, when our vanities and pride are thrown down, in some restless hour, when sleep flies from the pillow, when gain and ambition must fall to excite and satisfy the heart, that outraged friend will rise up and do its office, and lift its avenging hand.—Selected.

—A Catholic statistician claims that out of the 40,000,000 of souls in the United States, 5,701,242 are Roman Catholics. They occupy 6,020 stations, chapels, and churches; they have the service of 4,873 priests, six apostolic vicars, forty-nine bishops, nine archbishops, and one cardinal. That they are increasing is quite obvious. They already have eighteen theological schools, or seminaries, with nearly 1,500 students; over 2,000 schools of all grades, and more than 300 asylums and hospitals. The jurisdiction of these prelates has a very wide range, 2,00 souls in the diocese of Little Rock, Ark., to 300,000 in that of Chicago, and from the archbishopric of Oregon, comprising 20,000, to that of New York, rated at 700,000. These figures are stupendous.

Beyond.

The church says—My kingdom is at hand; my sun is about to rise; I shall soon see the King in his beauty; I shall soon be keeping festival, and the joy of my promised morning will make me forget that I ever wept.

Beyond the death-bed, and beyond the grave, she sees the resurrection. Beyond the broken hearts and severed bonds of time, she realizes and clasps the eternal love links; beyond the troubles of the hour, and the storm that is to wreck the world, she casts her eye, and feels transported into the Kingdom that cannot be moved, as if already she had taken up her abode in the New Salem, the city of peace and righteousness.—Homer.

out of which your body and my body is made. Then shall the spirit, not the spirits, in the plural, but the spirit one spirit, an element by which you and I live, whether righteous or wicked, return to God; and man, the intellectual, moral, responsible, agent returns, not to heaven or hell, but to the dust.

I know that popular theology teaches that a part of man does not go to dust. Let us see how much of man is embraced in the expression "dust thou art and unto dust shall thou return." Does not the singular pronoun thou embrace the whole man without exception of parts; again how much of man is comprehended in the language. "Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was?" It will be conceded by every intelligent unbiased mind in this vast audience—that the text includes, just what was formed of dust. Moses, the inspired historian, says the whole man was formed out of the dust. His language is very concise and lucid—touching this point. In Gen. ii. 7, he says, "And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground and created into his nostrils the breath of life and man became a living soul." Now put the two statements side by side—"Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was." "And the Lord God formed man of the dust" and you cannot fail to perceive the force of the language which is that the whole man was made of dust, and goes back to dust. The spirit which returns to God is not man nor any part of man. The spirit which God gave is to return and no other. When did he give man this spirit and what did he call it? Did he like the theologians of the present day name it the immortal soul or "inside man!" He gave it at creation and called it the breath of life. Gen. ii. 7. The original word for spirit in Eccl. xii. 7. is rendered breath twenty-eight times, the same word is found in Psa. civ. 29., where we read "Thou hidest thy face they are troubled thou takest away their breath or (spirit) they die and return to their dust." Man in the state of death is unconscious. "His sons come to honor and he knoweth it and they are brought low but he perceiveth it not of them." Job xiv. 21. For the plain Bible reader [illegible] to dwell, but Lillie was doomed to disappointment.

About noon a cold north wind arose and before night it was freezing cold, and her mama dare not expose her to it. It almost broke her little heart, and it took her a full hour to become calm and give it up.

But this was not all of Lillie's trouble.

The next Saturday came, and as it was warm and bright, the same promise was renewed to her. But soon after dinner a dark cloud was seen in the west with high wind that soon rose to a gale, followed by rain that lasted all the afternoon.

Poor Lillie was often in my mind; and how deeply was I impressed with this thought—that with every promise given a little child, should be mingled, in careful teaching, this Bible saying—"IF THE LORD WILL, we shall live, and do this or that." James iv. 15.

Matt, the Idiot Boy.

A lady, wandering along the seacoast of an English watering-place, observed a boy intently gazing up at a small space between the clouds. Drawing close to him she said, "What are you looking at, my boy?" The child made no answer. "Boy, boy," said she, shaking him gently by the sleeve. "What are you doing?" The boy sighed, rubbed his eyes, shaded them, looked up again, and said, with earnestness, "Matt was looking for God. Matt wants to see God." The clouds closed, and, as if to comfort himself for the disappointment, he said in a more cheerful tone, "Matt shall see God some day."

How God Loves.

"We love him, because he first loved us."—1 John iv. 19.

A minister of the Gospel once illustrated the love of God to one who feared God could not love him on account of the coldness of his affections. "When I leave you I shall go to my own residence, if the Lord will; and when there the first thing I expect to do is to call for a baby that is in the house. I expect to place her on my knee, and look down into her sweet eyes, and listen to her charming prattle, and, tired as I am, her presence will rest me, for I love that child with unutterable tenderness. But the fact is, to say the most for her, she loves me very little. If my heart were breaking under the burden of a crushing sorrow, it would not disturb her sleep. If my body were racked with excruciating pain, it would not interrupt her play with her toys. If I were dead she would be amused in watching my pale face and closed eyes. If my friends come to remove my corpse to the place of burial, she would probably clasp her hands in glee, and in two or three days totally forget her papa. Besides this she has never brought me in a penny, but has been a constant expense on my hands ever since she was born. Yet, although I am not rich in the world's possessions, there is not money enough in the world to buy my baby. How is it? Does she love me, or do I love her? Do I withhold my love until I know she loves me? Am I waiting for her to do something worthy of my love before extending it to her?"

We would say to our little folks this is the way God loves his children. Our heavenly Father looks down upon us, in all our weakness, and loves us with a greater love than our father or mother ever showed toward us in this world. Let us learn to love him, to us His Word, and obey his commands, and He will give us a life that will never end. S. A. C.

—The more you know the Lord, the better you will trust Him; the more you trust Him, the better you will love him; the more you love Him, the better you will serve Him.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.

All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—

THE RESTITUTION,

Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates, as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of Kings, and the foremost rabbi as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the translation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, no article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrine on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of rejecting those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Origin of the World.

LONDON, March 3, 1875.

Having recently made a series of important discoveries relating to the Book of Genesis, among some remarkable texts which form part of the collection presented to British Museum by the proprietors of the Daily Telegraph, I venture once more to bring Assyrian subjects before your readers.

In my lecture on the "Chaldean Account of the Deluge," which I delivered on Dec. 3, 1872, I stated my conviction that all the earlier narratives of Genesis would receive new light from the inscriptions so long buried in the Chaldean and Assyrian mounds; but I little thought at that time that I was so near to finding most of them.

My lecture, as your readers know, was soon followed by the proposal of your proprietors and the organizing of the Daily Telegraph expedition to Assyria. While excavating at Kouyunjik, during that expedition, I discovered the missing portion of the first column of the Deluge tablet, an account of which I sent home; and, in the same trench, I subsequently found the fragment which I afterwards recognized as part of the Chaldean story of the Creation, which relic I have noticed already in your columns. I excavated later on, while still working under your auspices, another portion belonging to this story, far more precious,—in fact, I think, to the general public, the most interesting and remarkable Cuneiform tablet yet discovered. This turns out to contain the story of man's original innocence, of the temptation, and of the fall. I was, when I found it, on the eve of departing, and had not time to properly examine my great prize. I only copied the two or three first lines, which (as I had then no idea of the general subject of the tablet) did not appear very valuable, and I forthwith packed it in the box for transport to England, where it arrived safely, and was presented by the proprietors of the Daily Telegraph, with the rest of their collection, to the British Museum. On my return to England I made some other discoveries among my store, and in the pursuit of these this fragment was overlooked. I subsequently went a second time to Assyria, and returned to England in June, 1874; but I had no leisure to look again at those particular legends until the end of January in this year. Then, starting with the fragment of the creation, in the Daily Telegraph collection, which I had first noticed, I began to collect other portions of the series, and among these I soon found the overlooked fragment which I had excavated at Kouyunjik, the first lines of which I took down in the note-book of my first expedition. I subsequently found several pieces in the old Museum collection, and all join or form parts of a continuous series of legends, giving the history of the world from the Creation down to some period after the fall of man. Linked with this, I found also other series of legends on primitive history, including the story of the building of the Tower of Babel and of the confusion of tongues.

The first series, which I may call "The Story of the Creation and Fall," when complete must have consisted of nine or ten tablets, at least, and the history upon it is much longer and fuller than the corresponding account in the Book of Genesis. With respect to these Genesis narratives a furious strife has existed for many years; every word has been scanned by eager scholars, and every possible meaning which the various passages could bear has been suggested; while the age and authenticity of the narratives have been discussed on all sides. In particular, it may be said that the account of the fall of man, the heritage of all Christian countries, has been the centre of this controversy, for it is one of the pivots on which the Christian religion turns. The world-wide importance of these subjects will, therefore, give the newly discovered inscription, and especially the one relating to the fall, an unparalleled value, and I am glad, indeed, that such a treasure should have resulted from your expedition.

Whatever the primitive account may have been from which the earlier part of the book of Genesis was copied, it is evident that the brief narration given in the Pentateuch omits a number of incidents and explanations,—for instance, as to the origin of evil, the fall of the angels, the wickedness of the serpent, etc. Such points as these are included in the Chaldean narrative; but of course I can say little about them until I prepare full translations of the legends.

The narrative on the Assyrian tablets commences with a description of the period before the world was created, when there existed a chaos or confusion. The desolate and empty state of the universe and the generation by chaos of monsters are vividly given. The chaos is presided over by a female power named Tiâmat and Tiamat, corresponding to the Thalatth of Berosus; but as it proceeds the Assyrian account agrees rather with the Bible than with the short account from Berosus. We are told, in the inscriptions, of the fall of the celestial being who appears to correspond to Satan. In his ambition he raises his hand against the sanctuary of the God of heaven, and the description of him is really magnificent. He is represented riding in a chariot through celestial space, surrounded by the storms, with the lightning playing before him, and wielding a thunderbolt as a weapon.

This rebellion leads to a war in heaven and the conquest of the powers of evil, the gods in due course creating the universe in stages, as in the Mosaic narrative, surveying each step of the work and pronouncing it good. The Divine work culminates in the creation of man, who is made upright and free from evil, and endowed by the gods with the noble faculty of speech.

The deity then delivers a long address to the newly created being, instructing him in all his duties and privileges, and pointing out the glory of his state. But this condition of blessing does not last long before man, yielding to temptation, falls; and the Deity then pronounces upon him a terrible curse, invoking on his head all the evils which have since afflicted humanity. These last details are, as I have before stated, upon the fragments which I excavated during my first journey to Assyria, and the discovery of this single relic, in my opinion, increases many times over the value of the Daily Telegraph collection.

I have at present recovered no more of the story, and am not yet in a position to give the full translations and details; but I hope during the spring to find time to search over the collection of smaller fragments of tablets, and to light upon any smaller parts of the legends which may have escaped me. There will arise, besides, a number of important questions as to the date and origin of the legends, their comparison with the Biblical narrative, and as to how far they may supplement the Mosaic account.

It will probably be some few months before my researches are sufficiently advanced to publish them in full; meanwhile, the interest which I know the public feel in these discoveries must be my excuse for this short and imperfect notice in your columns. When my investigations are completed I will publish a full account and translation of these Genesis legends, all of which I have now been fortunate enough to find, some in the old Museum collection, others by excavation in Assyria. I am, sir, yours, &c.,

GEORGE SMITH.

Suspended Thought.

Rev. Mr. Hendrix, when visiting the patients in a Canadian hospital, a number of years since, discovered therein a man who appeared to be perfectly demented, but otherwise in good health. Inquiring into the cause of his malady, he was informed that it was occasioned by a depression of the skull upon the brain, by a blow from the falling limb of a tree. Procuring surgical aid, Mr. Hendricks caused the depressed skull to be raised to its natural position, when the patient uttered the concluding word of a sentence that he had begun to address to his son, with whom, fourteen years before, he was splitting rails under the tree where he received the injury that deprived him of his senses: "Put in the —— wedge."

This, I think, is a remarkable example of suspended thought. For fourteen years he had lived perfectly unconscious of the loss of a moment of time. But he ate, drank, slept, awoke, and moved about; but how? Simply as a machine. Like a clock, the human mechanism had been wound up, or set in motion, and must run its allotted time, though a part of its complicated machinery, unessential to its longevity should cease to move. The hunger, and the act of supplying its demands, were but a part of the natural movements of the intricate machine. The whole case weighs heavily against the doctrine that man possesses an immortal soul, capable of thinking, enjoying, and suffering, independent of the body. It proves that the brain is the organ of thought.

The Achievements of the Bible.

Meteors leave their track of light heaven cast their shadows as they fall. The earth is furrowed by streams; the track of animals that roamed long, long ago over chaos is cut in stone; and even raindrops have written their history in the solid rock. What has the Bible done for man, and on man's world? Its annals—are they replete with records of good done, wrongs redressed, men saved, and God glorified? What are the facts? The book itself commands attention. The Veda, the writing of Confucius, and the Koran, are modern compared with it. When it was laid in complete form on the table of the world, it was found that forty centuries had made contributions of their best things to it. Its authorship is spread over sixteen hundred years. It has been copied during thirty centuries, and survived the wreck of empires, of mythologies, and philosophies—ministering to the true needs and deepest sympathies of humanity. It has been assailed by all evil things; yet in its turn it has borne down on them with a power that destroys them. In harmony in itself, with all the laws of God's kingdom, it moves with an energy derived from the Spirit. On opening its pages we feel as if all around were unearthly and sublime, as if we approached the throne of the eternal Author. In the very constitution of the Bible there is evidence of one divine mind acting through and above all human agents for the production of one grand result —the eternal purpose of redemption in Christ Jesus. As the sun mirrors himself only in a calm ocean, so the living, personal Jehovah mirrors himself in the Bible, as the God of Providence and redemption, making the one uniform claim of faith on all men, faith in the Lord Jesus and his kingdom.

The vigor, beauty and purity of the ethical parts of the Bible; the matchless simplicity and charm of its histories; the sun of purity, which has never set, but has rolled down a flood of light to our day; the poetry which, in flow and fire, in crushing force, in majesty that still seems to echo the awful sounds of Sinai, is the most superb within the breast of man—all these have made the Bible a mighty power in the world through its influence on the human mind. The God whom it teaches us to worship is the only absolutely perfect One, in holiness and love, that man has ever known; nor heaven, nor earth, nor hell has known another Savior, besides the Lord Jesus whom it reveals; and the religion which it brings is the only one on earth that does not degrade men and insult God. The Bible has encountered prejudice, storm, and enduring hate. The Veda had no foes; the Zenda Avesta no enemies: and the Greeks accepted with acclamations the poems of Homer. Why is not the Bible, with its power to inspire the loftiest intelligences with love and veneration, with its matchless morals and its sublime spirituality, the book of every class of men, and of all men? Why do men of thought often look coldly on it? How comes it that in this scientific age, there is a spirit abroad of alienation from it? The ancient classic literature, which has charmed the intellectual world for twenty centuries, is pagan in ethics and mythology, and therefore antagonistic to the Bible. Modern letters, conformed in a great degree to ancient models, and derived from these fountain heads, follow frequently the same course in disputing moral greatness; in ignoring those moral principles and sentiments peculiar to revealed religion; in propounding theories of life, happiness, and immortality that are not distinctively Christian; in ignoring wholly, or partially palliating, the depraved moral condition of man; and in neglecting redemption by Jesus Christ.

The struggle between the theories and spirit of paganism and the principles of the Bible is not yet over. The infamous doctrines which prevailed in France in the 18th century, notwithstanding the bloody commentary furnished on them by the revolution, are rising again in formidable array even in our own country, and they seem to aim at the uprooting of all faith in the Bible. If for twenty centuries, Holy Scripture has withstood every attempt to corrupt it, every cruel effort to wrench the signet ring of God from its finger, and every insidious war against the religious instincts of this million-peopled world, do not the hates that have pursued it, the fires that have been kindled to burn it, and the rude assaults of suspicious infidels on it, prove it divine and unconquerable? Thus they treated the Just One, and thus they treated his book. The knowledge communicated by the Bible is unique, saving, and of infinite value. No other book of any age or nation gives the same view of sin, as the violation of moral law, as an evil of infinite magnitude, as involving eternal punishment, and as evinced only in the sufferings and death of the Son of God. This is one of the discoveries that stamp the book with transcendent power and utility. The Bible is the mainspring of civilization. The immortal principle embodied in the Bible, that God alone is Lord of the conscience, has done more for the emancipation of man, for moral freedom and civil liberty, than all the efforts, sufferings, and literature of Mahommedan and Pagan nations put together.

The Bible influences and regenerates literature. If you compare in its transcendent greatness English literature to a globe, then undoubtedly, if the Bible is not its creator, it fashioned, moulded, and gave to it its substance. It alone reveals a perfect code in the form of moral law; it alone exhibits a perfect pattern in the life of the Lord Jesus. Strike down the Bible and you will have the universal debauchery of heathenism. Exchange the Bible for the dictate of unaided reason, and for a time you may dwell in the shade of art and play at the gymnastics of eloquence, but come at length it will, and the glory of modern society shall go up in rottenness—introducing the reign of ignorance, cruelty, sensuality, and despair. The main use of the Bible has been to originate and sustain true religion in the world. The infidel comes to rob us of our peace, and of our prospects, and to throw the shade of negation over the glory that awaits us; and for the Bible and Christ, and joy, and the resurrection life, of which he would rob us, what does he offer? A little science, some poetry, strong negations, a sigh, and perhaps a sneer. Infidelity is poor, for it has no divine revelation; it is narrow, for the creation of sense it makes the present time all; it is deaf, for it has not the voice of God in his Word; it is foolish, for it wars against the greatest, strongest, best things in the universe of God. Can it be that because God has not shut every avenue by which his testimony can be evaded, men in their pride will not deign to accept his mercy? The alternative is not the Bible or man made religions, the Bible or materialism. No, the awful alternative for every living man that has ears to hear is, Obey the Scriptures or you perish. Of all the facts of science none is better established than that the mind of the natural man is enmity against God. Let the pantheist bring his abstractions; the atheist his black cap of despair; the infidel the chemistry of his philosophical conceit; and the new school of materialists the atom of matter which possesses all the potentialities of life and mind, to dissolve that enmity and replace it by the love of God. "Jesus I know, and Paul I know, but who are ye?" will be the doubtful salutation. When the history of Skepticism in all its protean forms comes to be written, it will be found that it is based in, and built upon, credulity; and when the annals of the Bible work shall be completed, it will be seen that faith in the divine testimony of the Bible, which is the seed of the world's life, and the lamp of the world's light—that God has given us eternal life, and this life is in his Son—is a reasonable service.—Rev. Dr. Magill.

Speech of a Converted Rabbi.

[Rev. A. Yager, the Jewish Rabbi in Mobile who lately professed Christianity, recently delivered an address in the Baptist church of that city, from which we make a few extracts. His remarks were founded on Psalm 33:16: "I am a worm and no man."]

The world considers me now a traitor who betrayed his people. I am despised of the people, as they accuse me of denying my God; but I have the answer of a good conscience that I have not betrayed my people, still less my God. I am proud to say I am a Jew, with a Jewish heart and Jewish feelings. Christianity is nothing but the very Jewish religion; it is the consequence of Abraham and of Sinai. Christians! your prophets are Jewish prophets; your Messiah the Messiah of the Jews? your God the God of Israel. Jesus, the Christ, you could never believe on if he had not been a Jew, the son of David. The Savior of the world you could never have accepted, if he had not been in the Bible, which was kept and guarded, and handed down to you by the Jewish nation.

Ye Christians! do you not love the one spiritual, invisible God of Abraham, Isaac and and Jacob, the God of Sinai, more than your own lives? I believe in the Son of God, as David and the prophets plainly predict him. I have joined the Christian Church in order to be an Israelite, and not a traitor to Israel. The Christians have accepted the religion of my fathers, and I am willing to follow in the footsteps of my fathers. Yes, my Jewish brethren! I am not a traitor, still less have I forsaken or denied my God. I have not betrayed you. Here, in this spot, I am willing to die for you, if my blood can give you relief. Shed my blood and wash your eyes with it. If that can make you see. Oh! my Jewish brethren. I wish that you could see the glory of your Messiah! Oh! if I could express the joy of my heart since I saw the light of the Messiah of the Jews! Oh! if my mouth could be the instrument to uncover the feelings of my heart! My flesh is singing, my bones praising, my veins shouting, my lipped dancing, and my heart loving. Even the common objects of nature seem covered with a veil of the poetry of Christ. Every tree seems to hold up its arms in prayer, and its green looks like a cover of hope, which, when moved by the hallelujah shoutings of the wind, sings the glory of Jesus' love. Mountains seem to bow their heads listening to the sweet old story which is so new and delightful to me. Rivers seem to hasten their currents, in order to bring the glorious news to the wild sea, and the sea quiets its roaring, the billows lie down to hearken to the joyful tidings; the storm is over, and in place of roaring billows, we hear murmuring waters whispering love—the love of Jesus Christ. Rain is nothing but pouring grace, and the morning dew the tears of angels weeping for my blind brethren who cannot see their Messiah, and be partakers of his grace.—Christian Observer.

The Meeting of Emperors.

"Ye shall be scattered, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear all ye of far countries; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces; take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word and it shall not stand; for God is with us."—Isa. viii. 9, 10.

As it was with Israel when the just God who had so long been insulted by their abominable crimes spake the terrible decree for their utter downfall as a nation, nothing could save them, so shall it be with the most mighty of Gentile rulers, yea, with "all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth," because they will not acknowledge as he commanded them, "the Just One, the Prince of life and peace," they must "drink of the wine-cup of his wrath." Do the great Emperors, the seven ones of earth, dread the sword of Divine Justice, refuse the cup thus pressed to their boastful lips? The hat has gone forth, "Ye shall certainly drink—ye shall not be unpunished." Be watchful, be prayerful, be sober, and yet be joyously hopeful, ye servants and handmaidens of our glorious humanuel! We may be sure that these increasing utterings of jealousy and angry nations constitute, among many, one of the distinct foretokens of his appearing whose right it is to reign. May we be ready to answer with a shout of unspeakable joy that "voice," that shout from on high by the Lord of hosts!

I can but beseech, Mr. Editor, for the following rather critical, or at least candid, survey of the present aspect of the European field of prophecy in a recent number of the "N. Y. Herald," with no design however on the writers part probably, to illustrate a Divine truth; a deep interest on the part of those who are heeding the sure words of our God.

G. W. BURNHAM.

The emperor of Russia has arrived at Berlin on a visit to his uncle, the emperor of Germany. Perhaps no meeting of sovereigns in modern times since that on the raft at Tilsit is fraught with so many consequences to the welfare of Europe. Our modern civilization as seen in its European development has run into a phase so strange that the happiness of nations, the prosperity of States and provinces, the lives and fortunes of thousands depend upon the temper in which two men happened to meet in the capital city on the Spree. Russia and Germany are among the strongest powers in the world. They are great, free, enlightened nations. All their strength, all their wealth, all their civilization are in the Russian Alexander and the German William. We shall have all manner of narratives and explanations of the imperial visit and assurances of peace and hopes for the welfare of Europe. But virtually, in the most complete sense, peace or war will rest with the two emperors. There are many subjects which will render their meeting interesting. The emperors are closely related, and are said to hold each other in bonds of strong personal affection. The Russian emperor did his venerable uncle a rare service during the last war. He held his sword to the heart of Austria and prevented her giving France the least assistance. He publicly testified his joy in the triumphs of Germany and the feeling exists in diplomatic circles that so long as he lives German councils will be in the ascendant in the cabinet of St. Petersburg.

The situation before the emperors may well demand anxious consideration. There are many clouds in the Continental sky. The nations of Europe are arming. Countries like Spain and Turkey, which cannot pay their honest debts or the interest on their loans, are borrowing money at the highest rates to raise regiments. Germany has strained the last resources of her empire to perfect her army. All the money she can derive from taxation, all the money she wrenched from France, has gone into powder and cannon. Austria is following her example. France, peaceless, untiring, persistent, resolved—rich and thrifty —has made every consideration second to the re-arming of the country, and she has surprised Europe in this as in all other respects. The nation which three years ago was about to pass into the condition of a second class power like Belgium or Spain has now the second best army in Europe. Instead of destroying France, Germany has simply overthrown the empire and given France new life. It required some mighty external influence resting upon France, oppressing her, teaching the hard duties of patience, sacrifice and self-denial, to develop the Republic. France saw with unerring instinct that nothing would be more ungracious to the conqueror of Sedan and his class than a republic. It knew that if a republic had been deemed as in any way a possible ending of the Bonaparte overthrow the Emperor would have returned Napoleon to the Tuileries. Silently, therefore, it has founded a conservative republic—armed, angry—not obedient to divine right, and only too ready to welcome the hour of revenge.

France republican, and almost certain to become more and more so, is a problem worthy of the deepest consideration of two emperors. Republicanism in France, as its history shows, has possibilities that imperial minds are not apt to overlook. What is to be done with it? If the French would only give the pretext how easy to send Moltke and his legions streaming out of Metz into the Champagne region. But what is to be done with arrogance which, when you smite it on one cheek, simply turns the other and keeps on sharpening the sabre? France has stood every form of insult from Germany and will not resent it. Every day she becomes stronger. Every day sends new men into her armies and new millions into her treasury. So that Germany must stand in anxious silence looking on, seeing this prodigious power grow from hour to hour, and knowing that every look, every thought, every pulsation and aspiration is for revenge—that some day she must fight this power, and under conditions far different from those which culminated at Sedan. An emperor burdened with this reflection will have a great deal to say to his Russian nephew. He will be zealous, above all things, to know how far his nephew will venture in a new campaign how Russian interests would regard the destruction of France. He knows that the Russian mind has always had more or less sympathy with France in the past; that Russian statesmanship has deemed it wise to keep France strong, as a menace to Germany, Austria and England. He must reason that to weaken this feeling he must give his Russian nephew some strong inducements, for this same highly-placed relative is selfish, and must have satisfying reasons to serve even a doating uncle. He gave him the Black Sea in return for his armed and menacing neutrality during the war. What can he give him now?

We take it that if the German emperor can find any method, no matter how severe and despotic, for kindling the power of France, he will welcome it. He is not an over-scrupulous monarch, and, if war must be, then he may as well take his own time. He can fight much better at his own convenience than at that of France. And if the Russian nephew has any disposition for the venture there are inducements enough. There is the Eastern question, the Bosphorus and Constantinople. Prussia would as soon see the Russian flag over St. Sophia as any other. The most patriotic and poetic German never claimed that Turkey was a part of the Fatherland. The Eastern question can never have more than a sentimental interest to the German diplomatist. There are the principalities which are now a problem between Russia and Austria. There are opportunities in the east, toward India, and if Russia would like to "rectify her boundaries" in the direction of Sweden, Germany could have no serious objection. If Russia would only go zealously into the work of reducing France into a condition of helplessness there is nothing within the power of Germany that she would not grant. And while Germany is piously undertaking another war—the fourth within ten years, to show her "passionate yearning for peace"—there are other matters she might as well arrange. Of course France could be put under a twenty milliard indemnity. Nice could go back to Italy. Lorraine could be still more largely annexed. Navarre could go to Don Carlos or Spain. Luxemburg and Holland and Belgium and Denmark could be "restituted;" for are they not one and all the German Fatherland! And what fine German ports Copenhagen and Amsterdam and Antwerp would make. Here is a programme that would excite the ambition of a conqueror in his old days. This captain and king has been permitted to achieve so many wonders since his return from a London exile that he may well feel that he can bring even a stranger dream to pass.

These, however, are mere speculations. We sincerely trust that these great kings will find it in their hearts to contrive the peace. It is hard to conceive two monarchs sitting down to the bloody business of war, like the merchant over his books or the player over his game. These are humane and enlightened princes who are keenly alive to the spirit of the age. How can they welcome war if peace can in any way be made to answer their honor or their ambition? But the peril in all these conferences is the peril in the whole system. So long as peace or war depends upon the will of one man, who, with all of his majesty, is a mere man; so long as great nations will be governed by legends and not by common sense; so long as people as mighty and brave as the Germans and the Russians are content to be the chessmen on the table, to move and countermove as the player wishes, there can be no assurance of peace in Europe. We shall have peace surely when the nations love her for her own sake, and not because it suits the policy of a king. Let us hope that the *wisest councils will enter into the con*ference on the Spree—that the emperor will not outrage humanity by a new war. As Europe now is, the heavens reddening and flashing with electric fire, a war, no matter how narrow at first, must unavoidably draw the greatest powers into its devastating and unholy embrace.—Moslah's Herald.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND., ... June 9, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ Our readers will be pleased to learn that the grasshopper scourge is near over, and that our brethren in the districts of Kansas and elsewhere, who stood in need of help, are a more hopeful.

☞ Brother Amos Sanford, of ——nna, Ill., writes us that he will not be able to attend our June meeting at Antioch. He writes that he is hard at work in the Gospel field, and that good is being done. A Disciple minister by the name of Thomas J. Brandy has embraced the truth and taken sides for the ancient Gospel. Brother S. writes that some twenty-five families have become interested in that community. We hope the friends will hold up his hands while he is doing battle for the Word of the Lord. He is in a new field and is at work at his own expense. Brethren should not forget their duty in cases like this.

☞ A certain class of religious enthusiasts have been jeered by the worldly wise for setting the day for Christ to come. That Christ has said, "Ye know not when the time is" cannot be disputed, and it should silence all arguments upon the subject of setting time. But why should theologians be held up to ridicule by these men, when their own worldly leaders have appointed the day for the destruction of our world? The astronomers of Europe stated that our earth would be destroyed by a comet on the 13th of May, 1857, and they have set the time very often since, but the world yet stands. Now must we conclude that all scientists are fanatics, because their time failed? Let these wise men settle their own theories and disappointments before making merry over a few religious fanatics.

☞ We would call the attention of the reader to the article on the Dark Day of 1780, which we publish in this number. It seems that there have been a number of dark days at different times in this country. We have no idea that Jesus had any reference to the dark day of 1780 in his great prophecy recorded in the Gospels. In the first place the dark day was only partial, even in New England. Then again it did not take place in the country where the people suffered the tribulation. And finally it was out of time. The tribulation was to be upon the people whose sanctuary was to be trodden down by the Gentiles. Our Lord undoubtedly refers to the same series of events which are recorded in Joel. Events which mark the close of the times of the Gentiles and the beginning of the times of restitution.

☞ Isaiah Hornaday, who was formerly a warm and consistent believer in the promises of the Gospel of Christ now claims that he made his second personal appearance at the destruction of Jerusalem, and the apostles were then raised from the dead, and went to glory, and that was the end of the world, spoken of by Christ and his apostles. John, the beloved disciple, did not write his revelation until sixteen years after Jerusalem was destroyed. How does it happen that Christ took all the other apostles and left John to die a martyr? Has John had his resurrection yet? And does brother Hornaday expect a future resurrection himself? If so, then must not Christ yet come to finish his work? In view of these facts what good does it do to ride the old Jerusalem hobby? If Christ came at the destruction of Jerusalem and took the saints to glory, why did He not take the saints at Antioch, at Rome, at Ephesus, at Thessalonica and other Gentile cities? Did not Paul teach everywhere among the Gentiles, that Christ was coming to bless his people? How does it happen that all the dear saints to whom Paul wrote, among the Gentiles, were left, and only a few dead saints were secretly taken away, and the world left in ignorance of that event until brother Hornaday found it out? Undoubtedly brother H. has got up some plan that will save himself, for no one ever yet invented a system that would damn himself.

Eternal Life.

The phrases "eternal life" and "everlasting life" and also "live forever," are of frequent occurrence in the New Testament. They occur more frequently in the sayings of Jesus than any where else. A recent writer claims that these phrases only mean long temporal life! or as he expresses it, "life for the age." Now in the light of this exposition let us suppose Jesus only meant a long life, What become of our hope? "He that believeth on me, I will give age-lasting life." Is this is the true construction of the promised life in Christ, then it follows of necessity that when the age runs out the life ends by limitation. Now as Christ offered only age-lasting life, it involves the ignominious conclusion that the saints will either die again or receive another eternal life

Those who take this position are forced thus to reason in order to give hope to that class who die in open rebellion against God. When a theory is thus driven to wrest from the saints endless life, in order to give hope to those who have committed things worthy of death, it shows its own utter fallacy and will be rejected as unworthy of serious consideration. When Christ promised eternal life to his followers, He undoubtedly meant to offer them an existence without end! His promise was not merely a temporal life, but a life without end. And it is equally plain that everlasting punishment is the very opposite—eternal death, to those who reject the Gospel of Christ.

Says Paul: "He that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the Spirit, shall of the Spirit reap life everlasting." But if everlasting life means a long life, the reaper of the Spirit will just as surely reap corruption as the reaper of the flesh, there being this difference only; the one dies immediately, while the other has a prolonged life! We are assured however, that other texts show that the saints are to be immortal and therefore cannot die. If this is so, then did not Jesus mean just that when He promised eternal life to the believer? If He referred to an eternal state, would He use words which represent only temporal things! This position is untenable, unreasonable and unscriptural.

Bro. Woodrow's Question Answered.

ATTOONA, Iowa, May 16, 1875.

Question to Brother J. H. Strickenan:—What is the purpose of the re-surrection of the "rest of the dead?" A thorough and scriptural answer will greatly oblige one who greatly desires to have all Bible questions unfolded. JNO. R. WOODROW.

God evidently had a wise and benevolent design in raising the rest of the dead.

1. God's impartial love for the race, whom he "included in sin, that he might have mercy upon them all, cannot offer eternal life to whosoever believeth on his Son, without raising them all from the dead, and giving the rest of mankind the same chance to believe on his Son, that billions of others will have had. John iii. 16; Rom. ii. 32; Gal. iii. 22

2. Christ must raise the "rest of the dead," to demonstrate that he came into this world to save the world. John iii. 17.

3. It is necessary that the "rest of the dead" should be raised, that Christ, as the true light, may enlighten "every man that cometh into the world." John i. 9. The Greek word photezei signifies to enlighten. All except a few in every age have died in utter ignorance of Christ, or the plan of salvation; before, therefore, Christ can enlighten the rest of mankind, they must be raised from the dead.

4. The "rest of the dead" must live again, because Christ gave himself a ransom for all, and because he wills that all shall have life, (Syriac) and come to the knowledge of the truth. 1 Tim. ii. 3-6. An overwhelming majority of the race have died ignorant of the truth; therefore, before they can be enlightened with the truth, they must be brought to life from the dead.

5. "The rest of the dead" must be raised before the grace of God can repeal the sentence of death against the race, and justify to life all who have died on account of Adam's sin.

6. "The rest of the dead" must be raised that grace may abound over the sins of many (in contrast with the sin of one man) in offering eternal life through righteousness unto the same, all who had been restored to temporal life, through the obedience of one man. Rom. v. 19-21.

7. "The rest of the dead" must be raised, that Christ may be the "Savior of all men." 1 Tim. iii. 3-6.

8. "The rest of the dead" must be raised that the grace of God that gave Christ to "taste death for every man," may benefit every man as much as it has all to whom his death has been made known. Heb. ii. 9. The grace that gave Christ to die has offered pardon and eternal life to all to whom the gospel has been preached. It will offer the same blessings to every man, because Christ tasted death for every man. But every man cannot be thus blessed without a resurrection; therefore "the rest of the dead" must be raised that they may receive the benefit from Christ's death, that millions of other men have.

9 "The rest of the dead" must be raised before Christ can be the propitiation for the sins of the whole world, in contrast with his people. 1 John ii. 2. As the result of Christ's intercession, mercy, pardon, eternal life, have been offered unnumbered millions. That the same glorious privileges will be bestowed upon the whole world, is evident from the fact that Christ will render his Father propitiation for the whole world, besides all to whom the gospel has been preached. But before this can be done, "the rest of the dead" must be raised that they too may be included in the clemency of God.

10. "The rest of the dead" must be raised, before the last enemy, death, will have been destroyed (1 Cor. xv 23 -26; Rev. xx. 4-15) and the whole creation shall have been delivered from the bondage of temptation and death, to the glorious liberty of the Son's God. Rom. viii. 23.

11. "The rest of the dead" must live, that they may have privilege of writing their names in the Lamb's book of life, the same as those to whom the way of life had been made known, will have had, during all the ages past. Rev. xx. 12-15. When the rest of the dead" shall have lived—when the dead, small and great, shall stand before God—when death, sea, and hades deliver up their dead, then will the book of life (bright symbol of hope) be opened before the mighty host of resurrected ones. How long those books of record will remain open, before the final judgment, we are not told, but that every one of the host, resurrectional dead, will have the privilege of writing their names in the book of life, is evident from the fact that every one whose name is not found written in that book, will be cast into the lake of fire. No man will be destroyed for not having written his name in the book of life, who will not have had the privilege of writing his name in that book.

J. M. S.

The Watch Tower.

"In such an hour as ye think not."

A short time ago, in a conversation, the question was asked, why is it that there is such confusion and opposition and defection so frequent among professing Christians?

The writer replied, that while things were not as should be expected among them, still it ought not occasion any surprise, for those differences and defections were only foreboding, along with a host of other signs in the civil and material worlds, of the disruption and passing away of the present dispensation.

The remarks were not so cordially received, and the questioner soon disclosed the fact that he was among the numerous class whose expectations for the ultimate success of Christianity before Christ's coming were exceedingly strong and hopeful. "O!" said he, with evident satisfaction, "that is an old story of Christ's coming soon. Three hundred years ago, in Luther's time, and many times since, dates have been fixed for the second advent, but all have failed in being correct. There is far too much of this studying prophecy, and fixing of times and dates for the destruction of the world. The prophecies are too deep for men and better let for alone."

Without saying a word in reference to the indifferent and the ignorant, such is the way many intelligent and good workers for the cause of religion allow themselves to be misled in regard to the most striking truths. They can discern very well the face of the sky, the gross defections of Christians, and the decay and change of things politic, but cannot read the signs of the times, as too often, with reproach they are ready to say, "Where is the promise of his coming? for since the fathers fell asleep, all things continue as they were from the beginning of the creation."

It is too often taken as an argument against the possible advent of our blessed Lord, that expectations in the past have not been realized, and that the setting of times and dates and seasons by the over-zealous students of prophecy has done little short of bringing the whole subject into contempt. But it is not saying too much to declare that the grand subject of our Lord's second advent claims to-day as much thought and attention, if not more, than it ever did.

To come to the conclusion that the Lord Jesus will fail of his promise to come to this earth of ours in power and great glory at his appointed time, because weak, fallible man has erred and miscalculated, is worse than folly. To reject such a glorious promise on such a weak and trifling plea, is certainly to reject the testimony of prophets and apostles; nay, more, to reject the words of our Lord himself, who said in one of the most solemn hours of his earthly ministry,—"Hereafter shall ye see the Son of man sitting on the right hand of power, and coming in the clouds of heaven." And again in another place where he depicts the suddenness of the event,—"Watch ye therefore, for ye know neither the day nor the hour wherein the Son of man cometh."

These passages are not intended to make prophets of men, but to warn them that there is a day of assize when judgment shall be meted out, and to keep them in readiness, whether living or dying, to meet the Son of God.

The constant habit of setting aside from the thoughts such passages as these, is only intensifying the means for the fulfillment of the Savior's prophecy. Surely if people allow themselves to grow more and more careless and disbelieving in regard to the second advent, is it not what may be expected, as the more careless they grow the nearer are they brought to that time of which Christ said, "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"

The last days of the Christian dispensation will be its worst days, and the defections of Christians and others will be the more and more intensified the nearer its disruption. If some were found in Luther's time to look for the near advent of the Lord, and if many since his day have eagerly looked for his appearing, far less will be found, if any indeed, to expect him on the eve of the judgment. Yes, many, even then, who long watched and waited will be slumbering and sleeping when the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh; go ye out to meet him."

Some, as I before hinted, are kept from giving much thought on the second advent from the great results that they yet expect from the spreading of Christianity. But the Christianity of the present is too faulty to accomplish the results they so confidently anticipate. Certainly not all that is counted such is by any means capable of treasuring divine truth in the world around us.

The Christianity of to-day and the Christianity of the past can scarcely be called identical. The Christianity of the past mainly consisted in preaching the cross, living for Christ, and a strong upholding of the faith once delivered to the saints, but that of the present, for the most part, is far from doing this.

"In the present day Christianity is greatly corrupted by worldliness; so much so that it is difficult to distinguish sometimes between those who are connected with the church and those who are not. The line of separation is not clearly marked, and hence we too often see among professing Christians the same love of pleasures, and wealth, and dress, that we know to be common among the followers of the world.

The Christianity of the present suffers from the inroads of science. Already, with too much success, has human progress been made a part of it, and by some it is accepted only in so far as they can reconcile it with scientific or natural law.

Again, the Christianity of the present is corrupted by false doctrine. Christians at one time, notwithstanding how they differed with respect to their way of worship, were at least jealous for the great doctrines of the Bible. But now there is such freedom of thought, such latitude of opinion, among all denominations, that it is a part of heroism to call in question and doubt the true foundations of the faith. Is it a wonder then, that we see a deep shade thrown over the truth of our Lord's divinity; an evasion of the doctrines of the atonement, and a denial of the resurrection of the body? Is it a wonder, then, that many are carried to and fro by every wind of doctrine, and led to give heed unto seducing spirits and the doctrine of demons? Such a Christianity may please the world, but it will never convert it by bringing Christ into every heart. It may say peace and safety, but never truly fit men for that judgment. "When the Lord Jesus shall be revealed from heaven with his mighty angels, in flaming fire, taking vengeance on them that know not God, and that obey not the gospel of our Lord Jesus Christ."

Surely such a Christianity as exists now among us were going to bring all men to the cross, Christ never would have said, in referring to the days of Noah and Lot, "Even thus shall it be in the day when the Son of man is revealed."

Without a solitary passage more, this gives us a forcible portraiture of the apostacy of the last days; for the Lord here evidently forewarns us, that while people are living in carelessness and false security, and for the most part given up to world worship, that "he will come as a thief at night-fall, or in such an hour as ye think not."

None believed in Noah's day that the righteous few) that God was going to send the flood. But it came, and it swept them all away except those who were in the ark. The people of Sodom thought perhaps they were secure enough until the fire came from heaven and destroyed them except Lot, his wife, and his daughters. And our Savior declares that the like things will happen again at his second appearing; for it is "when men shall say peace and safety, that sudden destruction cometh upon them."

Surely if any subject, by reflection and study, can help us to watchfulness and searchings of heart, it is the second personal and sudden appearing of our great God and Savior; for so sure as judgment will be meted out to all those who know not God and obey not the gospel, so sure will everlasting blessedness be the portion of those who are found steadfast in the faith and loving the Lord Jesus Christ in sincerity and in truth "Blessed is that servant whom the Lord when he cometh shall find watching."—Prophetic Times.

Personal Effort.

This is the age of associations: individual effort is, in a large manner, superseded by corporate action. We do nearly all our good by committees and societies. Many, feeling unable altogether to escape from the responsibility of doing something for the cause of Christ, pay others to act as their substitutes; and thus organizations are necessitated to accomplish mechanically, as it were, what can only be done effectually by individual effort. Such organizations no doubt accomplish a vast amount of good, and it is not easy to see how, in the present state of society, they could safely be abolished; but it must be acknowledged by all who have thought deeply on the subject, that Christian work has been too exclusively directed into this channel, and that it would be well if, along with this concerted action, there were more of spontaneous and intelligent individual action.

What the world needs more than any thing else—more than gifts of money, rules, speeches, theories, organizations—is the revival of personal agency; the touch of a hand, the glance of an eye, the tone of a voice, the sympathy of warm, loving hearts, charged with all healing influences, to sow the desolate wilderness thickly with the good seed of the kingdom. We wish the sower to go forth alone, and, by individual contact with the evil of the world, to remedy it by the influence of personal faith and living love. Like Elijah, we want the servant of Christ to lay his own living body, through sympathy, upon the dead body of suffering humanity; and thus, by imparting warmth to it, prepare it for restoration to spiritual life. Like a greater than Elijah, who identified himself with the outcasts of society, and said, "Zaccheus, come down, for to-day I must abide at thy house," we want every Christian, who is a debtor to all men, to come home with the poor and the ignorant, and make their trials his own, that thus he may truly relieve and bless them. It is required that there be a real crucifixion of the flesh in the blessed labors of the Cross. Such sowing would do far more good than any other agency. He that sows and he that reaps in such a case, would rejoice together in the harvest. 1 Cor. iii. 8; xv. 58, xii. 7-11.—English Tract.

Spring.

"My beloved spake and said unto me Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away; for the winter is past, the rain is over and gone, the flowers appear on the earth, the time to sing has come, and the voice of the turtle is heard in our land. The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with their tender grapes give a good smell. Arise my love, my fair one and come away."—Song of Solomon ii. to v.

It may be that the wise king of Israel had no reference to the long, dismal winter of seventy-four and five, but it is a fact that many of the poor of Kansas can bid adieu to the past winter without a tear of regret.

Though Solomon had no reference to the winter that has just left, as I came in from the field last night, and saw the first early wild flowers pressing up from the cold sod, his words came to mind. The flowers appear on the earth and the time to sing has come. Who is so cold hearted as to refuse to send up a song of praise to Him that has said that seed time and harvest shall not fail? But the Prophet Isaiah has said "Awake and sing, ye that dwell in dust." Perhaps this is the time that Solomon celebrates in his song. When the redeemed shall come to Zion with songs and everlasting joy upon their heads, then will the long winter of death have passed away; then will the long continued rain of persecution be in the past, then will the flowers appear on the earth, the wilderness and solitary places will be glad, the desert shall blossom as the rose. Yes, death has held the loved ones of Christ in his chill grasp, the demons of persecution raised a storm that has lasted for well nigh six thousand years, that has been more fierce than the storms of the past winter, but it will soon end. Soon will the beloved say to his loved one "Rise up my love my fair one and come away." Soon will the trumpet sound, soon will redemption's song be sung, and that, too, by tongues that are now silent in the grave. Yes, if flowers can spring out of the cold damp ground, the just by faith shall live again; they shall arise clad in the robes of immortality.

But the past winter has had its blessings as well as its trials. It has been a good time for reflection and to try your friends, and though you may be able as the spring opens to count them all on your finger's ends, yet they are all tried friends and are worth each one his weight in gold.

So let us cheer up and move on, perhaps the trumpet will sound this very year. Could I send my feeble voice and be heard all along the line, I would say to each one, let us move on a pace or two, let us take higher ground, let us live better, let us do more good and less evil, and let us who are in the weak make an extra effort to raise food and it may be that we may yet realize the truth of the statement that it is more blessed to give than to receive.

Your brother in the bonds of love.

Voltaire Dying.

On the twenty-fifth of February, 1765, Voltaire penned the following blasphemy: "Twenty years more and God will be in a pretty plight." Let us see what was taking place at precisely the time indicated. On the 25th of February, 1778, Voltaire was lying, as was thought, on his bed of death. Racked and tortured by remorse for past misdeeds, he was anxious to propitiate the God whom he had insulted and the church which he and his band had sworn to destroy; and hence he had resolved on addressing a minister of religion in order to receive the sacrament of reconciliation. On the 26th he wrote the following to the Abbe Gaultier: "You promised me, sir, to come and see me. I entreat you to take the trouble to call as soon as possible." The Abbe went at once.

A few days later, in the presence of the same Abbe Gaultier, the Abbe Mignot and the Marquis de Villevielle, the dying man made the following declaration. "I, the undersigned, declare that, for these four days past, having been afflicted with a vomiting of blood at the age of eighty-four, and, not being able to drag myself to church, the reverend rector of St. Sulpice, having been pleased to add to his other good works that of sending to me the Abbe Gaultier, a priest, I confessed to him, and if it pleases God to dispose of me, I die in the Holy Catholic Church, in which I was born, hoping that the divine mercy will pardon all my faults. If ever I have scandalized the church, I ask the pardon of God and of the church. March 1, 1778.—Voltaire." This document was deposited with Mons. Momet, notary of Paris. It was also, with the permission of Voltaire, carried to the rector of Sulpice, and to the Archbishop of Paris, in order that they might say whether or not the declaration was sufficiently explicit and satisfactory.

Twice before, when dangerously ill, the wretched man had made abject retractions. But these he had not only rejected when restored to health, but, passing from bad to worse, he poured out fuller vials of his wrath against God and Christianity. It was then of necessity to receive the most solemn and full abjuration of past infidelities.

When Gaultier returned with the archepiscopal answer, he was refused admission to the dying man. The arch-conspirators trembled at the apostasy of their hero; and, dreading the ridicule which would fall upon themselves if it was determined not to allow any ministers of religion henceforth to visit him. Finding himself thus cut off from the consolations of religion, Voltaire became infuriated, no reproach, no curse being deemed bad enough for the D'Alemberts and Diderots who guarded him. "Begone," he said; "it is you who have brought me to my present state. Begone! I could have done without you all; but you could not have existed without me; and what a wretched glory you procured me!" And then praying, and next blaspheming, now saying, "O Christ," and next, "I am abandoned by God and man!" he wasted away his life, ceasing to curse and blaspheme and live, on the 30th of May, 1778. These facts were made public by Alcos. Tronchin, a Protestant physician from Geneva, who attended him to the last. Horrified at what he had to witness, he declared that to see all the furies of Orestes, one only had to be present at the death of Voltaire—"Pour voir toutes les furies d'Oreste, il n'y avait qu'a se trouver a la mort de Voltaire." "Such a spectacle," he adds, "would benefit the young who are in danger of losing the precious helps of religion." The Marshal de Richelieu was so horrified at what he saw that he left, the bedside of Voltaire, declaring that "the sight was too horrifying for endurance." —London Popular Journal.

The Two Witnesses.

Brother Magruder:—I like your style of writing! You seem uncovered—easily found—comprehensive and easily understood. But in the last RESTITUTION I see you in Rev. xi. investigating the "two witnesses." I see plainly your view, and as I see some objections, (at least they appear so to me) and as I dislike the mode of "pitching" into every body and every thing because I do not readily agree with them on it, I thought I would simply state them to you, and you may answer me by letter, or the RESTITUTION as best suits yourself.

My first objection to their being Moses and Elijah is, that in John's future they are (or were) to prophesy 1260 years clothed in sackcloth and ashes, too long to answer the demands of the 1000 years. Verse 3.

My second is, that they can be hurt, and that fire proceeds out of their mouth, and all their enemies are in this manner killed. Verse 5.

My third is, that after 1260 years of prophesying, the beast is to kill them, by making war against them; which would be quite incompatible with their nature after being changed! Verse 7.

My fourth objection is in verses 8-11, their dead bodies lying in the street of the great city, and they of the peoples and tongues and nations see their dead bodies three and one-half days, which would seem a little strange if they were two literal men. And then their second resurrection seems one more than is allotted to the saints.

Now Brother, if the men are just two, and literal, does it not necessitate all things in connection with these literal too? And would not that spoil the symbolism of the vision?

I need say no more, you see my points—please answer at your leisure as you see fit, and oblige a brother in Christ waiting for the kingdom.

General Items.

Cardinal Manning has prevailed upon the Pope to allow English historians to search the private archives of the Vatican for historical information. Hitherto none but ecclesiastics have been allowed to have access to these precious manuscripts, Protestants being hardly able to see a single document they could name. The newly obtained privilege is expected to yield some highly interesting results.

The walnut tree is proverbially long lived, and an extraordinary instance is noted at Bonvilliers, a village at the foot of the Vaudois Jura. An old walnut tree, whose age is estimated at between three and four hundred years, is there still in a flourishing condition. Its trunk measures over twenty feet in circumference and notwithstanding its great age it produced last year over fifty bushels of walnuts.

The lower house of the Prussian Diet has passed the second reading of the bill for the suppression of religious orders without amendment. The third reading of the bill with regard to the rights of the Old Catholics to church property was passed by 202 votes against 75. It is stated that instructions have been sent to all the district administrations, according to which collections made without the sanction of the Governor of the Province to compensate Roman Catholic priests for the penalties inflicted upon them constitute offences punishable by law.

The Shah of Persia has profited nothing by his visit to Europe, so far as economy and civilization are concerned. He has just been marrying his daughter, and the affair has cost him £60,000. He has also been reorganizing his army, and has borrowed £48,000 to do it. He is also going in largely for the purchase of arms. Lately he has received a ghastly present—2,500 human heads cut from Turkomans. In this matter some economy was practised, for, in order to save the cost of transport, the skulls were cut out, and only the tanned skins were sent.

The Roman correspondent of the Journal de Bruxelles writes that in the course of a conversation which he had a few days ago at the Vatican with one of the Pope's medical advisers, that gentleman said to him, "Undoubtedly he is eighty-four years of age, and his department, walk, features, announce old age. But his sight, hearing, memory, intellect, vivacity of repartee, are those of a man in full vigor. His health is good, and resists incessant work, misfortunes, and vicissitudes which would bring down an ordinary constitution. He is, in fact, in perfect health, has no infirmities, and may live still for many years. I must also declare that he submits himself willingly to our prescriptions, which he did not formerly. Last week he was bled, as he is always at the changes of the seasons. His medical advisers follow the old practice, and he has not to complain of it."

Keep.

Keep to the right as the law directs.
Keep from the world thy friend's defects.
Keep all thy thoughts on pursuit therein.
Keep from thy eyes the mote and beam.
Keep true thy deed—thy honor bright.
Keep firm thy faith in God and right.
Keep free from envy sin and strife.
Keep from the ways that bring thee pain.
Keep free thy tongue from words of ill.
Keep right thy aim and good thy will.
Keep all thy acts from passion free.
Keep strong in hope, be cheery too.
Keep watchful care o'er finger and hand.
Keep free thy feet—by justice stand.
Keep true thy work, —aim high.
Keep from the stain of the tempter's price.
Keep faith with each you call a friend.
Keep full in view the final end.
Keep firm thy courage bold and strong.
Keep up the right and down the wrong.
Keep the words of wisdom's school.
Keep warm by night, by day keep cool.

Trials—Truth—Duty.

Among Adventists are exceedingly few pastorates. There is little of the element of quiet and connected pastoral union between people and preacher. Many churches are divided and broken. There is much that is unsettled, and is it too much to say—semi-chaotic? The mournful proclivity to attempted fine definitions and determinations, is a more or less constant source of division and weakness. So, for want of being wanted, or in such a way that a man through honest remuneration, may or can afford to renounce heart-breaking secular labor that he is not able to perform, he will do this very thing, and do it year after year, that his family may have food and apparel, for a neglected is worse than an infidel, and only a moderate share of conscientiousness would set him first as a duty, to toil on, that no sarcasm or reproach might assail him for violating a rule of Scripture, a dictate of reason, and an instinct of affection.

I speak of what I might mention in an unstudied way as the positive attempted heresy of Adventism, where failure brings heart-breaking—and speak tenderly too, since experience of error in any direction should give the sufferer charity, and inspire moderation. Yet, the writer, in a recollection of mistake for the time being, would most fervently pray and study to learn from one miss—a permanent lesson of cure, and never. If God will, repent a prophetic misconjecture. The repeated precipitations and disasters of day-defining for our Saviour to come in person to earth, seems to be a cause for destructive divisions.

Some preaching brethren, in this way or in some way, look out sadly, feeling that the field of usefulness is straitened, and so go on groaning, and hoping, and waiting, for God in his supreme goodness and almighty power, to prepare a way, and prepare his servant by grace to fit, and fill, and occupy a way or a place made ready to hand.

But I wave the subject, wishing to suggest a thought in another direction. For example, there is the sleep of the dead, which we credit as inconvertible, from hints and analogies in nature and positive Scripture testimony. Still we ought to be aware of allowing any one to suppose that when he dies he will experience even unconsciousness; for as the dead know nothing, it seems upon a prudent and protracted meditation on the subject, that judgment comes immediately after death, in anything which might be dignified or defined with the denomination of experience. "It is appointed unto men once to die, and after this the judgment." Unconsciousness is wholly without any account of time in relation to a state of death. When a man dies, therefore, he does go to the judgment, and that judgment is to him immediate, although as a matter of fact it does not occur until the coming and kingdom of Christ.

It is true, therefore, that while death is not in a strict theological sense, a gate to felicity or perdition, yet there is nothing whatever that comes between death and the solemn sequel of judgment, seeing that unconsciousness, ages even, are of no account to the dead.

We thus therefore of necessity agree with our orthodox friends in the practical and experimental succession of death and judgment, but differ altogether in the manner of its accomplishment, and the order of events as fixed in the unalterable arrangements of the Divine administrator. In other words, there is no disembodied consciousness, no inherent, death-surviving life force, no immortality of mind, no undying invariness, or Adamism of any kind to be magnified or made a note of, except the Adamism of Christ at his second advent, coming to raise the dead, as is most fit for a second Adam, at the second advent.

But I must omit many things, though having many things current in my mind, which for lack of time cannot be current in my pen to say.

We need prudence, as a positive and well taught lesson, and finally settled characteristic. We need meekness, and a most God-pleasing union of zeal with moderation. Many have drunk of some cup of bitterness. Furrows chisel their way in cheeks not withered with age. Cares, sorrows, burdens, pains, and even distresses are not unknown. May God arise for us. Let us not despond, or, if we do, may we escape speedily the paralyzing power of discouragement. How much we need, or think we need such a one as Jesus to speak personally one good word, to bend upon us personally one reviving look of recognition and approbation.

Some are sorely tempted, tempted even it may be more than some martyrs who have gone to the stake or guillotine. Temptations are hard to bear, and the more especially for those who are of a sanguine or nervous temperament, and who sensitively feel either others neglect, or even yet more keenly by far, their own disappointments or imperfections, or failure in many ways to have rounded out a life that might be luminous or beautiful, as they hoped. Such are not uncommon things in the human experience.

And now in closing these very hurried suggestions, we still survey a world subject to death, disasters, contortions, convulsions and misery. There is trouble and disorder more or less, everywhere. There is no stable or profound peace, no absolute happiness or security. Creation groans, Madness often and often rules the hour. Men not as if they were immortal on the little stage where they flourish in brief and sometimes frenzied activity. All things but such as are perverted or inscrutable, stretch out their hands toward heaven for its precious treasure. Jesus, to come. Nature lifts herself up imploring. The world is sick of bondage. Bitter winds and bitter waters wear on human kind, that cannot, like rocks of granite or pillars of adamant, bear unmoved the untriendly forces of nature. Prayer bestirs itself even in the broken and downcast heart. Hope looks up, even out of sorrow, crying, how can pity forbear, or power delay, when a word from heaven can send salvation and joy among millions of the living and dead?—C. Colgrove, in Crisis.

He Died Rich.

Yes, he died rich—that noble Christian man that fell asleep not long ago. The banks did not indicate a large balance in his favor, for he made the most of his deposits in God's treasury, where neither moth nor rust do't corrupt, nor thieves break through and steal. His funds are safe, for the vaults are fire-proof, even amid the fires of judgment and earthquakes of revolution. There are no defaulting cashiers in the bank of Heaven, and its stocks can never depreciate in value. He left but little real estate and no extensive granaries, but he is one of the heirs of earth's wide domain, the title is already made, the deed is recorded, and his possessions are sure. His late residence was not a beautiful mansion, richly finished and furnished, but his future home shall be in the city that has foundations, whose builder and maker is God. It was said on the street that he died poor, and his estate was small, but his name gleamed in golden letters upon the book of life, and the recording angel wrote over against it "he died rich."

There were kind words and loving deeds that were written down as gold and pearls and precious stones, and placed to his credit there. The world said that his children were left unprovided for, but the God in whom the father trusted will shield his little ones from the storms of adversity. There is no fortune left to tempt them to avarice and selfishness—nothing to promote dissensions among them, but their inheritance is love and hope and faith. There was not money enough left to prepay their fare to perdition by leading them into vanity folly and vice, but there were incentives to temperance, prudence and earnest effort with the promise of God's blessing upon their labors. He died rich. He loaned his money to the Lord, and he shall reap a bountiful interest throughout the long years of eternity. His children are provided for, they are committed to the care of Him who never slumbers nor sleeps.

He rests in hope, and soon his inheritance shall be made ready. Soon the earth shall wear the bridal robes, and be wedded to the glories of eternity. Soon the pearly gates of the city shall open, and God's angels shall welcome the heir to his possessions. Soon the victor's crown shall rest upon his brow, and the victor's palm shall wave in his hand. Soon he shall join in the songs of those that walk in white raiment on the banks of the beautiful river, and receive at the hand of the King glory, honor and immortality.

Silent Forces.

What we are is always before the world, the symbol or sign of what grace has made us, or what sin has left us. No child walks along a street without learning lessons. Every sign-board teaches, every random exclamation teaches, every fugitive look on the human countenance teaches. The fact is, we are constantly under teaching to the latest moment of our lives; and what we come in contact with, is moulding and shaping our character, it may be forever. It is very difficult to persuade men that it is so, because they have the idea that there is only power where there is noise, bustle and excitement. But it is really not so. All the forces in nature that are the most powerful, are the most quiet. We speak of the rolling thunder as powerful; but gravitation, which makes no noise, has no stress, utters not a syllable, yet keeps orbs in their orbits, and the whole system in its harmony, binding every atom in one orb to the great central source of all attraction, is ten thousand times ten thousand more powerful. We say the red lightning is very powerful; so it is, when it rends the gnarled oak into splinters, or splits the solid battlements into fragments; but it is not half so powerful as that gentle light, which comes so softly from the skies that we do not feel it; that travels at an inconceivable speed, strikes, and yet is not felt, but exercises an influence so powerful that the sea is kept back by it, that the earth is clothed with verdure through its influence, and all nature beautified and blessed by its ceaseless action. The things that are the most noisy are not the most powerful. An eloquent speech will never have the effect of an eloquent life. The most conclusive logic that a preacher uses in the pulpit will never exercise the effect that piety, the consistent piety of character, will exercise over all the world. And in many congregations, the preacher who may have low to hear him, and where, if we heard him, we we should say that he is not the power of expressing clearly and intelligibly the great thoughts that he feels, may be comparatively dumb and ineffective in the pulpit, but in his walks amid his flock, his beautiful and holy character may be spreading an influence around him that will tell more upon the destinies of souls, than if he had wielded all the thunders of Demosthenes, or pleaded with the persuasive eloquence that flowed from the lips of Cicero.—Selected.

History's Testimony to Christianity's Truth.

The Divine origin and truth of Christianity is shown and proved in many ways. Its evidences may be termed legion, and all its enemies have never been able to refute them to the satisfaction of truthful, sincere, honest, and scientific minds. It comes before us with a strong prestige of universal opinion in its favor. All that is best and noblest in the world at the present day, all the best and noblest that has been in the world the last eighteen hundred years, is due to belief in this Gospel. It comes down to us with the full assent of the greatest intellects of our own country, and of thousands and tens of thousands of intellects of the second order. All the countries of the world where Protestant christianity is believed have risen to civilization and liberty; where Christianity is not is barbarism, despotism, and slavery.

We find the civilized world full of Christianity, and if we go back as far as we will in the literature and history of eighteen centuries we find historical notices of various kinds, some by heathen writers, some by Christian writers, proving the existence of Christianity in the world, and a belief in Jesus Christ as a Divine teacher, a worker of miracles, as crucified, as risen from the dead. We have extant the writings of Ignatius, Pliny, Tacitus, Josephus, and all these writers, Christian, Heathen, Jewish, show us bodies or churches of believers already existing in considerable numbers. No event of ancient history has an equal amount of historical evidence to prove it. The history of the life and death of Jesus Christ is affirmed by more irrefragable testimony than any other event in ancient history. It is interlaced with innumerable threads of profane history; and it is inconceivable that a woof of so much truth should cross a warp of falsehood. But the force of the remark is immensely increased when we recollect that this historical character of Christianity extends to many centuries before the birth of Christ, for the New Testament is based upon and makes itself responsible for, the Old Testament, and the Old Testament is as inextricably interwoven with the profane history of contemporary nations as the Gospel history is with that of Rome and Judea; so that the history of every nation under the sun contributes something in support of Christianity.

Reader, as Christianity has thus been given by God to the world to be its balm and solace, has it touched and moved you? Have you allowed it to have its legitimate influence over you?—London Times.

Jesus and John the Baptist.

To the preaching and the baptism of John in the wilderness, in the thirtieth year of his age, came Jesus from Galilee. John was his kinsman by birth, but the circumstances of their life had entirely separated them. John as a child in the house of the blameless priest, his father, had lived at Juttu, in the far south of the tribe of Judah, and not far from Hebron. Jesus had lived in the deep seclusion of the carpenter shop in the valley of Galilee. When he first came to the banks of the Jordan, the great forerunner, according to his own emphatic and twice-repeated testimony, knew him not. Though Jesus was not yet revealed as the Messiah to his great herald-prophet, there was something in his look, something in the sinless beauty of his ways, something in the solemn majesty of his aspect, which at once overawed and captivated the soul of John. To others he was the uncompromising prophet; kings he could confront with rebuke. Pharisees he could unmask with indignation; but before this presence all his lofty bearing falls. As when some unknown dread checks the flight of the eagle, and makes him settle with muted scream and drooping plumage on the ground, so before the purity of sinless life, the wild prophet of the desert becomes like a submissive and timid child. The battle brunt which legionaries could not daunt—the lofty manhood before which hierarchs trembled and princes grew pale—resigns itself, submits, adores, before moral force which is weak in every external attribute, and armed only in an invisible mail.

John bowed to the simple, stainless manhood, before he had been inspired to recognize the Divine commission. He earnestly tried to forbid the purposes of Jesus. He who had received the confessions of all others now reverently and humbly makes his own. "I have need to be baptized of thee, and comest thou to me?" The response contains the second recorded utterance of Jesus, and the first word of his public ministry, "suffer it to be so now, for thus it becometh us to fulfil all righteousness."—Farrar's Life of Christ.

—The great University of the Mohammedan World, at Cairo, now has three hundred and fourteen professors and about ten thousand students. The structure occupied by these professors and their pupils is an immense quadrangle, supported by four hundred marble pillars, gathered from ancient heathen temples. Its age is not accurately known, but the last addition to it was made A. D. 1762. There are no partitions in the great hall, but the spaces assigned to different nationalities are defined by the rows of pillars. The whole area is covered with matting, and is kept extremely neat. Each teacher sits with his back against a particular pillar, and the size of his class is determined by his talent and reputation. If possessed of only moderate ability, he has only one semi-circular row of young men sitting at his feet. A little greater notoriety draws two or three consecutive ranks, while the far-famed doctor of some important department has several ranks, those at the front lying on their faces to prevent obstruction to those behind.

Give, or Stop Praying.

The colored woman who with eyes closed was singing,

"My soul, thou mighty angel"

was nudged by the collector with his contribution box, while he said, "No use in singing 'Fly abroad, thou mighty Gospel,' without you give something to make him fly."

The little son of the man who had prayed one morning at the family altar that the Lord would supply the wants of the destitute and needy, said, when prayer was finished, "Father, if I had your grain-bin I would answer that prayer myself."

It is worse than useless, it is impudent to ask God to do what he has been asking and commanding us to do ourselves. Suppose your child should undertake to work on that plan, and when you give him his tools, his work, and his orders, should then kneel down and beg you to do what he was able to do, and what you had just told him that he must do for you. Such a request to a father would be an insult; what then must it be when made in the presence of the great God?

There has been too much of this and it is time it ended. The Lord is not slack concerning his promise nor negligent about his work; but he asks us to perform our promises, and to fulfil the duties which he lays upon us. And if we refuse to do what he commands us, it is sin to pray to God for money, or for help. Let us do our part and his aid will not be withheld.

How can we ask God for money, when we already have more than we need in our own possession? How can we pray that he may provide means to carry on his work, when the means are already provided, and in our hands? We must be honest, and consistent, and if we believe what we are talking about, we ought wisely to use what God has given us already, and then we can have confidence to ask him for more. Let us have done with whining about property, or calling upon the Lord for help, when the help desired is already granted. Let us conform our lives to our faith: "let us give more or stop praying."

That Last Cry.

It is said that the last cry that was heard on board the ill-fated "Schiller," recently wrecked, was that of a little child in the cabin! While the ship was being dashed upon the relentless rocks, and three hundred and fifty human beings went down to a watery intombment, the piteous cry of the little one was heard.

Alas! for our humanity, the bitter cry of children comes to our ears on every hand—children more horribly exposed than on the Schiller! Yes, somebody's child is in peril! It may be that the iron grasp of the rum-vender is upon him—or the deep-laid scheme of the gambler threatens him—or the dark-souled libertine pants for his blood. Who will rescue that child, the son of many prayers, it may be? Who will launch the life-boat, and pulling at the oars right manfully, amid the angry waves, bring him safe to land, and give him to his mother? Who?

A child was in the street, helpless, exposed, well nigh under the wheels of the vehicle. A woman sprang out hurriedly from an adjoining house, and snatched the precious one from the jaws of destruction. "Is that your son?" was the inquiry of a passer. "No," replied the noble woman, "but it is somebody's son!" Ah! yes; on every thoroughfare—on every sea—"somebody's son" is nigh unto death. To the rescue—Christians, to the rescue!—Exchange.

Notes from the Field.

It was my good pleasure to visit the brethren at Columbus, county seat of Cherokee county, and brother Amos Sanford's old home, on Sunday last, May 30, and to speak to them three times: at 11 o'clock a. m., and at 4 and 8 o'clock p. m. I found the brethren strong in the faith and evidently at work, as they had advertised, and had out a house full of hearers.

Brother Sanford has done a good work in and around Columbus. The sects, from what I could learn while there, feel considerably relieved now that he has gone.

I expect on Sunday, June 20, to visit Pevo congregation, another congregation organized by brother Sanford, and in the vicinity of brother W. Dunbar's.

Religious Persecution in Spain.

During the three centuries elapsing between 1481 and 1781, Spain annually executed or imprisoned 1,000 of her inhabitants on account of their religious opinions. On an average, 100 persons endured martyrdom, and 900 persons suffered imprisonment each year of all this long period. According to trustworthy statistics, in these 300 years, 291,000 persons were condemned to various terms of imprisonment and to other penalties. 32,000 persons died at the stake, and 17,000 persons were burnt in effigy. Of these last, the most part, probably, died in prison or fled to other lands. A policy like this must end in the deterioration of a people. By persistently destroying and banishing its boldest and most vigorous thinkers, its most resolute and courageous men, Spain was drained of its best and purest blood, and the result is seen to the present day, in the dwarfed physical and mental stature of the Spanish race.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

There will be a Conference of the Church of God, in Adams, Grant county, Kan., 2 miles southwest of Concordia, beginning June 21, and continuing over the following Sunday. A general invitation is extended to all advent believers, irrespective of "differences of opinion" to attend. This will be our first Conference in southwestern Kansas, and we desire that it be as interesting and productive of good results as possible, and to this end a special invitation is extended to ministering brethren, J. G. Kinney, John Feary and J. R. Thompson are expected to attend. There will be a committee in Concordia to receive and care for all visitors from other states, or distant localities.

THOMAS MATHER.

The Second Quarterly Conference of the Church of God in Iowa will be held near Alden, in Hardin county, at the Liberty school house, commencing Friday, June 21, 1878, and hold over the following Sunday. Brethren generally are invited to attend, also to visit the brethren in Story county after Conference, and preach the Word. All our brethren and sisters are invited. Come one, come all.

DIED

At South Elliot, Maine, May 12, 1878, Mrs. Elizabeth Dennison, aged sixty years, one month and twelve days.

She leaves a husband, seven children, and numerous friends to mourn her loss.

Dearest mother, thou hast left us,
And gone to thy long home;
Here art thou from pain and sorrow—
Soon we'll follow one by one.

But we look for that act, at morning,
When in glory Christ will come,—
Come to gather all his people,
Come to bid them welcome home.

S. D. REMYE.

At Webb's Prairie, Ill., April 16, 1878, brother Garret Terhune.

He has left a wife and six children to mourn his loss. His age was forty-seven years. His sufferings were severe, but until them all he rejoiced in hope of immortality and eternal life at the resurrection of the just. His labors in this county will be very much missed by the brethren and the community generally. His field of labor is vacant. Who will fill it? He was respected as a neighbor and a Christian. We trust he has accomplished lasting good here.

JACOB FRANCIS.

May 12, 1878, brother S. S. Starne, aged thirty-eight years. Brother Starne embraced the faith of the soon coming kingdom, and was immersed into the Anointed something over a year ago.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND M. V. REED

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. * * * Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The subjects in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish His Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "OUR REST." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently assist in its circulation. If he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would convey it to others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

HE RESTITUTION.

Armageddon.

Hosannah! Hark, the rushing,
Strikes sweetly on my ravished ear;
The constellations seem ready
In echoes from each distant sphere,
Till all the wide expanse re-clangs
With "Fire-breather, King of Kings."

He comes! He comes! The heavens rend!
Floods clap your hands! Ye mountains joy!
Forests in glad obedience bend!
Earth, raise your hallelujahs high;
Let Zion wake the lofty strain—
"Live, King of Kings, forever reign!"

Ripe is the vintage of the earth;
Its clustering grapes are ripe and full;
And vengeance, staggering, bears to birth,
Sudden and irredeemable:
Mowrah comes to level realm,
The wine-press of the battle-plain.

The cry is by the cattle begun,
The struggle of the mighty ones;
And Armageddon's day comes on,
The carnival of slaughter's scene—
Wild life his helmet to his brow;
O God, protect thy people now!

Yea come, O King, and strike the spoil;
With thy confederates share the prey;
Ha! Ha! Death grins a ghastly smile;
The morning dawns—and where are they?
The flames, the flames, great Autocrat,
Spread o'er thee in Jehoshaphat.

Can Brain Think?

Organization is the basis of all thought; this is true of all intelligences. Every animal, man not excepted thinks, according to their organization. For instance the toad and turtle are very low in the scale of intelligence, the dog and cat much higher, the ape and ourang-outang still higher, and on to the lowest race of cannibals; thus we raise from the black to the red man, thence to the lowest race of whites, and onward to the Anglo-saxon; so we may trace from the lowest scale of intelligence to the highest and find that a peculiar organization produces a peculiar mind.

Man stands at the head of all the animal kingdom, he, being the last creature formed, is in possession of all the animal organs, his structure is made up, more or less, of the same material; life is established by the same animal and vegetable kingdom, he breathes the same air, dies the same, and returns to the elements the same, "so man has no pre-eminence above the beast" in death.

If man is an animal how can he hope, venerate, or reason? Because he is endowed with a higher order of class of organs that the lower animals do not possess, so he is not only in possession of all the animal organs but others in advance, the human, reasoning and moral, hence he is just as far in advance in intelligence and morals as he is organized and no further, take the last named classification of faculties from him and he would not be a whit in advance of the lower animals. The brain is the organ of the mind; man thinks with his brain, not with an abstract, independent, immortal entity.

We know nothing of mind or soul apart from organization, we find it only in connection with brain, never apart from, or independent of it, it is the outgrowth or fruit of the brain, the production of physical forces from which emotion or mind is evolved, it is entirely dependent upon the brain for support and production, it is simply a condition, a process, a result arising from the action of the organization. All organisms are developed from matter, and are the very essence of matter, without which we see no manifestations of mind, nothing to stimulate or support it unless matter is constantly supplied to the brain to replace the waste caused by previous thought or motion. Again; all organisms produce intelligence or mind according to their development and condition, and have no demonstrable separate existence independent and unassociated with the organism.

"Once a man and twice a child", is an old adage and a true one. When man starts on the journey of life how frail, how perfectly helpless both in body and mind, how weak the battery or physical structure; trace along and as the battery strengthens it gives power *to the mind or soul; a little far*ther on we see him ripening into manhood—he has reached the golden link—another decade and life is changing—he is going down the hill—another step—the flesh is wrinkled, the hair grey; it is evident that the battery is fading, step by step he sinks, he totters, trembles, leans on his staff, the mind or soul, memory, reason, and judgment are wrecked and cloudy; he has reached his second childhood and is rapidly returning from whence he came; the battery is worn out, the organs have ceased to act, and man with whatever powers he may have returns back to the inorganic elements.

How can thought be produced without a brain? Destroy the brain the instrument of thought or mind and thought is destroyed. Did man ever think without a brain? Will man ever think without a brain? Can thought exist without a brain? Destroy the instrument that produces music, and music can not be produced any more than mind can be without a brain. *If the soul or mind is immor*tal, eternal, and survives the dissolution of the organisms, why don't the Bible declare it on every page? Why do not science and common observation teach it? Why is it not written on the face of all nature, on every plant and leaf? For the best of reasons; to my mind, neither Bible, science nor nature teach it; death and decay are written and stamped on everything we see wherein there is life. The mental and physical forces are so intricately connected that they are inseparable. All living organisms decay; mind too, with whatever powers it may have had, must perish with the organism. How can a spirit mind have any association with matter, in any form or condition? Can it be imagined by what power or in what way an immortal spirit might be chained or linked together in this or any other life with the material brain? Steeped and supported in and with matter it is evident there would be war in the camp were this so, for "a house divided against itself cannot stand." If we conceded that there is such a spirit in man, we do not wonder at the ravings of our orthodox friends, proclaiming to the world that: "the spirit will clap its glad wings, and soar away," when it leaves this earthly, sinful tenement of clay.

Hear the words of the Law-giver: "Thou shalt surely die." "Dust thou art, and unto dust thou shalt return." "Man is mortal." "Man dieth and wasteth away." "I have said to corruption, thou art my father, and to the worm, thou art my mother." "If I wait, the grave is my house." "I have made my bed in darkness."

*Does this look as if the fathers be*lieved that the soul or mind survived the dissolution of the body? When the awful sentence came: "Thou shalt surely die," did man understand that the body only, an unimportant appendage, the cocoon or shell, was to die, or slough off, (according to the orthodox reasoning it never had any life or intelligence) and the soul passed out, bid "good-by" to its old partner; or did he understand the simple sentence that we should die, cease to exist as man, and all the component parts dissolve, man become inert, cease to live, perish, or expire?

But is there no hope for man beyond the grave? Must he sleep the eternal sleep and be forever locked in silence, wrapped in the dark pall of death?

Job says: "If a man die shall he live again?" "All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come!" "Thou shalt call and I will answer thee." "Though worms destroy this body yet in my flesh shall I see God." "Marvel not at this for the hour is coming in which all that are in their graves shall hear his voice and come forth."

They that sleep in the dust shall awake. Job will hear His voice and break the bands of death; it is then he will shout victory over the grave and not when he dies it is then that this mortal shall put on immortality.

W. M. LEE.

IOWA, 1872.

False Positions of Universalists.—No. 5.

8. We must suffer with Christ here in order to be glorified with him hereafter. Rom. viii. 17. "If children, then heirs, heirs of God, and joint heirs with Christ; if so be that we suffer with him that we may be glorified together."

In order to eternal salvation, we must first become a child of God by faith, and after this suffer for Christ's name, run the Christian race to the end, or we cannot be saved, glorified by Christ in the eternal world.

9. Those ashamed of Christ here cannot be saved hereafter. Mark viii. 38, "Whosoever therefore shall be ashamed of me and of my words, in this adulterous and sinful generation, of him also shall the Son of man be ashamed when he cometh in the glory of his Father with the holy angels."

No ingenuity of men can evade the force of this Scripture. The time is here, in this life, in an adulterous and sinful generation; it is while in the flesh when passion holds away, and not after death that the shame is spoken of. Nor can there be any chance of mistake as to the time Christ will be ashamed of the sinner. It is "when he cometh in the glory of his Father, with the holy angels." The work, the life is here; the reward of the punishment is in the great hereafter.

10. Reconciliation in this life necessary to salvation hereafter. Col. i. 21-23. "Yet now hath he reconciled in his body of his flesh through death, to present you holy and unblamable and irreprovable in his sight, if ye continue in the faith, grounded and settled, and be not moved away from the hope of the gospel."

Here the individual must first get into the faith, and then continue in it, if he would be saved in the eternal world. The death of Christ only does not save them. It is the procuring cause of salvation. But the individual must get into Christ, into the faith, and then continue in it unto the end, or there is no salvation.

11. Even Christians may fall and be lost. Heb. vi. 4-6. "For it is impossible for those who were once enlightened, and have tasted the heavenly gift, and were made partakers of the Holy Ghost, and have tasted the good word of God, and the powers of the world to come, if they shall fall away, to renew them again unto repentance."

Here is an impossibil declared. What is it? To renew or save, in the eternal world, one who has been a Christian here, but who has fallen away, and died without faith and hope. And this for the best of reasons. If Jesus, his blood, his mediation, are rejected here, then heaven has no other Savior, there is no other power in God's universe to move to repentance, none to save, and such will inevitably be lost forever.

But Scriptures of this class are as numerous, that, to present all, I would have to transcribe a good portion of the Book; and, if these presented will not convince, such would not be convinced though one arose from the dead to declare it.

There are so many Scriptures that teach that the wicked of this life shall die the "second death," shall be "lost," shall be "damned," shall be "destroyed," shall be "devoured," shall be "burned up," shall be as though they never had been, that universal salvation is so plainly unscriptural, that it is a wonder of wonders that any one should advocate it.

Why, if true, are there so many solemn appeals in God's word to amendment of life? And why is this more necessary to eternal salvation? Why, if true, the appalling punishments which have been inflicted upon sinners in the past here? And why, if true, did Paul speak of "the terrors of the Lord?" Why warn his Hebrew brethren that striving even to blood and death, though of the most appalling character was nothing compared "to the sore punishment" of the sinner hereafter? Why, if all will be saved hereafter, is it taught that there is no "gain," no "profit" in a man obtaining all the honor, wealth and form of the world, if, by doing so, he should "lose his own soul?" The only answer to these questions is, that the doctrine of future and eternal punishment, is the doctrine of the Bible. We shall now give a few out of the many scriptures that teach this, and for the present conclude.

Gal. vi. 7, 8. "Be not deceived: God is not mocked: for whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap. For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." "Corruption" and "life everlasting" are antithesised. Both belong to the future and eternal state. This life is the seed-time and growth of the tares and the wheat. "The harvest is the end of the world, and the reapers are the angels." They garner the wheat in the barn, the righteous then enter "into life eternal." They gather the tares into bundles to be burned. "These shall go away into everlasting punishment." This text utterly subverts universalism, and strikes a death blow to the fair chance theory. The word rendered corruption here is phthora, and is defined destruction, ruin, perdition, death. So when this takes place, in the end of the world, in the harvest, and all the wicked are burned up, then there will be no wicked to save, no need of any more chance, either fair or unfair.

Paul says, Phil. iii. 19., "For many walk, of whom I have told you often, and now tell you weeping, that they are the enemies of the cross of Christ; whose end is destruction." Paul was no universalist; for he wept over the end of sinners. Universalists laugh over their end! and ought to, if their doctrine be true. When sufferings and woes are crowding hard, if their doctrine be true, they should commit suicide and swing off to glory! When gaunt famine and keen hunger press upon whole families, why not set the spirit, the true man free, and enter into eternal life, unclouded bliss? Ah, why? There comes thundering from God's throne, "that no murderer hath eternal life."

Again, in Matt. vii. 13, 14., "Enter ye in at the straight gate; for wide is the gate, and broad is the way, that leadeth to destruction, and many there be which go in thereat; because straight is the gate and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it."

This scripture knocks universalism into pi. It speaks of two ways, and both in this life. One in which the living sinner is going in "the broad way," which leads to "destruction;" the other, in which the living righteous are treading "the narrow way" that leads "unto life." Both "life" and "destruction" go over into the eternal state; and, after entering there, there is no more change. And, if the righteous shall enter "eternal life" in the great beyond, so the wicked shall be "punished with an everlasting destruction."

Again, in Matt. iv. 1., "For behold the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, that it shall leave them neither root nor branch."

But universalists refer this to the destruction of Jerusalem. Yes, I know. They have Jerusalem on the brain; and, were it not for Jerusalem, they would be stranded. The coming of Christ, the resurrection of the dead and eternal judgement, eternal life and everlasting destruction are by them made to meet in Jerusalem. But were "all the proud" of all ages, past, present and future, burned up at Jerusalem? Were all the good of all ages saved there? No! But few of the wicked of all ages were there, and many of these few were saved by Titus. None of the righteous were saved; because Jesus told them "to flee into the mountains."

In the winding up of the great drama of time, when there shall be no more offers of mercy, it shall be said: "And the sea gave up the dead which were in it; and death and hell delivered up the dead which were in them; and they were judged every man according to his works. And death and hell were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death." Rev. xx. 13, 14.

This ends probation, takes into the eternal state beyond the thousand years and little season. It takes to the day of Malachi, when "all the proud," "all that do wickedly" shall be burned up, root and branch; to Paul's day, when death and the devil shall be destroyed; *to the great day of God Al*mighty, when fire shall come down from heaven and devour all the wicked; to the "new heaven and earth" in which dwelleth righteousness only; to the time when there "shall be no more sea," no more day and night, no more sickness, pain nor death, but when "all things shall made new." It takes to the time when righteousness shall cover the whole earth as the waters cover the mighty deep; to the time when the prayer Jesus taught his disciples shall be fulfilled; "thy kingdom come, thy will be done on earth as in heaven." To the time when God's earth shall be regenerated, when death, hell and the devil shall be destroyed; and when, in all the dominions of God Almighty, nothing but purity, peace, and happiness shall be known any more forever!

Pyramids of Egypt.

According to M. Dufen, a French savant who has published a monograph on the Pyramids of Egypt, containing the result of his ingenious investigations into a very abstruse subject, the builder of the largest of the four great Pyramids, called the Great Pyramid, or the Pyramid of Cheops, was Soophis the First. His Royal predecessor, Cephrenes, or Suphi, laid the foundation of the underground part of the monument twenty-nine years before his accession to power, but Soophis continued and completed the gigantic structure. In creating work it was the object of its author to make it "a monumental book, a sort of national library, in which were deposited the ideas of the chief sciences which the priests' colleges had acquired and on which the safety of the whole country depended."

M. Dufen refers the name Pyramid to the Coptic words Pi-re-mot, signifying the tenth part, and believes that the building itself was intended to be for all time a national standard of measurement. He also concludes that this standard served as a scale denoting a degree of the great circle; of the diameter of the equator; of the length of the earth's axis, and of the flattening of the poles; all of which facts of science were known to the Egyptians in the time of Soophis. The so-called sarcophagus found in the King's chamber in the interior of the Pyramid, is considered by M. Dufen to have been cut out to such exact dimensions that it "served as the precious standard of unity of national measure, that is to say, the Nilometric or primitive cubit," and also as a second standard of the chief geodetic measures.

By the same process of computation through which M. Dufen reaches these conclusions, he fixes the epoch of the reign of Soophis the First,—called Cheops by Herodotus. According to his date, Mennes, the first sovereign of the Egyptian monarchy, came to the throne 5,641 years before Christ, or 7,510 years before our time. The accession of Soophis the First occurred 808 years later,—that is, in the 4,833 before Christ, or 6,705 years before the summer solstice of the year 1872 of our era. At that remote period, therefore, M. Dufen dates the construction of the Pyramid of Cheops.

Dr. Cumming on the Pope's Infallibility.

A subscriber in Manchester, England, sends us the following report of a lecture delivered in October, 1870, which, even at this date will be read with interest. It is clipped from a Liverpool paper:

On Tuesday evening, the Rev. Dr. Cumming delivered a lecture in the hall of the college, Shaw street, on "The Infallible Pope." The fame of the lecturer, together with the subject chosen for the lecture, induced a tremendous rush of people to the hall, and the consequence was that the place was densely crowded half an hour before the time at which the proceedings were to commence. Such was the rush to obtain admission at seven o'clock, that it seemed probable that some accident would result, more than one lady having to shriek for assistance, through being jammed and firmly fixed against the entrance to the body of the hall. The great pressure of the crowd rendered the task of extricating those who got into such a fix a somewhat difficult one. A great number of persons were unable to obtain admission. The lecture was under the auspices of the Young Men's Christian Association. The mayor (Mr. Alderman Hubback), who is president of the association, occupied the chair.

The Rev. Dr. Cumming, who was received with loud applause, referred to correspondence which had taken place between himself and the Pope as to the attendance of Protestants at the Ecumenical Council, and said his holiness offered, if they would attend, to have appointed for them the most acute and eminent theologians, who would discuss with them in the congregations, and expressed a hope that the result of such discussions would be their conversion to the Catholic faith. He replied that he did not see why he should spend his money and his time in traveling all the way to Rome to meet eminent theologians in the congregation, otherwise committee rooms —not in the council—when for 10s. 6d. and a three hours' ride he could go to Birmingham and meet the most eminent theologian Rome had, namely, the Rev. Dr. Newman, the father of the oratory. He stated, however, that he would avail himself of the opportunity if he was allowed to invite a reporter from the "Times" newspaper to accompany him, and to take down whatever he should say, and whatever the distinguished theologian should say, as otherwise it would be represented in the Catholic organs that he had been fairly extinguished and become a convert to the Roman Catholic church. It was decided by 533 voices—many of them voices of bishops representing petty dioceses in Italy—that the Pope was infallible; and then came the great event of the proclamation of that infallibility. His holiness posed himself—placed himself outside an eastern window of St. Peter's, in his gorgeous robes, expecting the first rays of the rising sun to shine upon him and to cover him with an aureole of splendor. But the sun did not seem to rise to the occasion, for never was there a sky in Rome so black with clouds as on that same morning, and never was the air so murky or dim; and when the Pope rose to speak, the thunder rolled in crashing reverberations throughout the length and breadth of St. Peter's, the lightning flashed from pillar to pillar with unearthly splendor, and so startled was an eminent member of the Œcumenical Council that he leaped to his feet and exclaimed suddenly, and as if by inspiration, "God has sent down another Mount Sinai with its lightning and thunder into the midst of St. Peter's." After that a candle was brought down, as he could not get the light of the sun, and by its light he read the decision of the Œcumenical Council pronouncing *him to be infalli*ble. He (Dr. Cumming) had stated that he believed when that attribute was assumed, it would surely, if prophecy was intelligible, bring down the judgments and retributions of heaven; for it was a most striking fact that in the Apocalypse, assuming that Babylon was the representative of Popedom, which several eminent divines held, it was said—"When its chief shall say, I sit as a queen, I am no widow, I shall see no sorrow, her judgment shall come in one day." Let them look at what had transpired immediately after that decision was come to. They found, first of all, the Pope himself dethroned; and when his own people were asked by the plebiscite to say whether they would have the Pope or Victor Emmanuel to be their king, they by an overwhelming majority preferred Victor Emmanuel; and yet Victor Emmanuel was an excommunicated person—not entitled to Christian baptism or Christian burial. The consequence was that the Pope was sent to the Leonine city denuded of his tiara and stripped of his splendor. The Pope had stated repeatedly that the disturbers of the city of Rome were fanatic Protestants, who came into it and created disturbance for which his "beloved people" were blamed; but was it not a curious fact that he did not trust his "beloved people" for the last twenty years to defend him, but sent for zouaves—and even thieves and brigands enlisted in his armies—to defend him against his own flock? No sooner had the Pope pronounced the dogma of infallibility, thus assuming to himself a divine attribute, than he heard the first sounds of a war which, in its proportions, in its area, and in its intensity, was more a universal massacre than a war. On that very day, Napoleon—the "eldest son of the church," as he was styled—wrote to Cardinal Antonelli that he was very sorry, but he must draw all his troops from Rome, as he wanted every soldier he had to enable him to conquer in the campaign he was undertaking, but that he had asked—and this was the unkindest cut of all — Victor Emmanuel to take charge of the Pope whilst he was away. That war has been carried on to its terrible issues. Napoleon, who was the mightiest and most formidable autocrat in Europe, was a prisoner in Germany; his beautiful empress, who gave the tone to the manners of all Europe—amiable and gentle, but intense in her attachment to the Roman Catholic church—had to flee from the Tuileries at a moment's notice, and to ask an Englishman to lend her his yacht in order that she might find a refuge in this great land. In which freedom and humanity had always found an advocate and a champion, because religion had still a holy altar; and the only son of the emperor was a fugitive with his mother. To go a little further, no sooner had the Pope proclaimed himself infallible than Austria, long the dungeon of Europe, always the guardian of the Pope when no one else could be found to support him, shocked at the Pope's assumption of an attribute of Deity, tore the concordat into shreds and cast it to the winds, and renounced the Pope's jurisdiction in Austria, root and branch. As soon as the concordat was repudiated, Austria passed a law giving liberty of the press, liberty of conscience, and freedom of education throughout the length and breadth of the land. After referring to the change that had recently taken place in the affairs of Spain, which had given the people the same liberty of worship and liberty of the press, the reverend lecturer next dealt with some of the grounds upon which the Pope assumed to be infallible. He contended that even if Peter was the first Pope, and was infallible, there was no evidence that he appointed successors. He, however, held that Peter never instituted the Popedom, and, in fact, was never at Rome. The assumption of infallibility was the attribute of the Deity alone. The judgment for a man arrogating to himself that prerogative of the Almighty had already begun, and would spread through the whole earth. He, (Dr. Cumming), believed it would involve the sick man in the east as well as the dethroned man in the west, and that we were entering upon the time when "everything shall be tried as by fire, and nothing will stand but they who have washed their robes and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." *If there ever was a day in which it be*came us to see what we were and what our prospects before the judgment day, it was the day in which we lived. Let us ask ourselves were they Christians; and if they were not, why? The grandeur of Protestantism was that it came to every one and said, "Believe thou on the Lord Jesus Christ and thou shalt be saved." It was so strictly true that no one need not be a Christian. Protestantism was the Bible alone, and needed no atoning efficacy except the blood of Christ. (Applause.)—Messiah's Herold.

The Dark Day.

May 19, 1870, known in the history of New England as the Dark Day. Be*tween the hours of 10 and 11 in the* morning, the sky became obscured with dense clouds of a smoky hue, that drifted from the southwest. In most parts of New England the gloom that ensued was so great that it was impossible to read common print, to determine the time of day by watches and clocks, or to pursue any sort of work indoors without the aid of artificial light. In some places common print could not be read out of doors for several hours in succession. The fowls went to roost, the birds sang their evening songs and settled themselves to sleep in their hidden retreats, candles were lighted in all the houses, while a silence and dimness as of night rested upon the face of all nature.

For several days preceding this the atmosphere had been unusually thick and hazy, and the sun and moon looked dull and red as they rode through the heavens. On the morning of the 18th there were slight showers in certain localities, accompanied with thunder, while at different intervals through *the day there was rain in various pla*ces. The water that fell was thick, dark and sooty, and a scum as of ashes appeared on the surface of rivers and reservoirs, while, when the tide went out, it left a line of the smut along the shore at the width of four or five inches. On examination this surface matter seemed to be nothing more than the ashes of burnt leaves. This extraordinary darkness lasted for a period of about 14 hours.

In the transactions of the Philosophical society of Philadelphia, printed prior to 1785, there is a comment on a similar darkness that was experienced Oct. 21, 1716, O. S. On this occasion, "The day was so dark that people were forced to light candles to eat their dinners by. Which could not be from any eclipse, the solar eclipse being the 4th of that month." Nothing is said in the account of the cause of the darkness, nor are any particulars given. On the 19th of October, 1785, a remarkable dark day was observed at Detroit, and described in the Philadelphia transactions for 1785. The writer says: "Tuesday last, being the 19th inst., (i. e., of October,) we had almost total darkness for the most of the day. I got up at daybreak. About ten minutes later I observed that it got no lighter than before. The same darkness continued until 7 o'clock, when it cleared up a little. We then, for the space of about a quarter of an hour, saw the body of the sun, which appeared as red as blood, and more than three times as large as usual. The air, all this time, which was very dense, was of a dirty yellowish color. I was obliged to light candles to see to dine at 1 o'clock, notwithstanding the table was placed close by two large windows. About 3 the the darkness became more horrible; which augmented until half-past 3, when the wind breezed up from the southwest and brought on some drops of rain, or rather sulphur and dirt, for it appeared more like the latter than the former, both in smell and quality. I took a leaf of clean paper and held it out in the rain, which rendered it black wherever the drops fell upon it; but when held near the fire, it turned to a yellow color, and when burned, it fizzed on the paper like wet powder. During this shower the air was almost suffocating, with a strong sulphurous smell. It cleared up after the rain."

An officer stationed at Detroit described the same day in a letter to a friend. In his words: "The 19th of this month [October, 1785,] was the most extraordinary dark day, perhaps, ever seen in the world." The particulars following in this account are identical with those quoted from the Philosophical transactions. The cause of the unnatural darkness prevailing on three several days was probably the extensive burning of Western prairies and woodlands.—Chicago Tribune.

An Exposition of Phil. i. 21.

This scripture, like all others that are brought forward to sustain the popular doctrine of man's present immortality, not only conflicts with the general tenor of the Scriptures, if it be construed to favor such a doctrine, but it is also out of harmony with the context. The believer in the immortality of the soul, very confidently affirms that it was gain to the apostle to die; forgetting, it would seem, that the same apostle had said that death was an enemy; and also, that Epaphroditus, whom he called his brother, had received mercy from the hand of the Lord, in saving him from death. See Phil. ii. 27. But the old apostle defends himself, as well as the truth, by telling us in the proceeding verse, that this gain was to Christ, for he says, that Christ shall be magnified in his body, whether it be by life or by death, for me to live is Christ and to die is gain. But gain to whom? Paul or Christ? Let the apostle answer: "Christ shall be magnified in my body whether it be by life or by death." And now I ask, can anyone of ordinary intelligence, or a fair degree of candor, come to any other conclusion than the foregoing, other than the above? "But if I live in the flesh, this is the fruit of my labor; yet what I shall choose, I wot not." If the reader's theology has led him to believe that Paul was a compound being, composed of two natures, one spiritual, the other natural, and that he has taught us this kind of a doctrine in the words, if I live in the flesh (verse 22) let him compare the same faithfully with the following Scriptures from the same author: Phil. iii. 11; 2 Cor. xi. 22-25. But says an objecter: Does not the apostle say that he desires to depart and be with Christ, which is far better? Yes; but far better than what? I answer, something far better than living or dying. Do you ask for proof? Here it is: verse 22, "Yet what I shall choose I wot not, for I am in a strait betwixt two, (that is, life and death, for that is the two things the apostle has been speaking of in the preceding verses) having a desire to depart and be with Christ, which is far better." Now, if you insist that the word depart in this connection, means death, then you make the apostle contradict himself by affirming, in one breath, that he does not chose death, and in the next breath that he does. The truth is, the apostle had before him, in this letter, as also in all his other epistles, the re*turning of Christ as the time when he* expected ever to be with his Lord. Fortunately for the truth, the same word that is rendered depart in the above Scripture, under consideration is translated return in Luke xix. 15; hence, Paul could and did desire the returning of Christ and be consistent with what he had just said before; which was, that he had no choice between living or dying. There were, therefore, three things before the apostle's mind; life and death, and the returning of Christ, when he would ever be with him and those that love his appearing and kingdom.

I. T. PRIME.

—The Episcopalian Convention of South Carolina, after deliberating two days about it, refused, a few weeks since, to admit to representation a respectable congregation of colored Episcopalians of Charleston, that has a white pastor. Says the New Orleans "Advocate," in commenting on the fact: "We pity that convention, and trust it has not another parallel in the Episcopalian church of America, or of the world. This church claims to be the only true church of the world, with the only true apostolical ministry. Now, as the majority of the people on this earth are more or less colored, that congregation probably being a fair example as to different shades, we can not see how that the South Carolina convention expects its church to do its mission. We suspect that the majority of that convention looked no farther than their own unchristlike prejudices against the African race.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS,
All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel: the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the communications appearing in correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the articles bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not calculated, in the Editor's setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

St. Bartholomew.

Who has not heard of the massacre of St. Bartholomew? All that hinders a repetition of such horrors is the want of power. The high dignitaries of Rome are bound under solemn oath "to seek out and oppose, persecute, and fight against heretics and schismatics against our Lord the Pope." We append an account of the slaughter that followed the breach of the peace of St. Germain; which guaranteed to the Huguenots freedom of conscience, rights of worship, and equal political privileges. All Protestant leaders were invited to Paris to celebrate the nuptials of the marriage of Henry of Navarre to the king's sister. This high carnival of blood took place on the night of the 24th of August, 1572, under the following circumstances: "At length Charles IX., casting his half-closed eyes on the floor, gave the fatal order for the murder of his subjects. The alarm-bell of St. Germain was instantly rung, and in a moment the palais, the Tuileries, the banks of the river, the public places, the streets, the churches and offices of Paris, were brilliantly illuminated.

Guided by those terrible lights, which enveloped the capital as in a circle of fire, they distinguished the dwellings of heretics by the crucial marks. 'Open, by command of the king,' was the order given by the murderers. Some hastened to obey, and their lives were extinguished with the lights which they brought to see who called them; others, opening their windows to discover who knocked at so unreasonable an hour, fell, struck by twenty balls at once; another, burying himself in the bed-clothes, would pretend to be fast asleep; his door was shattered in pieces, and two or three assassins, separating from the rest, ran and slaughtered him in his bed. Sometimes they left the house unstained with blood; but, dragging the victim from his couch into the street, they gave him up to the weapons of the populace. As the spoils of the doomed were to belong to those who should despatch them, a thousand blades were raised at once over the unfortunate wretch, whose death, swift as lightning, left no time for pain. Happy they who were surprised in their first sleep; their sufferings were brief; but when the hands of the murderers became wearied with slaughter, the agony of the sufferers was prolonged for hours.

While blood was thus spilt in torrents before the eyes of the queen-mother, the bell of the Palais rung, and the general massacre began.

At this signal, Lavennes and the duke of Nevers drew their swords, crying, 'kill! kill!' The night-guards, the citizens among whom arms had been distributed, the whole tribe of murderers, sallied forth from their lurking-places, repeating, 'kill! kill!'

The shrill sound of the bells, the clatter of arms, the vagabond tramp of the assassins, the flickering glare of torches, were mingled with shouts, which the night-echo rendered still more horrible. The massacre then became general; there was no pity for sex, age, or condition; no blood came amiss, provided that it circulated in heretic veins; and these were the signs by which the heretic was distinguished:—whoever shuts his door at the approach of an armed band is a heretic; whoever refuses to answer, or begs his life, is a heretic; whoever has not a white badge on his arm is a heretic; whoever does not come when the murderer calls is a heretic. The assassins had no need to speak; there were no judges—all were executioners; but, if words did now and then drop from their lips, it was to complain to one another of their fatigue, or to insult the sufferers; nay, it was often an infernal laugh that greeted his last sigh.

Pursued on all sides by these insidious flames with which the capital was lit up, driven like a flock of sheep, tracked like deer, in vain did the Protestants endeavor to fly from fate. If they would have sought refuge in the Catholic churches, armed men guarded the doors of the sanctuary; if they approached the Louvre, the Suiss awaited them with presented muskets; if they burst open the prison doors, to conceal themselves among the malefactors whom the justice of men had condemned, the jailors denounced or drove them out by main force. If they attempted to gain the banks of the river, the implements of destruction were quite ready; boat-hooks to catch them in their flight, and to knock them on the head, poles to thrust them into the water. If they took shelter in the dark, they fell into the snares of an assassin lurking for human prey; if they sought the light, the light was as deadly as the darkness; death was everywhere—in their beds, in their house-tops, within, without, in the public places, and in the very waters of the river.

They were flung into the Seine, and dragged out to be plunged in again; if the unfortunate creatures, struggling against the current, contrived to reach the shore, invisible hands, armed with sharp spikes, thrust them back into the stream, which drove some upon the sand of an islet facing the Louvre, and carried others toward Chaillot, Auteuil, St. Cloud, and the adjacent parts, to which these carcasses carried death and infection. The grave-diggers were too few in number, or worked to death. The Prevot des Marchands and the echevins were obliged to double their wages to induce them to go to those distant places to bury the corpses of heretics; a column of them started, carrying along with them all the ordinary implements of their calling, and it was several days before they returned to Paris. It is calculated that in this interval about eleven hundred drowned persons were interred. The boatmen distinguished themselves in this abominable night. Standing up in their light barks, they cleft the water with the rapidity of lightning, striking the heads that rose above the surface, separating the hands grasped in the last prayer, and lifting up bodies by the garments and dropping them back into the abyss, till they were sure that the victim was suffocated. Suspended, not interrupted, the carnage recommenced at eight in the morning, but with colder and still more ingenious cruelty than before; if the victims were multiplied, so were the executioners. Darkness no longer shrouded the abode of the heretic from the eye of suspicion; there was now no inaccessible retreat, and places were ransacked to which the light of day never penetrated. How many of the Protestants now regretted that darkness had fled, and deplored the return of that light which they had so earnestly solicited of God in their prayers! The sun, it is true, beamed upon the vengeance of some of those who sold their lives dearly, and stained the thresholds of houses with the blood of the victors. Almost all expired with folded hands and faces turned toward the palace of the sovereign.

Such were the last scenes of the ever-memorable drama of St. Bartholomew. A month after St. Germain's bell had given the signal, all the dead were not buried. Some were yet floating in the Seine, to which fishermen resorted for the purpose of picking them up and selling them to any who chose to buy them. For a long time there was an auction of corpses on both banks of the river, which was publicly cried, and at which the lots were adjudged to the high st bidder. Some buyers hurled their purchases by night in sequestered spots; others burned those whom they loved while living, and collected their ashes in urns which afterward constituted ornaments of their habitations. For above a year, people durst not pass at night along the banks of the river; some said that they had seen earth quake there, others had beheld spectres gliding along the water; fishermen had asserted that invisible hands loosed after dark the boats moored to the shore, and propelled them toward the islets in the Seine, which sent forth moans like those of human voices. In some old historians, we read that young females, murdered on St. Bartholomew's day, wandered about after dusk in Paris, covered with long veils, which they lifted when they perceived the murderer, showing him the wound afresh, and calling him by his name. The grave Do Thou has not disdained to collect some of these popular traditions.

There is no reason to doubt that the Pope was privy to the intended massacre. Cardinal Alexandrin, nephew of the late pope, had made no secret of expecting intelligence of a great victory gained over the heretics, and exclaimed, when it arrived, 'The king of France has kept his word!' 'Good news! good news!' cried Gregory XIII., who had been crowned about two months before the catastrophe, 'all the Lutherans are massacred except the *condemned, whom the king has par*doned for his sister's sake.' That term he applied contemptuously to the three princes of the house of Bourbon-Vendome, the king of Navarre, and the princes of Conde and Conti. At night the guns of the castle of St. Angelo were fired, and bonfires blazed in every street of Rome. The Pope ordered a jubilee and a solemn procession, which he accompanied himself, to thank God for this glorious success. He sent a nuncio extraordinary to France to congratulate the king on having so easily caught all the heretics in the same net. Medals, were struck at Rome, in approbation of the massacre, and to perpetuate the memory of the happy event: on one side was the portrait of the pope; on the reverse the destroying angel, holding a cross in one hand, and in the other a sword, with which he is slaughtering the Frenchmen called Protestants; and having this legend, HUGONOTORUM STRAGES—the slaughter of the Huguenots. In short, no demonstration of this great triumph of the Church of Rome, of the church militant, over her enemies was omitted; and that Becon Compagno might keep his work incessantly before his eyes, he had a large picture of the massacre painted and hung up in the vatican. A scroll at the top of it contained these words: PONTIFAX COLIGNI NECEM PROBAT—'The Pontiff approves the murder of Coligni.' 'To this day,' says Brizard, whose work on the massacre appeared in 1790, 'the French who visit Italy behold, not without indignation, this picture, which, though half effaced still portrays but too faithfully our calamities and the excesses of Rome.'

The cardinal of Lorraine was at Rome when the news of the massacre of St. Bartholomew arrived there. He was so transported with joy at the success of a plan which he justly considered as in part his work, that he gave a thousand gold crowns to the gentlemen sent by his brother, the Duke of Aumale, with the welcome intelligence. At his instigation, the pope and the cardinals ordered a general jubilee and public processions. He went in procession himself to the church of St. Louis, the patron saint of France, where they attended with all the nobility of Rome. The cardinal officiated in full pomp and splendor. On the front of the church was a long inscription, purporting that the Cardinal of Lorraine, in the name of the most Christian king Charles IX., was returning thanks to God, and congratulating our holy father the pope Gregory XIII., and the sacred college of cardinals, on the astonishing and incredible success which had attended the counsels given by the Holy See, the success which it had sent, and the prayers which his holiness had never ceased to offer for the last twelve years."—Dr. Cumming.

Predestination.

What a horrible thing! But who knows anything about it? Pope has well said,

"What can we reason but from what we know?"

Man is a talkative creature, and whenever a subject is up, he can talk about it whether he knows anything about it or not. So we hear men talk enough on the immortality of the soul to fill a volume, and yet know nothing about it. Such talkers are like our big steamers—they go with railroad speed through the ocean, cutting a wide swath and making a great swell, but leave no trace behind, no evidence of their existence. So of predestination; one esteems it a divine truth; another brands it as "blasphemy against the administration of the government of God." Both spin out their long yarns, page after page, but leave no proof behind that such a thing as predestination exists.

But as the word is found in Scripture (Rom. viii. 29, 30; Eph. i. 5), some think the proof of it exists in its Calvanistic sense; but far from it. It is only the will of God concerning all things which he has made, and is coexistent with his foreknowledge; therefore Paul said, "For whom he did foreknow, he also did predestinate to be conformed to the image of his Son." Here we have the proof that God acts on the principle of his foreknowledge. He did not predestinate before he foreknew whom to predestinate and to what to predestinate him.

Then it may be said, as he foreknew everything that comes to pass, that he predestinated everything which comes to pass; and if he predestinated nothing, then he foreknew nothing. But neither of these metaphors will satisfy the inquiring mind. What then is to be done? It is simply to allow a middle wall between foreknowledge and predestination, and allow God to foreknow everything, and that his foreknowledge does not in the least influence our conduct; then, and not until then, are we accountable to him for our actions. But if he predestinates our conduct, we may defy the world to prove the existence of sin.

The unlimited foreknowledge of God is an element in his divine being, without which he could not be perfect. His foreknowledge is, therefore, a principle on which he acts in the government of the universe. And as he is a perfect Being, among whose attributes there is no jar or discord, his will must harmonize with his knowledge, and *he who denies his omni*science denies his existence, and is an atheist. And since he has given to his creature man a mind and will to move him to action, the only question is, did he bind his will as fast in fate as he has his nature? If so, man is a machine, and that operates it, and it must surely go right, and sin is but a phantom. But if the human will is free, it can not be under the influence of predestination or foreknowledge of God; therefore predestination, in the popular sense, does not exist. It has been contended with the foreknowledge of God by a class who find it less trouble to talk than to think.

Now, the whole may be illustrated by a single text: "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature; he that believeth not is baptized shall be saved; but he that believeth not shall be damned." Before the Gospel was preached, God knew as well who would believe and who would not as he will afterward; but he did not predestinate one to believe and another to disbelieve; for that would throw faith and obedience out of the plan of salvation, and obviate the necessity of preaching, and even the need of a Savior.

What then is predestination, which appears so horrible in the eyes of some? It is the predetermined will of God to save all who, of their own free will and accord, believe and obey the Gospel of his Son, and to condemn all who will not. And if one can find any fault with this, it is because he loves sin better than righteousness, and is therefore unworthy of salvation and unfit for happiness; for true happiness can only be found in righteousness.—E. Campbell, in Herald of Life.

What Shall Christians Sing?

It is difficult to discover why a certain eminently intelligent and evangelical sect of Christians insist on singing only David's Psalms, when there is no express command of Christ on the subject. The people referred to believe in and employ extemporaneous prayer; and this in the seeming violation of the Savior's words, "After this manner, therefore, pray ye," or, as in Luke, "When ye pray, say Our Father," etc. If by inference a portion of the Old Testament is held to be the sum total of scriptural praise in the exercises of worship, public and private, how is this specific injunction on the subject of prayer to be understood? Is praise a more sacred exercise than prayer? Or why should there be liberty for human composition of sentences in the one case and such rigid adherence to the letter in the other, even admitting (which we do not) that Rouse's version of the Psalms is an inspired rendering of the original?

Some of the Psalms are historical, others exhortatory, others petitioning, others imprecatory, while many of them are rich in fullness of praise and thanksgiving to the Most High. But all are not alike adapted to the service of song in the public congregation or at the family altar. And to use any of them more or less transposition is necessary, to arrange and adapt the words in accent and in rythm to music. The original Hebrew must come into our modern English, and this, to begin with, is human interference. Besides, the ordinary King James' version, too prosy for metered tunes, must still further submit to the compacting or expanding of phraseology into measures suited to the human invention of melody. Rouse has reduced the hundred and fifty Psalms into a uniform common-meter version. We do not believe that he had any right to elect and fix this particular versification, rather than that of long meter, or sixes, or sevens, or peculiar long meter doubles. The poet claims no divinity or absolutism in the item of meter. *But without some such ex*pedient the Psalms would be silent to-day in many churches where they have grandest outpourings of heart and soul and voice; for the psalm-singing churches, it must be acknowledged, have most admirable and effectual congregational singing. And they could, if they would, make still richer harmonies by blending the sweetly-flowing accents of Wesley and Watts with the antique rendering of Rouse. How delightful it would be to hear the dear name of Jesus—

"——the name high over all
In earth or hell or sky"——

resounding in cadence and echo through these vast congregations, who now venture toward the hallowed appellation but in types and metaphors! May the glad day soon come when the devoted people, who so reverently mention the Savior by name in their prayers, sermons, Sunday school instructions, and home lessons, shall break forth into singing it, in company with all the redeemed hosts of earth and heaven.

There is magic in the syllables of the Savior's name. The name so dear at the mercy-seat, the name so glorious in the anthems of angels, "Christ the Lord," is worthy of distinct and hearty utterance in our songs of worship. And this blessed name has been given among men.

But Rouse, it seems to us, did not really contribute to the church's facilities for edifying and elevating expression in praise, when he restored the merely historical and imprecatory Psalms for use in the Christian dispensation. These passages have their meaning and power; but it cannot be that they are given for the voice of *praise and adoration in public congre*gations in this land and in the present age. Such interpretation is essentially and severely ritualistic. As well undertake to sing a poetical arrangement of the records in the Book of Chronicles. For instance, some years ago, in a country place, in the time of harvest, beauty, bounty, healthfulness and peace, when God was smiling in benedictions everywhere from earth to sea and sky, a minister of mournful mien and dyspeptic habits introduced a Sabbath-morning service by saying, "Let us praise God in the use of the seventy-eighth Psalm," and announced the following stanzas from Rouse's version:

"Those lakes and rivers everywhere,
he turned into blood;
So that nor man nor beast could drink of standing lake or flood.

"He brought among them swarms of flies,
which did them sore annoy;
And divers kinds of filthy frogs
he sent them to destroy.

"Their vines with hail, their sycamores
he with the frost did blast;
Their beasts to hail he gave, their flocks hot thunderbolts did waste."

It is barely worth while just here to note the fact that Rouse took a little human liberty in this translation. King James' Bible reads Psa. lxxviii. 45: "He sent divers sorts of flies among them, and frogs which destroyed them." It was natural, perhaps—scientifically, if not theologically speaking—for Rouse to make the frogs divers. Instead of the flies! But the question will intrude: Was it quite fair for Mr. Rouse, in rounding out his rhymes to the best of his meter to introduce a criticism on frogs and pronounce them "filthy?" The word is not so mellifluous in sound as to add sweetness to the sentiment and it savors a little of slander on the handiwork of the Almighty. The Hebrew's frogs might have been immensely numerous and obtrusive; but where is the warrant for berating them with any of the infirmities of fallen humanity? And yet a large and cultured Christian community will suffer Rouse to put "filthy frogs" into their mouths as the voice of praise, while utterly refusing to join in such sanctified words as

"Jesus, lover of my soul," or

"Rock of Ages, cleft for me!"

Is it any wonder that some people wonder?

In former generations a version of rhymed Scriptures known as "Sternhold and Hopkins," was used in the dissenting churches. In some respects it was equal if not superior to Rouse, although generally and gradually withdrawn when the latter came in reach. In those solemn days of old it was the custom for the precentor to "line out" the psalm or paraphrase, the tone of the reader gliding highly into the key of the tune, and so see-sawing through the service with the congregation. Orthodoxy required that but one line should be taxed on the people's memory at once; and, of course, the rhymes would seem remote and the thought be fragmentory all the tedious service through. The absurdity of the practice had illustration, many a time, in such lines as

"The Lord will come—and he will not Keep silence—but speak out."

Or what would be the effect nowadays of the following verses announced deliberately from the pulpit as a song just after the sermon?

"Ye monsters of the bubbling deep,
Your Maker's praise sound;
Up from the sands ye codlings peep
And wag your tails about."

*While a lamentable amount of dog*gerel and sentimental nothingness have crept into modern Sunday School hymnology, and while Methodists especially have been rebuked by the psalm-singers for their effervescent and repetitious choruses, it might be a question, after all, whether reform on the subject of Christian song is not an end most devoutly to be wished by all. A wise winnowing would be well; and then a hearty, enthusiastic, universal utterances of praise.—Independent.

Scripture Illustration.

Fine meal, i. e., corn or grain ground or beaten fine, is spoken of as far back as the time of Abraham, Gen. xviii. 6; hence mills and mortars must have been known before his time. The mill, common among the Hebrews, scarcely differed at all from that which is used at this day in Egypt and the East. It consisted of two circular stones, two feet in diameter and half a foot thick. The lower one was called רֵחַיִם and רֶכֶב Deut. xxiv. 6; Job xli. 24. It exhibited a slight rise or elevation on the centre, and was fixed in the floor. The upper one was called פֶּלַח Judges ix. 53, was movable, and fit in order to make it fit precisely to the nether one, was slightly hollowed. In the middle of it was a hole through which the corn to be ground was admitted. The upper stone had a handle attached to it, by which it was moved upon the lower, and the corn and grain were in this way broken. There were gloves attached to the mill, which separated the flour from the bran; the bran was put into the mill again and ground over. The gloves were made of reeds; those made of horse-hair were a later invention, not earlier than the time of Pliny.

Since there were neither public mills nor bakers, except the king's, Gen. xl. 2; Hosea vii. 4–10, each one, by consequence, owned a mill himself; hence it was made an infringement of the law for a person to take another's mill or millstone as a pledge, Deut. xxiv. 6; for without his mill, there being no public ones, he would have been in a bad situation. At first barley alone was ground, but afterwards wheat more commonly, as the poor alone used barley. Barley bread answers better in the warm climate of the East, than among us. On the second day it becomes insipid and rough to the palate; and this is the case also, in warm climates, with wheat bread. Hence the necessity of baking every day; and hence, also, the daily grinding at the mills about evening. The sound of the millstones, probably at this time, is spoken of by the prophet. Jer xxv. 10. The mill was commonly turned by two persons, the lowest maid-servants. They sat opposite to and facing each other, the one on one side, the other on the other side. One took hold of the mill-handle and impelled it half way round; the other then seized it and completed its revolution. Exodus xii. 5; Job xxxi. 10, 11; Isa. lxvii. 2. The labor was severe and menial; frequently enemies, taken in war, were condemned to perform it. Judges xvi. 21; Lam. v. 13.

The business of baking was performed anciently by women, however high their stations. Gen. xviii. 6; Lev. xxvi. 26; 2 Sam. xiii. 6, 8; Jer. vii. 18, 19. When luxury afterwards prevailed among them, the matrons and their daughters gave it up to their maids. 1 Sam. viii. 13. These maids were so numerous in the palace of David, that a portion of bread, etc., was distributed to them, the same as to a large multitude of men. 2 Sam. vi. 19. In Egypt there were kings' bakers very early; they make their appearance in Palestine also, but at a much later period, Hosea vii. 4–7; Jer. xxxvii. 21.

The Discipline of Suffering.

It is the leading business of man, as he deems it, to shun the path of affliction. Were he to choose, he would never be found walking along its rugged way. The great aims of his life are either to fortify himself against the coming of trials, or to mitigate their severity. It seems to have been forgotten that there is a discipline in the trying visitations of Providence, which God sees to be necessary for us, and which He in mercy sends, in spite of our opposition. It is for this reason in part, that life is represented as choosing his people "out of the furnace of affliction." It is there that the dross of sin and of the world is commonly melted away and consumed.

The most illustrious saints that ever lived, those whose names we delight to honor, were those whom God had refined as silver, by processes of his own appointment, which are often so hard for flesh and blood to bear. Even Christ, "the Captain of our salvation," is declared to have been made "perfect through suffering." The road that leads to destruction is broad, and often strewn with flowers. That which conducts us to "pleasures forevermore" at the right hand of Jesus, is one of wisely and mercifully appointed tribulation—mysterious as, to us mortals, it appears. God's ways in all this "are not as our ways, nor his thoughts as our thoughts."

When will our faith teach us that Jehovah is wise, as He is supremely good, in all the dark clouds that settle upon our pathway from earth to heaven? When shall we learn that it is his to appoint the discipline of life —that discipline which is needful to prepare the subject of it for heaven? Why should we shrink from the ap*pointments of a Father*, who is taking us at last to himself, is qualifying us for that rest which He has in store for all his dear children.

The discipline of suffering, according to the sacred Scriptures, is founded in divine wisdom and love. Indeed, in every feature of human suffering, disquietude and disappointment, there is a divine reason of goodness and mercy. God orders all events for man's good. We are being tested and educated. This life is given to us, not that we continue what we are, but become what we should be. The host that is led to a great warfare, is fitted for victory by enduring hardness;" so must every Christian be fitted by the discipline of suffering. If he would fight the great battle of life successfully, and receive a crown of glory in the world to come. Indeed, we are told in the Revelation, that John saw a great multitude in heaven, "which stood before the throne of God and before the Lamb, clothed in white robes, and palms in their hands; and cried with a loud voice, saying, salvation to our God which sitteth upon the throne and unto the Lamb." The question was asked, "What are these which are arrayed in white robes? and whence came they?" The response was, "These are they which came out of great tribulation, and have washed their robes and made them white in blood of the Lamb." How grand! They have "come up out of great tribulation," distressing trials which they endured with patience for Christ's sake, for his kingdom and glory "Made them white in the blood of the Lamb;" cleansed from sin and made righteous in the atoning blood of Christ—"the Lamb of God that taketh away the sin of the world."—Evangelical Messenger.

—It is stated on good authority that with the passage of every hour in these United States seven poor helpless inebriates drop into that dreadful grave, from which, the Bible declares, there is no heavenly resurrection. There is certainly a large and important field for all temperance workers.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND., ... 10, 1876.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞Brother J. M. Shackelford wishes us to state that the next meeting of the Confederate Christian Association, will convene at [illegible] Hardin county, Ju. e 25th.

☞The Annual Conference of the State of Indiana is to be held hereafter, and will commence on Thursday, Aug. 12. The Christian Publishing Association is also to convene at the same time and place. Brother Speers will speak next week.

☞Our annual meeting at Antioch passed off most pleasantly. While there was a very large attendance of people who seemed deeply interested in the great truths of the Gospel, there was no spirit of strife in the meetings, and all seemed to be desirous of more edification in the Master's work. The preaching was mostly upon practical topics, which argues well for our preaching brethren. As a rule our annual gatherings should be characterized by earnest preaching upon such subjects as will feed men's religious natures. In short, all preaching should be practical as well as doctrinal. The truth is gaining many strong friends in this community, and we hope that many honest hearts may find eternal life in Christ our Lord.

The Thistle.

The Canada thistle is gradually working its way westward, having now reached Iowa and Kansas. It has appeared in Indiana and Illinois several times, years ago, but vigorous measures were taken on the part of those States, and the warfare is constantly kept up. Men are employed at regular wages to dig and burn the plants, it being ineffectual to leave them on the surface of the ground to dry and die. Whenever this thistle gets a foothold in a community, the damage is said to amount to ten per cent. on all the farming land at a fair valuation.

The fields of men are kept under constant watch to keep away these destructive weeds. Men cannot bear the thought of having their fine farms spoiled by these noxious thistles. But do they realize that there are other thistles which are threatening all modern society; habits which cannot be rooted up for a generation? There are thistles in the human heart which are a lasting plague. Intemperance, slanders, false swearing, and a multitude of other sins which must be extirpated, or the great moral fields, now white for the sickle, will be ruined. Let God's reapers go forth, put in the blade, and labor with all honest zeal to totally destroy these sins which, like thistles, poison the heart.

The God of the Living.

Dr. H. A. Storrs, of New York, recently preached a sermon from these words, "I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. God is not the God of the dead, but of the living." The object Mr. Storrs had in view was to prove that immortality of the soul and its continued consciousness separate from the body. Mr. Storrs is an earnest man and a clear thinker, and we greatly wonder that he should offer this text as proof of natural or innate immortality. That the text proves a future life we most heartily believe, and that our Lord triumphantly confuted the Sadducees is most clearly established, but upon what ground did he prove a future life? Was it upon the hypothesis that men's souls are immortal and therefore cannot die? We think not. [illegible]

Let us look at the points brought out in this triumphant discourse. The Sadducees denied a future resurrection of the dead. This point is plainly brought out in their question concerning the woman who had seven husbands. They ask, In the resurrection whose wife shall she be, for they all had her to wife? It will be seen that they did not ask who should be theirs in the intermediate state. If the woman's soul and the seven souls of the seven husbands had all passed into a state of consciousness, and they were cognizant of each others personal identity, why could not the question bear upon the present condition of the case? But this we will let subject be calmly passed by, and the whole stress of the question is laid upon the resurrection. [illegible]

Notice again the position taken by these skeptics, "In the resurrection whose wife shall she be?" No notice is taken of the existence of the soul, nor is there one word about its [illegible] Indeed the word soul is not mentioned in the whole conversation. This being true, we are prepared to look at the answer given by our Master. "Ye do err, not knowing the Scriptures nor the power of God. [illegible] For in the resurrection they neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are as the angels of God in heaven." [illegible] Now, in order to understand what Jesus meant when he spoke unto you of that which was spoken unto you by God, saying, I am the God of Abraham, the God of Isaac, and the God of Jacob. He is not the God of the dead, but of the living. Ye therefore greatly err. Have ye not read

Afterward.

Now, the sowing and the weeping,
Working hard and waiting long;
After—of the golden reaping,
Harvest home and grateful song.

Now, the panting, sharp, unsparing,
Scathing blades, bleeding about;
Afterward, the glorious bearing
Of the Master's pleasant fruit.

Now, the long and toilsome duty,
Sleepless other lovers and living;
Afterward the perfect beauty
Of the palace of the King.

Now, the tasting and the tension,
Waiting with ever-abated strong;
Afterward, the grand accession
Of the hallelujah song.

Now, the spirit conflict-riven,
Wounded heart, unequal strife;
Afterward, the triumph given,
And the Master's Enter thou!

Now, the toiling, strange and lowly,
Quenchless zeal and tireless now!
Afterward, the service holy,
And the Master's Enter thou!

God's Anvil.

Fate's furnace-heat within me quivers,
Upon it breath upon the fire doth blow,
And all my heart in anguish shivers,
And trembles at the fiery glow;
And yet I whisper, "As God wills!"
And in his hottest fire hold still.

He comes and lays my heart, all heated,
On the bare anvil, labored sore;
Into his own fair shape to beat it,
With his great hammer, blow on blow;
And yet I whisper, "As God wills!"
And at his fiercest blows hold still.

He takes my softened heart and lets it;
The sparks fly off at every blow;
He turns it o'er and o'er, and beats it,
And lets it cool, and makes it glow;
And yet I whisper "As God wills!"
And, trusting to the end, hold still.

He kindles, for my profit purely,
Affliction's glowing, fiery brand;
And his tenderest blows are surely
Inflicted by a master hand;
So I say, trusting, "As God wills!"
And hope in him, and suffer still.

Hope.

"All the days of my appointed time will I wait till my change come." Job. "We shall not all sleep, but we shall all be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible, and we shall be changed." Paul. How perfectly harmonious are the utterances of the Holy Spirit, though spoken thousands of years apart, and through the man of Uz and the man of Tarsus! Job and Paul had the one soul-inspiring blessed hope of, having a part in the first resurrection; on such the second death would have no powers, or, in the words of the beloved John, of seeing Jesus and being made like him. How consoling and how heart-cheering to the wayworn and care-worn pilgrim whose lot it is to live in the closing days of Gentile time to have the same blessed hopes, and to know for a certainty that if we remain it will be but a very little while, or if we sleep it will be the sleep from which none awake to accept How striking the contrast between the hope of those inspired servants of the most high God and the teachers of modern theology. They all died in the faith, not having received the promise, God having provided some better thing for us, that they should not be made perfect. David could say he should be satisfied when he awoke with or in Christ's likeness. The hope of an unending life through Jesus and the resurrection from the dead was the hope of all the inspired writers of the old and new testament Scriptures. Any other hope than this is like a spider's web. A hope so much divine! may trials well endured purge our souls from every sin, as Christ the Lord is pure. "Behold, I come as a thief; blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth the garments, lest he walk naked and they see his shame." Startling announcement! fearful indeed to the unready, but joyful and glorious beyond expression to the watching, waiting, weary saint. Our weary pilgrimage ended, our anxiety all gone, our hope swallowed up in full fruition. "Come, ye blessed of my Father, and inherit the kingdom prepared for you from the foundation of the world." Fearful events are upon us. Among the foremost is the blindness of the men of this generation. Truly the Ninevites will rise up in the judgment and condemn them. "Oh, my soul, enter not thou into their counsels, lend not thine aid in speeding the false cry of peace and safety, for sudden destruction will come upon them, and they shall not escape. Hope deferred maketh the heart sick, but when the desire cometh it is the tree of life.

For thirty long years has our blessed hope been deferred, often have our hearts been sick, and even now what is the outlook? From our standpoint it is fearful to contemplate. The nations are arming and preparing for the last great conflict. It will be for the dominion of earth. These shall make war with the Lamb, and the Lamb shall overcome them; for he is Lord of lords and King of kings, and they that are with him are called, and chosen, and faithful. Soon the desire of all nations will come and oh, how sweet and delicious will be the fruit plucked from life's fair tree, which grows on either side of the river in the midst of the paradise of God.

NEWELL BOND.

FLAT ROCK, N. C.

From Bro. Clifton.

BROTHER BOND:—By chance I happened to get acquainted with Brother Hatch, son of Brother J. S. Hatch, and from him became acquainted with your paper, which has interested me very much, as it is the first I have seen for years that corresponds with my belief, and vindicates the truth as I understand Christ and the apostles to teach it. At the age of nineteen years I joined the Christian Church in Iowa, under the preaching of Aaron Chatteton. Josiah Clifton, my father, was a Christian preacher. I made the Bible my study, and at the age of twenty-three I held a three days' debate with Brother Chatfetôh, "H" Oschalusiu, on the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the dead. The result was, the Church claimed that I was getting up dissentions and vindicating doctrines they could not sanction, and I was silenced. I see that Brother Myers was silenced. Brother Shockey, and several others also. I was preaching the truth as I understood it, and as a matter of course I submitted to the powers that be. They silenced me in the church, but they could not silence my tongue; I have continued to teach the word of God as taught by our Lord Jesus Christ and his apostles in its purity. I have made the word of God my study, and although standing alone, without any church, I have grown strong in the faith, and have made my way, thus far through life, trusting in the promises of the Lord, and laboring under the same commission that he gave to his disciples when he told them to "go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." Taking this for my authority, I have preached Christ and him crucified, regardless of all sectarian and man-made creeds. I have spent the most of my time on the frontier of the west; am now on the North Loup, in Nebraska. Have commenced a church here, and learning that there was a church of my belief, I will apply to you to know if you will recognize a Church of God taking the New Testament for its rule of faith, and will help me to establish one in accordance with your rule, and send me the proper instructions.

I have an appointment on the Cedar River, for a three days' meeting, about thirty miles from here, where I expect to meet with some success.

Have already drawn this communication out to a greater length than I intended. Hoping and praying that God will prosper and bless his people, I remain yours in the faith.

The Scarlet.

"The spectacle of an ecclesiastical dignitage in the streets of New York, ruddy from the scarlet crown-button of his red cap to the pink of his holy slippers, and the vermillion of his buggy wheels, will be a display to excite the wonder of the gamins, and afford ammunition for the light artillery of the wits. We shall doubtless, think of the "scarlet woman" of the Apocalypse. But if any one imagines that this is a silly show, after the manner of John Robinson or P. T. Barnum, he will signally fail of appreciation of Roman Catholic policy and shrewdness. The red millinery will as surely set High-Church ambition in a fever as that gilt confectionery will dazzle the eyes of a child.

What is a Cardinal? Nothing less than a Prince of Rome, standing next to a potentate who claims universal empire, both civil and ecclesiastical. It will speedily appear that the dazzling apparition is well adapted to make weak heads dizzy. America has never before had a cardinal. England has had none from the reign of Elizabeth to the year 1860. But just at that time the Tractarian controvesy was bearing its sad fruit. Newman had entered the Roman communion, and started the Congregation of the Oratory. The moment was auspicious for Rome, and it was wisely used. Dr. Wiseman, Vicar Apostolic, went across the channel, and came back Archbishop of Westminster and Prince Cardinal of the Holy Roman Empire.

The fruit of that appointment may be seen in the England of to-day—seen in the advance which Romanism has made among the nobility, and which will be seen in like manner among those weak-headed Americans, whose highest ambition is to be considered representatives of blue blood on this side of the water. And here is a nucleus, a central orb for the American court—a prince who dates back his royal flowers to a period more remote than the most ancient reigning family.

When the kingly hand of Pius sows the divine seed in heretical soil, he does it with a purpose, and with a belief that the soil is fit to receive it. He knows well the weakness of our aristocratic circles in society. He plants one scarlet flower and expects to reap many golden ones, in which expectation if he is disappointed, he will be no more so than we.—The Interior.

Interesting Discoveries.

A piece of oak, fossilized, which had evidently, when in condition of wood, had been artificially cut, with square edges, to a shape some twenty inches long by fourteen wide and five deep, has recently been found in the South Fork tunnel, near Forrest City, Sierra county, 1,200 feet from the mouth of the tunnel with 800 vertical feet of the mountain above it. This relic of human artifice in the far away back prehistoric period, was found in what was the west bank of the great river which ran across the present courses of the Sierra river system. How many thousands of centuries have passed since it was shaped, and, how many it had lain undisturbed in its deeply covered grave, is a suggestive subject of study and conjecture. Other discoveries indicating the existence of man in very remote ages, have been made in various sections of this old river course; and in 1858 a number of fossilized pine logs, seven feet long and four in diameter, that had been neatly sawed and piled up together, were found in the Alleghany tunnel under the bed of "Old Blue River." The recently found relic has been forwarded to the State University.—Contra Costa Gazette.

—A reader of the "Bible Echo," to show us the identity of meaning between "hell" and "grave," as understood by our forefathers, communicates the following for our information:—"In East Suffolk, to cover up beets or potatoes with earth is called hilling,—a hale of beets. In Lincolnshire, the same thing is called a grave,—a grave of beets, or a grave of potatoes." This is worth knowing.—Bible Echo.

There is no Place Like Home.

This poetic phrase is no less beautiful than true. We find that the fond attachment of home pervades all ranks and classes of society. The wandering Scythians, with no abiding habitation, maintained great regard and veneration for the place where the bones of their forefathers slumbered. Even the rude and untutored denizen of our own forest, whose dauntless spirit never quails before a foe, has, nevertheless, a heart which beats with the warmest love towards his friends and for the spot where stands his wigwam. But in civilized society, what is it that binds every sympathizing feeling of the heart around the cottage where our fathers dwelt? Is it because there is more intrinsic worth attached to it?—or is it those heaven-born associations which connect each brook or rill, each hill and dale, with some joyful recollection of happy hours spent in the company of a youthful friend who now, perhaps, sleeps beneath the cold sod of the valley? Yes, it lends more firmly to rivet the ties of affection, to paint to the imagination scenes which occurred at home, and to call up from the wrecks of the past hours sacred to memory.

Yet these associations, joyous as they are, would sink into comparative nothingness if from that circle where we spent our youthful days in the sunshine of pleasure was removed—a mother! Yes, home, sweet as it is, would be like a temple stripped of its garlands were it not for the sacred name of mother to consecrate its portals. Like the evening dew, which scatters its fragrance while all else is wrapped in the slumber of night, the mother, while every other ear is deaf, is attentive to our griefs, mingles her tears in the cup of our misfortune, and soothes our dying agony.

What a solemn place for contemplation is the grave of our mother! Then is it that the soothing words that fell from her lips, the sweet smiles that wreathed her countenance, and the warm sentiments which breathed from her soul, came flecting along like heavenly visions. Alas! never will we comprehend the charms that are conveyed in that word MOTHER, until the grave has hidden her from our view!—Hebrew Leader.

Men Out of Their Places.

There is a place for every man; his own proper place, where he ought to be. God has designed him for it, and it belongs to him, and to no one else, and every man may know and find his place if he will. It must be his sincere desire to be in his place, and he must go to God heartily praying, Lord, what will thou have me to do? Where will thou have me to be? Let him surrender his own will to God's will, and God will lead and guide him; and he shall make no mistake.

And it is a blessed thing to be in one's own place. God will be with him here. He will cheer, and strengthen and sustain him. He may have trials; but he meets them in the path of duty, and God's grace is sufficient for him. The same compassionate God, who was with Daniel in the den of lions, and with the three Hebrews in the burning fiery furnace, will not leave him, nor forsake him. Being in his own proper place, he may go to God with confidence, and he shall be comforted and supported. He shall be joyful in all his tribulation.

There is place for every man, and God intended each to find and to fill his place. The trouble is, most men aspire to places they cannot fill. They want to be presidents, commodores, or captains, when they are only fit for the ranks. Some want to be poets or painters, when they are only prosy pumpkins. He is the happiest man who finds the place he is fitted to fill, and fills it well, however humble it may be. The one who knows himself, his faults, and how to overcome them —his virtues, and how to increase them—who knows the uses and abuses of the organs of mind and body, and exercises them in the fear and love of God—is the happiest man.—Illustrated Annual.

Stand Still.

Faith can stand still. There are times in the Christian's history when the greatest thing to do is to do nothing, and the grandest stand that can be made is to stand still; and faith is strong enough for all this. Strength oftentimes manifests itself in impatience, but the greatest strength is that which can be patient. In quietness and confidence (or faith,) lies our truest strength. Though the Red Sea be before us, and there be no bridge, no sail, nay, not a raft nor a plank on which to float over, when on either side of us are mountains that we cannot climb, and behind are Pharoah and his avenging hosts;—then to stand still and see the salvation of our God, simply because God hath bid us do so, that is the sublimest exercise of faith, for it is the most complete renunciation of self, and the most thorough dependence upon God. Such faith as that shall not have long to halt. For such faith God will open "a way, even though it be across the bed of the sea, and "go forward" shall be the cry. Whatever the night may be, in the morning faith will start the timbrel and the dance, calling joyously for a song unto the Lord, who so gloriously hath triumphed on behalf of his own. When we see how nobly, how greatly faith can act, and the blessed results that follow, we are not surprised that the inspired apostle should say of faith that it is the gift of God. The power calmly, quietly, patiently, confidently to wait and to endure, could come from none other than the all-patient and almighty God.—The Waymide.

Many men, without being hypocrites at heart, surround themselves with an atmosphere of insincerity in the intercourse of life which destroys to that extent their faith in the reality of others. Let us not pretend to more than we have and are. Those who have homes should especially seek to keep them free from everything that is false.

Prayer.

By explanation, the simplest things become obscure. Hear the physiologist explain the nature of life, or the metaphysician define self-consciousness, and their explanations will only confuse. It is so with prayer. The labors of divines to simplify that which is already perfectly simple, have created much confusion in the minds of many. Prayer is simply the "offering of our desires to God for things agreeable to his will, with confession of sins and acknowledgment of mercies." The heavenly Father wishes to hold family intercourse with His beloved children, and he promises to hear our confessions when we have gone astray, our thanks when we receive gifts, and our requests when we have wants. He is never so engrossed in the affairs of the universe but that he can sympathize in our sorrows, our joys and our wants. If, through prayer, we accept His sympathy, he will assuage the first, deepen, increase and perpetuate the second, and supply our real wants. But He is the judge, not we. This is the secret of prayer. It is a mystery, simply because the Divine nature is a mystery. Let us not, while seeking to fathom and understand its nature, lose the benefits and blessings attached to prayer.—Christian Observer.

—"It is a remarkable fact," says Dr. Brookes in The Truth, "that in the epistle to the Philippians the word sin does not occur, but the words joy and rejoice are found eighteen times. "Rejoice in the Lord alway: and again I say, Rejoice." (Phil. iv., 4.) The Holy Ghost does not bid us rejoice in our circumstances, nor in ourselves, but in the Lord, and that alway, no matter what our circumstances, or how loathsome we are in our own sight. Yet how can we rejoice in the Lord alway, if we are alway in doubt of our salvation? Truly, the secret of joy is found only when we can say, 'I know whom I have believed, and am persuaded that he is able to keep that which I have committed unto him against that day.' (2 Tim., i, 12.)"

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

1.—All communications for the RESTITUTION should be written in a plain, legible hand, and, before sent, carefully revised and corrected.

2.—Business matters and subscriptions, if on the same sheet, should be written so that they can be taken apart, without defiling the communication. If not clearly, a separate slip may be enclosed to the same purpose.

3.—When you send names of new subscribers, let them be marked as such.

4.—Be careful to write all names of persons and places plainly and distinctly.

5.—In all cases, give the name of the post-office, county, and state. When a town or village is called by one name, and the post-office by another, be sure to give the name of the post-office.

6.—When the direction of a paper is to be changed do not forget to name the office to which it has been sent. Unless this is done, it is out of our power to make the change.

7.—When subscribers remove, let us know immediately. Otherwise, their papers will doubtless be sent, and to their charge, until such notice is given.

8.—When subscribers wish to discontinue, let them remember that all arrearages must first be paid.

9.—Parties ordering MSS. returned, must prepay the postage; otherwise they will remain in the office.

Obituary.

Died at the residence of her father, Sister Jemima Hubbell, daughter of W. T. and N. Gubbs. She was born December 25th, 1843, was baptized by S. N. Chaplin in her fifteenth year; was married to Benjamin Hubbell in her twentieth year, and lived a devoted Christian till her death. She was a kind companion, a dutiful child, and beloved by all that knew her. There was a large turnout at her funeral. She leaves a kind father, mother, husband, and two sisters to mourn her loss. She also leaves a little girl one year old. In her last few hours of consciousness, she talked to her father, mother and companion in regard to the coming of Jesus, and would say, "Father, when Jesus comes and all get now but us others who have no hope. Funeral services by the writer, from 1 Thes. iv. 13-18. Brother and Sister Gubbs have had nine children, and but two spoken. May the promises of God sustain them in their affliction. She died July 4th 1865, aged 21 years, 6 months and 17 days.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND H. V. REED.

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God, . . . Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The subjects to be treated of will be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature, location and glories of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the folly and sin of the Church in not looking for the personal appearing and kingdom of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Apostasy, its rise, progress and duration.

5. The Restoration of Israel, their long dispersion, and their future glory in the land of Palestine.

6. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

7. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

8. The Work of Prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the future of those to establish the Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

9. The Resurrection of the Just, and the change of the living Saints at the coming of the Lord.

10. The Judgment, and the Rewards and Punishments of the future state.

11. The Millennium, and the Restoration of all things spoken of by the Prophets.

12. The New Heavens and the New Earth, and the Eternal Inheritance of the Saints.

Such is a brief outline of the subjects of OUR HOME. It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can conscientiously assist in its circulation. If he desires the restoration we shall give, to it as much support as we can upon receipt of the subscription price.

THE RESTITUTION.

From Sweaburg, Ont.

BROTHER REED:—

Permit me to make a brief statement, through the RESTITUTION, of the church at Sweaburg.

The cause of Christ here is in rather a prosperous condition, notwithstanding the opposition it meets with from the so-called Christian churches. Truth, as it always has done, floats far above the waves of opposition, no matter how low they roll. The traditions of men prove unavailing when brought against the immutable utterances of Jehovah. The theory of no-substance men, and a no-substance inheritance for them, or of immaterial subjects, (nothing) and an immaterial kingdom (none) has no longer a place in the candid thinking minds here. Common sense forbids the entertainment of such metaphysical absurdities. Just think of a man without body or form or existence, and a kingdom without bounds or space or locality!! A brilliant conception!

The truth here being held up in contrast with such nonsense, has had the desired effect. For while it has enlisted the seeds against us, it has led the honest to read the Scriptures, and know the truth, which Jesus says shall make men free. And with this freedom and boldness, we are, I trust, building a superstructure on the foundation—Christ Jesus—laid by the great apostle, that Satan will not be able to throw down.

The church of this place was organized in 1861, and for all the strifes and difficulties it has had—internal as well as external, being harrassed by certain dogmatical elements from within, who had crept in apparently for the purpose of pressing views contrary to the doctrine they had heard, and those on the outside conspiring for its overthrow, by burning the only place of worship, by interruption, by using their influence to keep hearers away—it is living yet, and bids fair to live on unhurt amid the war of elements and marshalling of hosts. It is composed of the right sort of men, who have not only had a hand in the cause of truth but a heart, and it is to such that God promises success. They have not had regular preaching, but have been visited by passing brethren, who have called and held meetings occasionally, during the thirteen years. I visited the church here for the first time last January, and held a series of meetings, which I believe has done considerable good. By the earnest solicitation of the brethren, I came here again May 15, and have held another succession of meetings, during which time I baptized four, and entered their names upon the list, and expect others to follow shortly, and manifest their faith in a risen Savior, by being buried with Him into death and risen to walk in newness of life. And may God bless the resolution, and grant his Spirit to direct their future course of life, that they may be vessels of honor and instruments of service to Him, in letting their light shine before men.

I have agreed to meet with the church once in every two months, for the purpose of strengthening them and keeping a spirituality existing that will cause them to be knit together in perfect unison of faith and love. To keep up a spiritual life, we want, as much as possible, to keep up a spiritual feast, in assembling together for that purpose. "Whereseever two or three are gathered together in my name, there am I in the midst," are the words of the Master, and we want to regard them fully, for upon such occasions we have the promise of being in the very best of company. No fellowship equal to that of Christ.

L. C. KERR.

HIGHLAND CREEK, ONT.

Armageddon at Hand.

The San Francisco "Chronicle" says: "A careful survey of the existing European situation seems almost sufficient to justify a belief in the prediction of the enthusiasts, who declare that the true interpretation of John's Apocalyptic vision shows that 'the battle of the great day of God Almighty at Armageddon,' is actually at hand. All Europe is at present like one vast camp. The nations are arming, from the British Channel to the Ural mountains; from the Mediterranean to the Baltic, as if with a prophetic understanding that a terrible and portentous crisis is at hand. According to the Paris "Republique Francaise," a German camp of manœuvres for one hundred and fifty thousand men is about to be formed near Treves, under the immediate command of the emperor.' According to the "Kolnische Zeitung," (Cologne Journal) the French are about establishing a similar great camp for drill and military manœuvers, near the German frontiers. The nations are becoming armies; the general masses of the people are being turned into soldiers. Russia has a greedy eye on India and the Sick Man. Austria has long coveted a portion of the territory of Turkey. France is said to be still cherishing feelings of bitterness, and revolving schemes of revenge.

"There are also those who predict a great Ultramontane combination for the restoration of Rome and the temporal power of the Supreme Pontiff. Rumors of schemes of conquests, of plots, conspiracies, and new alliances fill the circumambient air, as mere people a sunbeam. The arsenals are busy shaping more deadly implements of destruction than was ever before known. The founderies are casting colossal cannon, compared with which those heretofore used in warfare are but children's toys. The powder with which these mighty engines were to be charged was not thought to have sufficient power, but the world is now given to understand by the Battle Gazette that the German Government has succeeded or secured the secret of a new explosive power, far more powerful, and which is immensely superior to any used or known elsewhere in Europe.

"When we contemplate the present warlike attitude of the Continental powers, when we estimate the vast numbers of their standing armies; when we consider the amount of interruption to the arts of peace, and the crushing burdens upon the people, which they entail; when we see Germany and France arming to the teeth, and by their vast preparations compelling their neighbors to strain every nerve and tax every resource for the same purpose, in order to be ready for the fearful crisis which all seem to anticipate—when we see these things we may well feel thankful that our happy position on the American continent, with no powerful nations upon our border, exempts us from such necessities; that with a feeble navy, and a standing army inferior to that of any fourth-rate power of the whole world, we still draw peaceful breath, and sleep untroubled by dreams of danger from any external foe."

The ex-Premier, Mr. Gladstone, says; "There is a fixed purpose among the secret inspirers of Roman policy to pursue, by the road of force, upon the arrival of any favorable opportunity, the favorite project of re-erecting the terrestrial throne of the Popedom, even if it can only be re-erected on the ashes of the city (Rome), and amidst the whitening bones of the people."

The "Illustrated London News," referring to the recent war rumors, says: "Within the last few days a slight political earthquake has been felt on the continent, which, although of brief duration, attested the existence, and, to a certain extent, the activity of pent-up volcanic agencies, that, at no very distant period, may possibly exert a destructive power.

"Just now Prince Bismarck has enough on his hands. The conflict which he is waging against the Papacy is one which, whatsoever may be the issue, sufficiently taxes his energies. The influence of the Church of Rome over the Latin races is not to be despised, and it is highly probable that, under any circumstances, Germany will have to bear the brunt of the struggle alone. She cannot afford to provoke other opponents. She may possibly bring into the field against her not merely France, but France more or less intimately allied with Austria, Italy and Spain.

A writer in the "Baptist" of April 22d, says: "To me two things are beyond all question, that a terrible European war is looming in the distance, and secondly, that the present race of foreign diplomatists (including those of Great Britain) are not by any means equal to its prevention.

"The elements of strife and violence are rapidly increasing between France and Germany, and in a scarcely inferior degree, between Prussia and the Vatican; or, to state the matter more distinctly, between the friend and foe to the temporal power of the Pope. The orthodox Catholic with true Jesuitical cunning and strategy, has sullenly submitted to an inevitable and unavoidable necessity, but it is well known that he has secretly been sharpening his weapons against the day of purposed revenge. The day is nearer than English Protestants imagine, and it is of growing importance to enquire how shall Protestant England keep herself free from the deluge of human blood?

"Honestly, I see no resource but in earnest wrestling prayer. What if churches and the ministry appointed set seasons for united prayer, for this special purpose? Is it not promised to us that the nations 'shall learn war no more?' Then why not exercise mighty prayer for the fulfillment of this promise?"

We may remark on the above excerpt from the "Baptist," that no amount of prayer can avert the predicted war of Armageddon, when God shall bring it as a final judgment upon the nations; but we can pray for its speedy accomplishment, and the consequent introduction of the millennial reign of the Prince of Peace, when swords shall be beaten into ploughshares, and they shall learn war no more.—Signs of Our Times.

A Cardinal's Oath.

The oath which a Roman cardinal is required to take, and which, as we presume, Cardinal McCloskey has taken commits him to the absolute supremacy of the Pope in both his pontifical and civil character. Among other things, he must swear that he "will be faithful and obedient to St. Peter, the Holy Apostolic Roman Church, and our most Holy Lord, the pope, and his successors;" that he "will give them any assistance in retaining, defending and recovering the Roman Papacy and the Regalia of Peter with all my (his) might and endeavor;" that he "will resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who shall attempt anything against them;" that he "will seek out and oppose, persecute, and fight against heretics and schismatics against our Lord the Pope;" that he will maintain "the constitution of the blessed Pius of 1560, and the declarations of his successors, particularly those of Innocent IX., 1591, and those of Clement VIII., 1592;" that he will maintain the Papal claims to various Italian cities; and that he "will not seek absolution from any of the articles enumerated in his oath.

Such are some of the particulars embraced in the oath which Cardinal McCloskey has taken, committing him in the most complete and abject devotion to the Pope and his successors in office as ecclesiastical and civil potentates. It is well known that Pius IX. has never acquiesced in the suppression of the former States of the Church to the Kingdom of Italy, that he still claims to be their (temporal) sovereign, and that he has placed Victor Emmanuel under the ban of excommunication for having deprived him of his temporalities. Papacy in the person of the Pope has not relinquished a single one of its pretensions to the civil power. What has been lost in this respect has been lost against its consent, and with no other concurrence than that which necessity has forced. The Pope still insists that he is by right a temporal sovereign, and the cardinalate is theoretically a secular as well as a religious office, and in both aspects it acknowledges the duty of absolute allegiance to the supreme and infallible authority of the Roman Pontiff.

In this view of the question we are not a little at loss to see how Cardinal McCloskey can reconcile his official oath as a cardinal with his duties and obligations as a citizen under the constitution of the United States and of the state in which he resides. If the Pope should attempt to recover his so-called possessions from the King of Italy, if filibustering expeditions were organized in this country to aid his Pontifical Majesty in the effort, and if the president, as it would be his duty to do, should issue his proclamation forbidding all such organizations, what would Cardinal McCloskey do in such a contingency? Would he merge the citizen in the cardinal, and thus keep his faith with the Pope; or the cardinal in the citizen, and obey the executive authority of the United States? Would his Eminence "resist unto blood all persons whatsoever who" should by force dispute the civil authority of "our Most Holy Lord, the Pope?" Would he help "in recovering the Roman Papacy and the Regalia of Peter with all" his "might and endeavor?" How about seeking out and opposing persecuting, and fighting against heretics and schismatics against "our Lord the Pope?"

These may not, probably never will, become practical questions with the American cardinal; yet they are fair questions to test the nature and scope of the oath which he has taken. The oath itself might do very well for the Dark Ages; but in the nineteenth century and in this country it hardly fits the age or the place. The American people have happily come to the conclusion that popes, cardinals, bishops, priests, and all other ecclesiastical functionaries have no civil duties to perform except those of citizens, unless elected or appointed to offices according to the laws of the land. Cardinal McCloskey, whatever he may be in the theory of the Roman Papacy, is simply a citizen of the state of New York and of the United States of America, possessing the same powers and subject to the same obligations as all other citizens. The religious character of his office our institutions freely tolerate, but its secular character in this country is a mere sham and is rapidly becoming a sham everywhere else. It is at best a faded and worn-out figment of the past. The world moves, even if the Papacy does not.

We say these things in no disparagement of Cardinal McCloskey. We do not suppose the country to be in any danger because Pius IX. has seen fit to turn the archbishop into the cardinal, nor would it be if the cardinal should happen to be the next Pope and establish the seat of the Roman See in the free City of New York. There is room enough here for a Pope; and were he here, rather than in the Holy City, all his rights as a citizen would be defended and all his responsibilities as such would be enforced.—Independent.

The War Agitation.

Louis Napoleon once indulged in the remark that when France was satisfied the rest of the world might rest in peace. At the present time France is not at all satisfied, yet it is very anxious to have peace. But the map of Europe has been reconstructed since Napoleon's grandiloquent remark, and in the present disturbed condition of affairs in Europe, France is but a passive cause, and all war sensations are against her protest. The continent today is more of a military camp than ever before since the first empire. The elements are ready for a more tremendous struggle than has ever taken place on earth. In a recent essay by a military authority of high rank an estimate is made of the number of men maintained in the great continental armies, and the expenses involved. Including the reserves that may actually be called into service, it is stated that these military establishments number about 6,600,000 men, of whom about 4,500,000 are allotted to Germany, France and Russia in nearly equal proportions, with 1,000,000 to Austria, and 750,000 to Italy. One idea pervades all these establishments, and that is that a general war is certain to come in the near future. The chances between the several participants or combinations are so evenly balanced that the only advantage to be gained now is preparatory training. Hence all Europe is under military discipline and training.

France figures in these affairs in a role not very different from that in which she appeared for more than three-quarters of a century prior to Sedan. She is to a great extent the cause of this wonderful military absorption, but she does not want war. Her avowed purpose to have vengeance against Germany keeps millions of men in different countries in arms, yet she wants peace. Her greatest fear is that some one may precipitate the crisis, and force her into the struggle before her thorough preparations are complete. She has recently developed a remarkable degree of patience under provocation, and has allowed nothing to withdraw her attention for a moment from the great purpose before her, nor cause her to forget that peace is most essential in order to give her time for recuperation.

Prudence does not originate or circulate any of the war rumors now so prevalent in Europe. They all come from Germany. The French newspapers refer to them contemptuously, and declare them to be unfounded. The nation desires peace so earnestly that no credit is given to anything indicating that peace may soon give way to war. The matter of the Prussian note to Belgium ignored as far as possible in France. The French cause is imperiled by the agitation of war rumors, and Paris is [illegible] to have any such rumors flying about as have been flying about of late. Hence the [illegible] is no apparent pretext for hostilities, but with the desire present there is seldom any necessity to wait long for a pretext. While there may not be any immediate cause for the alarm recently felt very generally on the continent, it seems scarcely possible that the great contest will be long delayed. It may come at any moment. The position of the two nations is like two wild beasts glaring at each other, or two men standing each with a pistol loaded and cocked in his hand. The most trivial circumstance may develop hostile and fatal action. While such action may be delayed for sometime, it must come before a general disarming and disbanding of the military organizations can take place. When it does come it will be terrible beyond all precedent, and the most that can be hoped for is that it may be delayed until after the settlement and healing of ecclesiastical troubles in Germany so that the world may be spared the additional horrors which always attend a war in which religious questions figure prominently. —Chicago Times.

The School Question.

The Roman Catholics in many parts of the land are agitating the school question. Universal knowledge does not please them. They are great lovers of special knowledge, knowledge of Catholic history, Catholic literature, Catholic doctrine. They wish their part of the school tax to be turned over to Catholic guardians that it may be exhausted in filling young heads with the Catholic part of the world's facts and fancies.

That any state can become so corrupt as to aid thus a sectarian education, is hardly credible. The state deals in universal facts, such as arithmetic, grammar, reading, writing, geography, and so on, and can no more levy a tax for teaching church ideas, than it can levy a tax to hold church festivals, or foot the bills of a sewing society. The special work of churches must be done by the churches, for the state does not deal with men as Presbyterians, or Unitarians, or Catholics, but as human beings, and hence in its school it teaches universal ideas. If the Catholics do not like to have their children read the world's history, they should have been more careful about the kind of facts they put in those books. If the history of the infallible popes is not a kind of reading that promotes Romanism, the United States cannot help that. The article in a late "Christian Union" about a certain martyr is not fitted to kindle any new zeal over Presbyterianism, but the government cannot make any arrangement by which school children may be kept in ignorance of that bad chapter. All the state can do is to educate its youth so that they can read and write and thus escape the manipulations of bad men, and may become not only voting beings but thinking beings. If in getting such an education the youth should find out what a hard set their Catholic and Protestant ancestors were, and what follies they were guilty of in the name of God, the blame should fall far back upon those who were guilty of the follies and crimes.

It is possible the common school education does not do the most for the churches. Professor Patton confesses the public education to be an enemy of true religion, in that it breaks up the Calvinistic schools and places the truths of the world above the truths of Christianity. But the state is not attempting to make Christians, but good citizens, and hence the church must add its peculiar instruction to that of the public school.

This seems to us plain, but it is greatly to be feared that votes will be bought here and there until some of these states based upon simple human truths will become the teachers of Roman Catholic notions, and thus leave behind them the fundamental law of their life.—Chicago Alliance.

The Rest.

One of the confident assurances of the Scriptures is, that God has in reservation a rest for his people. This rest has been a subject of anxious waiting and longing desire through the ages agone. Weary and sad ones have been cheered and strengthened by the divine promises of rest in the life to come. Prophets and kings, apostles and martyrs have alike shared in this blissful experience. The testimony of "Paul the aged" aptly illustrates the splendid application to Christian experience, of which this subject is capable; and which is so clearly intimated in the gospel. His active and useful life was nearly ended. With great diligence and unfailing fidelity had he devoted the best years of his life to the onerous duties of an evangelist. If such a thing were possible, surely Paul had literally earned a heavenly crown and a heavenly rest. "I have fought a good fight" he says, as he goes down into the "valley and shadow" of the enemies' land; "I have kept the faith," he continues, as he glances back to the scene of many a hard fought battle for the truth and right. "Henceforth (this is the keynote of the passage) there is laid up for me a crown of life, which the Lord the righteous Judge shall give me at that day; and not to me only, but to all them also who love his appearing." There are no regrets or repining at the hard lot to which the apostle had been appointed in life. The battle was over—the work was done;—now comes the rest and victory. The glory of the future so perfectly eclipsed the sadness of the past, that the triumphing martyr deigns to give his life of work and trial only a mere mention, while his soul seems to feel and feast on the untold raptures of the brilliant beyond.

It is sometimes supposed that the heavenly world is to be a place of entire cessation from all species of work. There will be something to do even in heaven, for it is with this view that [illegible] to think that eternity is to be spent in perfect and undisturbed indolence. We rejoice to believe that it is not true. And yet the employment of the heavenly state, beyond the resurrection, will be tireless and restful. Immortality will not be subject to fatigue. It will be a state of restful labor. God led Israel by a remarkable series of gracious interpositions into Canaan, the reputed land of rest. But this was only typical and imperfect. The true rest is yet to come. Joshua, though he led Israel across the Jordan and established the chosen people in the land of promise; was not permitted to give perfect rest; it was left for Jesus, the antitypical Joshua, to lead true Israel across the Jordan of judgment into the eternal land of promise, and to this "rest that remains for the people of God." This rest comes when the redeemed hosts cross over. Then shall Israel come to Zion with songs and joy.

Preach Christ.

Our readers need only examine how we preach Christ to form an idea how far we are evangelical. Shall we glory in the beauty of our composition, in the flowers of rhetoric, in the force of oratory, in the harmony of periods, and leave the cross out as unfashionable? Thus did not Paul. Shall we glory in the teachings—in the example of Christ—and not in the cross of Christ also? So did not Paul. Seat he is going into Greece, the eye of the world, and what did he do? "I determined not to know anything among you, but Jesus Christ and him crucified." He is going to Rome, the imperial city—among sages, generals, poets, legislators and statesmen. Will he not change the theme? Will he not there talk of the Supreme being, eternal providence, destiny, etc.? No. "I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ, for it is the power of God unto salvation, to every one that believeth, to the Jew first and also to the Gentile." And when he heard that the Galatians were about to conceal the cross, O, what were his feelings! They were about to blot the sun out of the firmament, and what would they have left but darkness, desolation, and death! The cross of Christ is the grand luminary of the Gospel system, from which all its parts derive light, life, and influence. All else is darkness; and God forbid that we should glory, on earth or in heaven, in life, or in death, save in Christ our crucified Lord! —Robert Newton

War and the Church.

John G. Whittier, in a recent letter says: It is cheering to note the general favor with which the plan of arbitration has been received by statesmen and civilians in this country and Europe; but there are other signs of the times well calculated to occasion solicitude on the part of every lover of peace. The menace of danger seems to come from the professed church of Christ. At this moment the peace of all Europe is threatened by the secret plots and monstrous public pretensions of ecclesiasticism. If war comes in consequence, if the fairest harvest fields of the world are made the arena of battle, men who claim to be especially the priests and representatives of the gospel of peace will be held responsible. Woe to that church which, for the sake of power and dogma, breaks the truce of God among the nations, makes its missionaries assassins, and mingles blood with its wine of sacrament. It is high time that the Christian church awakens to a full sense of its responsibility. If after the dreadful experience of 1800 years, it fails to perceive the necessity of shaking itself free of the barbarism of war, it has equal claim upon the world's respect and confidence. Its leaves are not for the healing of the nations.

The Church Surrendering.

T. De Witt Talmage, speaking of the present position of the churches, says:—"I simply state a fact when I say that in many places the church is surrendering and the world is conquering. When there is one man brought into the kingdom (?) of God through Christian instrumentality, there are ten men dragged down by dissipations. Fifty grog shops are built to one church established. Literary journals in different parts of the country are filled with scum, dandruff, and slang controlled by the very scullions of society, depraving everything they put their hands on. Three hundred and ten newspapers, and journals, and magazines in New York, and more than two hundred of them depraving to the public taste, if not positively inimical to our holy Christianity.

Look abroad and see the surrender. Look at the [illegible] of what pretend to be Christian churches to Spiritualism and Unitarianism, and the forms of devilism? Is Satan afraid in his pulpit and say that sermon you be hers, again you will be took do not the tight kid gloves of the Christian, diamonds bursting through, go on to their foreheads in humiliation?"

Luther's Views.

In commenting in Eccl. ix. 5—"the dead know not anything"—Luther uses the following language:

"St. Jerom may quite ingeniously applies this passage to the dead in purgatory; for Solomon here indicates that the dead are sleeping; and I believe that this is one of the clearest passages against those who talk much about what the dead and deceased are doing, and teach others to call upon the saints, and about purgatory; whereas God has not revealed anything more about what the dead and deceased are doing, than we find in his Word."

Upon verse 10, of this chapter, which declares that "there is no work nor device, nor knowledge nor wisdom, in the grave (sheol) whither thou goest," he thus remarks:—

"This passage also [illegible] to regard to the dead, that they sleep. The Holy Spirit has not revealed, in the Scriptures, what the deceased are now doing, but teaches clearly that we shall be raised from the dead. The deceased sleep neither days nor years. Hell, Scripture call that secret and hidden place, which is outside of this natural life, years, days, hours, time, whither the soul goes, which we cannot comprehend with our reason. But where and what that is, is not revealed, and nobody therefore can know anything about it; for the Scriptures say nothing about it until God raises the dead and brings everything to light.

The Pope.

Pope Pius IX celebrated on Thursday, May 13, his eighty-third birthday, and if he lives until the 17th of June next, he will have completed the twenty-ninth year of his pontificate. Other Popes have lived to a greater age than the present head of the Catholic Church, twelve of them having reached eighty-four, but the number of years of his pontificate surpasses that of any of his predecessors, even that of St. Peter, to whom tradition assigns twenty-five years' rule of the church. The present Pope was born May 13, 1792, received holy orders in 1818, was made an Archbishop in 1827, and a Cardinal in 1840, and on June 17, 1846, after the death of Gregory XVI., he was chosen Pope, being proclaimed the next day. There were then in the Sacred College sixty-one Cardinals, only eight of whom are now living, and but one of them, the Archbishop of Fermo, is older than the Pope, he being four weeks the senior. Pius IX., during his reign, has created ninety-nine Cardinals, of whom fifty have since died, and the College now numbers fifty-seven.

In a sermon delivered last Sunday, a prominent Congregational minister of New York city said that the children of the foreign-born inhabitants of this country—Irish, Scotch, Italian, French, Norwegian, German and so on—enter the public schools as representatives of these and all the nationalities which contribute to the composite population of the United States, and that they come out of them, at the close of their term of study, as Americans. This is, to a great extent, true, and it is one of the strongest arguments not only in favor of the system, but in favor of holding it to strictly American standards. The common schools of the country might not inaptly be termed manufactories of American citizens, and as such they are to be jealously guarded against all encroachments. In this spirit were certain resolutions adopted a few days ago by the Methodist Episcopal Preachers' Association of New York, against the proposal of the Roman Catholics to incorporate their parochial schools, under certain conditions, with the public schools. The preachers say that "while the common school system is not the ideal best that various religious bodies may severally imagine, it is, beyond comparison, the best that can be imagined under existing circumstances," because, among other reasons, it assures "homogenity and patriotic national spirit to the American Republic of the future." They therefore regard this proposal of the Roman Catholic as "insidiously dangerous to the liberties and welfare of the commonwealth."—Indianapolis Journal.

General Items.

The [illegible] worm that appeared in many of the fields of Kendall county, Illinois. It is difficult to state what the damage will amount to.

A steer jumped from the rear window of a car on the Minneapolis and St. Louis road, near Minneapolis, on Saturday evening, and was killed.

Thousands of trees have been planted in and around Kiesota, Minn., this spring, and that hitherto almost bare prairie will soon present the appearance of a grove.

Wisconsin is suffering from the ravages of the chinch-bug in the wheat fields. In Dane county, and in the western part of the state in particular, the bug has assumed complete control of wheat fields, and has commenced its work of destruction at the roots of the grain. Many farmers have plowed up their wheat and have planted corn instead.

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the church, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a yearly burial of the Church in penitence, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor will not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a ground of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Letters to a London Minister.

JOHN STUART MILL ON IMMORTALITY.

MY DEAR FRIEND:—In my last letter I stated that there was upon the part of man a conception of and a desire for immortality such as did not exist in any degree among the lower creatures, and this was so general and so spontaneous as to justify us in calling it an instinct. The history of man as a religious animal justifies me in saying this. In the absence of what I consider the scriptural doctrine of a future eternal life, as resulting from resurrection, man, left to himself, invented the theory of the immortality of the soul, and so satisfied, at least partially, in his own way, his desire for an after-existence. Even if we should suppose that his ideas of after-life were derived from an original tradition from the Creator, dimmed and distorted more or less by the corrupt channel through which it was transmitted, this would not much, if at all, abate the force of the very common belief in the idea. That which was held fast amid darkness and ignorance, and in spite of all outward appearance that death was to man what it was believed to be to all beside, the final close of existence, could only have been thus held fast because it was in truth an idea suited to the natural constitution of man. I then reckon the desire for immortality among the natural impulses, propensities, and instincts of man, and will consider what its existence among those instincts leads us to infer. I will first speak of what it seems with certainty to lead to, and then what it may lead us to consider as possible or probable.

The existence of this instinct after immortality in the human heart seems beyond any question to establish this, viz., that man, as he was created and made, was intended to live forever. When we find it to be the general rule that every natural instinct exists for a good end, and has a corresponding provision in nature for its gratification, we can not reasonably suppose that an instinct of so high a nature as this was planted in the heart of man unless it was intended to find its corresponding provision, and its only corresponding provision is immortality. Feeling, as he could not help feeling as a deep student of nature and its ways, the power of the general inference from an instinct to its gratification, and yet unwilling to go the apparent length to which the inference would lead, Mill attempts to show that human instinct after life finds its sufficient answer in the possession of that life which man now has. "What is called the desire of eternal life," he says, "is simply the desire of life; and does there not exist that which this desire calls for? Is there not life? And is not this instinct, if it be an instinct, gratified by the possession and preservation of life?" (P. 203.)

To suppose the yearning after immortality to find any suitable gratification in the possession of life for three score years and ten, or for as great a length of time as the antediluvians were possessed of, is a vain idea. The whole history of the human mind on this question in the history of its dissatisfaction with the possession of life only for a time. That which does not satisfy the instinct cannot with any propriety be called its suitable gratification. "Thus the desire for food is only met by the supply of food of a kind and quantity sufficient to keep man alive. The supply of food in such insufficient quantities, or such unsuitable quality as would merely protract for a little while a miserable existence would only be called the mockery, not the gratification, of the instinct of hunger. And in the very same way the instinct after eternal life met with the gift of life for any limited period would be the mockery of the instinct, not the answer to it. And we therefore lay it down as the undoubted conclusion of our reason, that the existence of the instinct after immortality in the human breast proves that man was originally made to live for ever.

But is this all? Does it prove no more than this? Does it not also establish with an equal force that man will live for ever? Of what use would anything less than this be to us?

Unsatisfactory as anything less than this would be to man, still we are compelled to say that the only thing which the instinct after immortality proves is that man was originally made to live for ever; but not that he will live for ever. For we must take all the facts of the case into our consideration. One of those great prominent facts is that all men die. Now let us take what different views we please of death, whether as the total or partial cessation of our life, there is no doubt that the general instinct of man turns strongly and with the utmost repugnance away from this death. Familiar as it is to us, visiting as it has every past generation, sure to visit every one of ourselves some day or other, all this familiarity has not removed or abated in the smallest measure our intense instinct against death. We shun it, we abhor it; nothing but terrible suffering ever makes us wish for it.

Now here to the thoughtful mind is a very strange condition of things. Here is an apparent, or rather an undoubted, conflict of instinct with fact. Man instinctively yearns after immortality; man instinctively turns away from death: and yet death inevitably comes to man! There is, in this whole history of our longing and our aversion and our actual condition, one of the strangest, if not the very strangest of problems that meets us all as we reflect upon ourselves. It points strongly to something wrong,—to something grievously out of place,—to something in a great and once perfect machinery out of its order.

But one thing this great fact of death proves beyond question is, that the great instinct after life eternal in the future does not give us any certainty that we will ever obtain it in any way. If the instinct leads us to suppose it will, the fact that our instinct against death is never gratified, shows us that here, for whatever reason, we cannot trust our instinct. This anomaly in the case of man and his instinct—an anomaly nowhere found in the history of the lower creation—would seem to point to this inevitable conclusion, that in regard to man there has been some departure from the original constitution of things, and that the only thing we can with certainty say is, that man was at first made for immortality, but that all his present yearning after it can prove is, that he may be regretting and pining for that which, so far as nature can tell him, he may have lost forever.

But is there not in the continued possession of this instinct after life ground at least for hope that it may be in some way gratified? Death may prove that there has been a loss, more or less, of that for which man at first was made; but may it not be permitted to hope that that which we desire so strongly may be restored to us? I suppose that its possession may reasonably lead to such a hope as this; but I doubt very much that our hope could justly be one of any strength. It would seem all to depend upon the continued feelings towards man of the Being who had first given him existence, and the voice of nature here would speak in very uncertain tones.

The faintness of the hope that reason permits us here to have of immortality from our desire of it will be further seen from another consideration which must not be lost sight of in this question. The desire for immortality is sufficiently general and sufficiently spontaneous as to rank it among human instincts; but it is certainly also the case that the desire for immortality is by no means an universal wish. Account for it how we will, there is among very large classes of men a positive desire for its opposite, viz., annihilation. The Buddhist religion embraces a greater number of votaries than either Christianity or Mohammedanism does, and it holds out as the highest prize for virtue in this world the prospect of ultimate annihilation in the next.

It may be said that the desire for annihilation exists only in debased and grovelling minds. To a very considerable extent, no doubt, this is true. We have no doubt that as a general rule, the higher and purer the order of mind the more does it stretch forward to the grand idea of immortality. But we cannot see that this weighs much in the present argument. It remains a fact that a very large proportion of mankind have come, from whatever reason, to regard annihilation as the most cherished of their ideas. This is a very serious set off against the instinct on the part of others for immortality.

But it is a very great mistake to suppose that it is only the debased and the grovelling to whom annihilation appears to be a boon. The writer who has suggested to us several of our present thoughts considers the desire to be one cherished by "philosophers" rather than by "the common order of mankind." (P. 122.) The history of his own mind, as presented to us in his "Essays," shows us this. It is a sad history. It shows us the miserable uncertainty and veering to the most opposite points of the compass of the very noblest human mind, when it has cast off its faith in the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ. For this purpose, as well as for its bearing on the immediate point before us, I will present a brief view of the opposite aspects of John Stuart Mill's mind towards the grand subject of man's immortality.

Take him in one mood. The prospect, however faint, of immortality is his only stay. Rejecting the ordinary Platonic arguments in favor of it as unworthy of serious refutation, and finding no acceptance with reasonable men,—rejecting the argument in favor of it arising from the instinct after it in the human breast,—as a matter of course, rejecting the testimony for it in the Christian revelation,—holding that for this, the grandest idea of humanity, there is no proof whatsoever, either in nature or revelation,—he yet, in one of his moods, clings to it fondly and desperately as a hope. Of this hope he speaks in the following touching way: "It's beautiful effect," he says, "is far from trifling. It makes life and human nature a far greater thing to the feeling, and gives greater strength, as well as greater solemnity, to all the sentiments which are awakened in us by our fellow creatures and by mankind at large. It allays the sense of that irony of nature which is so painfully felt when we see the exertions and sacrifices of a life culminating in the formation of a wise and noble mind, only to disappear from the world when the time has arrived at which the world seems about to begin reaping the benefit of it. The truth that life is short and art is long is from of old one of the most discouraging parts of our condition; this hope admits the possibility that the art employed in improving and beautifying the soul itself may avail for good in some other life, even when seemingly useless for this. But the benefit consists less in the presence of any specific hope than in the enlargement of the general scale of the feelings; the loftier aspirations being no longer in the same degree checked and kept down by a sense of the insignificance of human life,—by the dissatisfied feeling of not worth while." (Pages 249-50).

Such is our author in one mood of his mind. It is his noblest mood, we feel; but still it is only one mood of a variable mind. For John Stuart Mill in one funny pleading for the bare hope of immortality as essential to sustain the efforts of man after excellence, we have him in another calling upon annihilation as the sorely-needed relief from the burden of existence. He supposes that after periods of existence of various lengths such a desire would come to all men. They would have had enough of existence, and would gladly lie down and take an eternal rest. The mere cessation of existence, he supposes, would be to them no evil, all its evil consisting merely in the illusion of the imagination of the living when they contemplate it at a distance. The one and only calamity which he will allow to belong to the theory of annihilation is that it shuts out all hope of reunion in life with those whom we loved here. This loss, he says, "is neither to be denied nor extenuated." (Pp. 119—121.)

Mill is anything but singular in the view that annihilation is to be regarded as a blessing. The Buddhist creed, embracing a greater number of mankind than any other faith, proposes it as the reward for virtue. And we thus see the real aspect of the human mind towards this whole question of immortality. It is far indeed from being universally believed in, or universally regarded as a blessing. Some ardently desire it; some as earnestly hate it. Some believe it; others reject it. If we were to give to human feelings a decisive voice in this great question—such a voice as they would give them who would from man's hope for immortality argue that immortality awaits him,—we would, it rather seems, as the most legitimate conclusion, suppose that immortality was the destiny of some, and annihilation of others. This, we may remark, was anything but an uncommon idea among the heathen. We have it, for example, fully and clearly expressed in an address of Titus to the Roman soldiers at the siege of Jerusalem, as recorded by Josephus.

The conclusion we would put to our readers, as that which should be fairly and legitimately arrived at, is, that this whole question is one for Revelation to decide. Such is the conclusion to which the acute mind of Mill led him after all his research. He says, "All inference and legitimately be drawn from these premises in favor of a future life." And his answer is, "It seems to me, apart from positive revelation, none at all." (P. 208.)

For nature seems here to speak not merely with various, but with inconsistent and contradictory voices as well. We have going forth from the human heart the longing for immortality, and longing for its exactly opposite, and these two opposing emotions expressed in every variety of phrase. To decide which is true, or whether there may not be in both, views their respective element of truth, appears to us to be just one of those great questions which we should expect to be answered for us in the case of a revelation from God. And that which we hold to be the most probable and reasonable conclusion from the whole judicial argument of the human mind in its contemplation of the subject, viz., immortality for some and not for others, is exactly what the Scriptures tell us we read it, teaches on its every page. Immortality as the issue of patient continuance in well-doing, not to be attained in any other way, and therefore not to be attained by all. (Rom. ii. 7.)

In concluding our few remarks upon this grand question of immortality and eternal life, we would wish to make a few remarks upon one very material difference between the view which is taken of it in God's Revelation and that in which it is regarded by a very large section of mankind.

Eternal life or immortality throughout Scripture is regarded as being essentially a blessing. It is put before the mind as the prize, the possession of which will repay a thousand fold every sacrifice we can make for it during our present life. In contrast with this a very large section of mankind regard immortality as a curse, and annihilation as a blessing. Whence does this contrariety of view arise?

The Buddhist and the philosopher regard immortality from the aspect of this present life. This present life, from various reasons, they regard as a burden. Hence eternal life, supposing it to be of a similar nature with the life here passed, they would regard, altogether intolerable because it was to continue for ever.

But Scripture, in speaking of eternal life and immortality, does not speak of it in this light at all. Life, as Scripture speaks of it, is life as it comes from God, not as it has been altered, lowered, shuttered by human sin. Scripture never contemplates life as it comes from the Source of life as anything but joy. Nature, as we view it, presents to us all the lower creatures as possessed of a life of enjoyment. She presents to us one exception—a great one—our own race. Why there should be this exception she cannot tell us, but Scripture does.

Once, our fables tell us, there was not this one exception which so much confounds and perplexes our minds. The "very good" which was said of every order as it came into being did not cease to be said of man when he walked forth upon the earth its lord and master. (Gen. i. 31.) Rather, the noblest in intellect and power was the highest in enjoyment. This highest order of creature fell from his first estate, and hence his subsequent life has been such as it is. But this one exception was not to be perpetuated.

Nature has now and then among its lower classes a lusus, a monster. We gaze at them in wonder in our anatomical collections and museums. The calf with five legs or two heads astonishes us. Probably these monstrous productions are meant to show us how readily, without some controlling power, the whole animal world might become one great collection of horrible, misshapen figures, inspiring disgust in the beholder. But we see that invariably death steps in and prevents the propagation of such monstrosity. What is thus seen in the lower creatures is seen also in God's dealings with man. The Scriptural doctrine of the destruction of sinners comes in as the exact parallel. Death is to remove the monsters of the higher order as it removes those of the lower order, and to leave in life only those which are beautiful, graceful and rejoicing. And it is therefore that eternal life is never contemplated in Scripture in any other light than as a thing of blessing. God's highest boon and blessing is enunciated in the simple expression, "eternal life," because it is life as all life comes from a good Creator, accompanied with all joy suitable to the capacity of the creature. God knows of no eternal life which is not also eternal blessedness.—Eleutheros in Rainbow.

The Jews and the Near Coming.

From the same authorities that teach me to believe that Christ will personally come again, I learn that the Jews as a distinct people will then be in existence, and that this keeping of them as a distinct people till then is for some special and important purpose to which there is frequent, distinct and plentiful reference in the prophecies. On this subject I do not "Judaize" any more than "Moses, the man of God," David, the man "after God's own heart," Isaiah, hallowed from the womb of heaven, Jeremiah, into whose mouth God said he had put his own words, Daniel, the "man greatly beloved" of heaven, Jesus, who is "God over all, blessed forever," Paul, the unsurpassed apostle, and John, "that holy disciple whom Jesus loved." If receiving the words of these holy teachers of the race taken in their literal grammatical sense, and if believing, holding and teaching what those words must teach to those who have no theories to maintain or pre-judgments to consult, is "Judaizing," then I am a Judaizer, but only then. If God has cast off the Jew finally and forever, and will never again send out to him any providential discriminations or proposals, far be it from me to find fault with him. He is the Lord, and doeth whatsoever he pleases; and blessed be his name forever and ever! But when he tells me over and over in his unfailing word, that he is not yet done with the seed of Abraham's loins; that in the dispensations to come he will be merciful to their unrighteousness "for the father's sakes," may, graft in again those same "natural branches" which because of unbelief were broken off to reclaim in blindness till "there shall come out of Zion the Deliverer, and shall turn away ungodliness from Jacob;" and that this is his covenant unto them, and one which as "faithful repentance," what am I, that I should interpose my prejudices, pride of opinion, fears of being called a hobby-rider, or anything else, to set aside what he has been pleased to tell me he intends to do with the Jewish race hereafter? Shall I be his meddler in every other case, and yet turn dictator to my God, or repudiator of his literal word, so soon as it comes to the matter of having to do again specially and peculiarly with the Jew? Willingly would I "cast away forever" any more "Jewish fable," provided I be not asked to cast away the word of my God, which cannot pass away, but abideth firmer than the mountains."

Neither am I reduced to the absurdity to which some of my brethren have ventured to conclude and assert, when I with all say "very emphatically" that those who suppose the Jews must be restored, re-nationalized and universally converted before Christ can or will come again, are resting upon what has no shadow of foundation in the Scriptures of truth. We have only to note the important patristic rule, so necessary to the right interpretation of God's word, in order to see that there is no inconsistency whatever in the two propositions. The rule is, "Distinguish the times, and the Scriptures will harmonize,"—parcel out the distinct things predicted into their right chronological relations and places, and everything comes into full and literal position in the grand scheme of God.

It cannot be too deeply impressed upon anyone's mind and heart, that there is nothing whatever in the prophecies of God, the fulfillment of which is to be placed between us and the coming again of the Lord Jesus. The signs may deepen and grow in intensity, but there is not one that is not already here and fulfilled to an extent putting it out of the power of any man, from God's word to say, that Christ may not come this very year 1875. But the coming of Christ does not instantly close up everything on earth, and suddenly end all its history! The coming is itself a complex event, stretching through various administrations and acts. The prophecies which foretold Christ's first coming can by no possibility be all referred to one precise day, hour, year, or scene, but distributes themselves over a period of more than thirty years. Christ came when he was born at Bethlehem; he came when called out of Egypt; he came when John presented him to the people as the Messiah; he came, when he announced himself at Nazareth; he came when he rode into Jerusalem on the ass; he came when he reappeared after his resurrection. All these separate presentations at different dates and places are comprehended under what the prophets, and we still, denote both separately and together by the general expression of his Coming. And as I am assured that it will be in the fulfillment of the several predictions of his still future Coming. It is not a singular and simple thing, all accomplished in a moment of time, but necessarily distributes itself over a variety of scenes, events and manifestations. We can by no manner of means do justice to the language of inspiration, and yet interpret all that is said of the second advent of one and the same thing in one and the same instant of time. Christ cannot come "as a thief in the night," and at the same time openly displayed in the clouds of heaven with "every eye" gazing upon him. It is not in the nature of things that his coming for his saints—the gathering of them up from their graves and fields and beds—should be identical in time and character with his coming "with his saints to execute judgment." The precise coming spoken of in the epistles to the seven churches, or that referred to in Rev. xvi. 15, cannot possibly be the same portrayed in Rev. xix. 11-16. The Scriptures also distinguish between a simple parousia or presence, and his Epiphaneia or appearing, manifestation. There may be parousia without Epiphaneia, though an Epiphaneia always implies presence, but distinguishes that presence as apparent, manifest, visible. And the chart of the whole matter which God has in mercy given us in the book of the Apocalypse, demonstrates that there are many and various events, phases, manifestations, and administrations, running through years and years, all of which belong to the one predicted future forthcoming of our Lord in the setting up of his eternal empire upon the regenerated earth, all of which are designated, sometimes separately and sometimes together, by the one wide expression of his coming. In that same chart we also find at what point in his series of transactions it is that the Jews again come forward as a distinct people. It is not before Christ is present at all, or while the present church period lasts, but after the church period has ended, and after some of the greatest acts of the judgment times have already been transacted. See the latter portions of Rev. xvii and xix.

And that same Paul, who tell us of a fulfillment and ending of the times of the Gentiles, to be followed by the receiving again of that natural seed of Abraham, so diminished, and broken off, and given up to judicial blindness during all this dispensation, also tells us something about the when and the how this reception, and grafting in again, and recovery from their blindness and divination, is to take place. As the ancient prophets, and Christ himself also, have indicated, it is to be by the miraculous and personal manifestation of Christ in his glory. It was so that Paul was converted; and he specifically expects that he was in this like an untimely child—one "born before the time"—as the clear meaning of the words is. How born before the time? Many conversions were occurring in his day and before; but his was the only one wrought by the miraculous personal manifestation of the glorified Jesus. And his conversion in this manner having been before the time, the inevitable implication is that there is a due time when conversions after this manner will be accomplished on a large scale. Nay, he distinctly tells us that his peculiar and undue conversion after this manner was specially intended to show how the thing was afterward in the due time to be. His words are: "For this purpose I had mercy shown me, that in me (in my case) first Christ might show forth all that long-suffering, for an example of those who should (in the future) believe on him to life eternal." 1 Tim. i. 16. I give the exact rendering of the original. Paul was not the "first" convert, either in time of dignity; but he was the "first" convert by the personal appearance of the glorified Savior. His conversion is not a pattern, example, type, of Christian conversions in general, either of his own times or since. Who was ever converted after the style and facts in St. Paul's case. To this day that conversion stands out as something unique and peculiarly distinct from all others. And yet it was a pattern case occurring before the time, according to which there are to be multitudes when the due time comes. That due time for conversions of mad and murderous Jews by the personal manifestation of Christ, is the time appointed for his personal manifestation, and cannot possibly be any other time. Not before Christ's coming, then, but in some period of his manifestations and administrations in the ongoing series of events denoted by the general and comprehensive phrase of his coming, are the predictions of the conversion and grafting in again of the now blinded "natural branches" of Israel's stock to take place. It may be "fable" to some people; but it was not "fable" to Paul, nor Christ, nor to the heavenly powers whence came the Apocalypse, nor to the ancient prophets. I cannot, therefore, agree to cast it away as a fable, because some of my advent friends choose to abandon the principles of interpretation which they deem sufficient in other instances, in order to eliminate from God's plans and purposes what he has so plainly told us is embraced in them. There were those of old who lost their high calling by their boastful confidence against the bringing in of the Gentiles, and there are those now who need to look well to their ground lest by their boastful confidence against the Jews they be found trampling God's word under their feet. At any rate their damaging mistakes put forth with equal confidence respecting the time of the blessed coming, ought to teach them a little modesty as to how they write down Christ's ministers as hobby-riders and teachers of Jewish fables for presuming to believe that God means what he says with regard to the Jews as a race, just the same as when he tells us of the coming again of his Son, the resurrection of the dead, and the new heavens and new earth. Having been proved dreadfully mistaken in some of their main points of prophetic interpretation, they are just as likely to be as far wrong on "the Jew question" also, notwithstanding their confidence, and their impatience with students of the divine word just as honest, and as competent, and as anxious to get at and follow the pure truth of God, as any of themselves.—Dr. Seiss.

Ignorance of Scripture.

The ignorance of people of supposed culture of the most familiar passages of the Bible is well exhibited by the following from the Burlington "Hawkeye:" "There are always two sides to a question, and sometimes more," was the remark made by a man the other day, as he stepped into the court room during recess, and found the entire counsel in the Curtz will case wrangling over the Lord's Prayer. They each gave a different version of it, and finally referred it to the judge, who in turn shifted the responsibility to the clerk, who went down stairs and got a Bible, and after looking all through the Old Testament for it, gave it up and called in a Sunday School scholar who repeated it as it should be, and developed the startling fact that of the twelve or fifteen lawyers who had entered into the controversy, every one of them had been in the wrong.

—On the Public School question aptly says the "Churchman:" "We can afford to give our Ultramontanes a whole college of cardinals, red hats and stockings; acres on Fifth Avenue; nay, throw in a dozen ritualistic churches, rectors, acolytes and all; but this one school grant—never!"

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....June 23, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ Our meetings in Goodland last Sunday were very interesting, and will prove to be of lasting benefit to the truth. The congregations were larger than ever before. A goodly number were convinced of the truth and will, we trust, obey the Gospel. We have not time to say more this week, as we are now going to press.

☞ We have received the first number of the "National Protestant," a new paper published in New York City, 67 Liberty St., at one dollar a year. It is a large quarto of sixteen pages, and its object is to maintain the position of "a high-toned, persistent, yet consistent anti-Roman-Catholic Journal." The crusade of Roman priests against our common school system, receives considerable attention in the first number. A more formidable crusade against human rights, and republican institutions, is contemplated by the hierarchy of Rome. Hence the publishers lift up this standard against this enemy that is now coming in like a flood. We think the publication of this serial timely, and wish it success, as our liberty to read the Scriptures, worship God, and proclaim our convictions of truth, depends upon the maintenance of our civil freedom.

Speculations.

In this number we publish an article from brother A. G. Shockey, upon the final salvation of the race. The arguments presented are those which have been presented over and over again by the Universalists. It appears strange to us that any Bible student should be led away from the plainest statements of the Holy Scriptures into the vagaries of the final salvation of the most hardened and prodigate characters. Brother Shockey admits that the penalty for sin is literal death, and that the wicked have fallen under God's great displeasure, but he has a loop-hole in some far away age, beyond the one thousand years for these men to come in. We can stretch our faith through the millenium, and plant our feet on the new earth beyond, but we see no hope for those who have trodden under foot the blood of the covenant and whose names are not found written in the book of life, but who are to be cast into the lake of fire which is the second death. The death to be destroyed is the Adam-death, but no account is given about a resurrection from the second death, which is eternal. If we destroy the second death we bring back

1. The Beast and False Prophet.—(Rev. xix.)
2. The Dragon.—(Rev. xx.)
3. The Grave.—(Rev. xx.)
4. Death.—(Rev. xx.)
5. "And whosever was not found written in the book of life." But who would try to bring all these characters back again and re-enact the awful scenes through which the world has passed?

All these different characters are represented as being cast into the lake of fire which seems to be a symbol of final and complete destruction. Now any argument that will release the wicked will also bring back the dragon and the beast, the grave and death. Will dead men be raised out of the new earth? Will sinners be put on trial in the new earth? It seems incredible. After the one thousand years, we have the final judgment and the destruction of all evil, then the new and perfect state. Those texts, therefore, which allude to all nations and families as being blest, must find their fulfillment in the Millenial Day of Christ's Reign.

To offer hope, therefore, to wicked men in this life, that in some far distant age, after the one thousand years, they will be made holy and happy is to preach a gospel unknown to Christ and his apostles. We cannot reconcile such a theory with the many earnest appeals of our Lord. Neither can we limit the awful threatenings of God to a mere temporal abode in the grave, with the added assurance, that they shall all come to the city in safety, after having had another trial. Such reasoning may do for speculation but it must beget in men a spirit of indifference as to an immediate preparation for eternal life.

The theory referred to converts the tares into wheat after they have been bound in bundles and burned; it makes the bad fish, in the net, into good ones, after they have been thrown away; it makes the goats into sheep after having been driven to the left hand. In short, it converts wicked men and demons into saints after the judgments of God have destroyed them from the earth.

The whole setting of divine teaching seems to be against this theory, and we earnestly hope that our brethren will preach to sinners that NOW is the accepted time. Did Christ or his apostles ever preach to ungodly men that they would ultimately come in even though they rejected Christ now? If we follow their example our course will be approved of heaven.

All Nations.

The phrase "all nations" is of frequent occurrence in the Holy Scriptures. It is stated in many passages that God will bless all the nations of the earth, etc. Statements like this have led some to the conclusion that all men will be saved. Those who take this view seem to confound the idea of national blessings with personal salvation, which will not bear the light of candid criticism. The Bible very frequently speaks about all nations being destroyed, wasted, scattered, rooted up, etc. But does any one infer that because a nation as such has been destroyed that therefore every individual is destroyed? Certainly not. Now if the destruction of a nation does not destroy each and every person composing it, then is it good reasoning to claim that every individual will be saved in an eternal state because all nations are to be blest? To us this reasoning is most fallacious. In Isaiah it is said: "Of a truth, Lord, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the nations and their countries." Again, in Zechariah it is stated, "And it shall come to pass in that day that I will seek to destroy all the nations that come against Jerusalem." If the reader will take the trouble to read the context of these two quotations he will find that all the persons comprising the nations were not destroyed. It follows, therefore that a nation as such may be destroyed and yet many of the persons composing the nation survive.

The same is true of national blessings. Israel, as a nation, was saved from Egypt, and yet all the original persons composing the nation were destroyed except two. We claim, therefore, that it is most triumphantly established that a nation or all nations may be blessed in Abraham, but this will in no way prove the personal salvation of each individual. A little discrimination on this point would save much confusion in the study of the sacred Word.

One class are trying to prove that probation will entirely cease, when our Lord comes, and they base their argument upon those texts which refer to the destruction of the nations at that time. But we have seen that man's personal destiny is not involved necessarily with the breaking up of a national government. On the other hand another class are to prove the personal and eternal salvation of all men because God is to bless all nations. This view is just as unscriptural as the other. They are the two extremes which should be avoided by all Bible men. Let God's Word explain itself and all is plain. Let no one confound national salvation or destruction with personal salvation or destruction. Then we shall see divine harmony in the oracles of our Father which lead to life evermore.

The Generations and Prophetical Periods.

There is no question, pressing itself upon the public mind for attention, entitled to more careful consideration than the political one known as "The Eastern Question." The Moslem and his end is a subject of far more than ordinary interest, not only to the student of prophecy, but also to the diplomatist, who anxiously endeavors to forecast the effect that the dissolution of Ottoman supremacy might have upon the stability of other thrones. There are strange mysteries in this world of ours; often as the fated individual nears the termination of life, and treads close upon the confines of the tomb, its depressing chill reaches the heart of the doomed one, and becomes a premonition of approaching death. So when a grand crisis in human history is imminent—"the coming event casts its shadow before"—and the hearts of men fail under the forebodings of coming calamities. A nation's death, like that of most individuals, has strange premonitions.

The Crescent is fast waning, and will soon disappear forever from the political heavens. When it has gone down into the blackness of darkness, the "Star out of Jacob" will rise in splendor, and Jerusalem's desolation be ended, and Zion's warfare be accomplished. To man there is an appointed time upon earth, and his bounds that he cannot pass are set. Nations have their periods of existence, and anti-christian powers their times and seasons. From Papal hands the sceptre of temporal dominion has been wrested, and a giant arm now reaches for the Sultan's crown. The destiny of nations is mysteriously interlinked; and if the Turkish heart trembles as the foot-falls of coming fate are echoing upon the ear, the throned monarchs feel that the bolt that demolishes the seat of the Moslem's power, is but a single shaft from a dark tempest that will burst in fury over the Roman world, and leave only the wrecks of nations behind.

These direful foreboding are by no means groundless. The downfall of Mohammedan power is the signal of a world-wide and final revolution. The mystic numbers connected with its duration are found in the twelfth chapter of Daniel. The application of those numbers to Papal Rome has resulted in sad disappointments. They, unfortunately, have been supposed to teach the definite time of the resurrection of the saints, and of the second advent of Jesus Christ; but their true application is to Mohammedan and Jewish history. We defer a consideration of them till we shall have given some conclusions upon foregoing predictions in the preceding chapters.

In the seventh chapter of Daniel the history of successive earthly kingdoms is symbolized under the appearance of certain beastly monsters upon the stage, with their representative appendages. In this prophetic delineation Western Rome and the Papacy are the more prominent objects. The times of Papal supremacy, its cruel persecutions of the saints, its blasphemous utterances against the Most High, the gradual consumption of its power, and its final perdition, are the more particular designs in view in giving this prophecy. Here the career of the great Western anti-christ is fully delineated. In the eighth chapter of this book Eastern powers and Mohammedan supremacy particularly, are the leading objects of symbolization. The rise and downfall of the Persian and Macedonian monarchies are first symbolized, then the divisions of the Macedonian, and finally the rise, dominion, and downfall of Mohammedanism, or the Eastern anti-christ. Pagan Rome commenced a work of devastation, both in the East and the West, that succeeding wicked powers were to consummate. Pagan Rome destroyed Jerusalem, burned the temple, caused the daily sacrifice to cease, and scattered the remnant of the Jewish people, that survived the destructive war, into foreign lands; Mohammedanism succeeds Rome in trampling both the host and sanctuary under foot, in restraining the re-establishment of the Jewish worship, and in destroying the mighty and holy people. It is the power that continues the desolations, commenced by Pagan Rome, through the last end of the indignation. The Pagan and the Moslem are a unit in the work of taking away, and keeping away, the ancient, divinely appointed sacrificial worship from Jerusalem. Pagan Rome also commenced the work of endeavoring to extirpate the church of God, in the Western part of its vast empire, and in this work has been succeeded by the Papacy, which, in its horrible persecutions, has left to its Pagan prototype a character of comparative harmlessness, and innocency. A careful reading of Daniel's prophecy discloses three systems of abomination—Paganism, Mohammedanism, and the Papacy,—and the symbols of the latter two are,—little horns—one of which, on the head of the beast, denotes the Papacy, and the other, on the head of the goat, Mohammedanism.

We will now endeavor to trace out the application of prophecy to each of these abominations—to Mohammedanism particularly.

So far as the vision of the eighth chapter of Daniel is concerned, commentators are unquestionably right in explaining the symbols of the ram and he-goat as applicable to Medo-Persia and Macedon. The two horns of the ram represent the two dynastic branches of the one great national power, before which, under such leaders as Cyrus, no other national power was able to stand. Westward, northward and southward it was victorious. But kingdoms have their times, and prophecy foretells a succession of empires. A monarchy, symbolized by the rough goat, rises in the West, and, under the leadership of Alexander, overthrows the monarchy, before whose prowess Babylon had succumbed. When Grecia had waxed very strong, the great horn was broken, and four others arise in its place; to these, as the last great power reigning over the territories where the monarchies represented by the ram, goat, and preceding horns had dominated—"in the latter time of their kingdom"—finally succeeds the "little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the South, and toward the East, and toward the pleasant land." There can be no question that Mohammedanism has been the exceeding great and controlling power over the countries that formed the various kingdoms which succeeded the empire of Alexander. Like the bishop of Rome, its power was small at first; but like the Papacy, in assuming spiritual prerogatives, it soon became exceeding great. A mighty power arose from nothing. Powerless, and without prestige at the first, Mohammed soon gave law to millions. "At the end of the first century of the Hegira," says Gibbon, "the Caliphs were the most potent and absolute monarchs of the globe. Under the last of the Ommiades the Arabian empire extended two hundred day's journey from East to West, from the confines of Tartary and India to the shores of the Atlantic ocean."

The solid and compact dominion from Fargana to Aden, from Tarsus to Surat, was four or five months march of a caravan. One hundred years after his flight from Mecca, the reign of the successors of Mohammed extended from India to the Western shores at Europe, embracing Persia, Syria, Egypt, Africa and Spain. Subsequently Asia Minor and Greece became the conquests of Ottoman power and since 1403, the Sultan has been seated on the throne of Constantine. Truly he has also waxed great to, or rather against the host of heaven, and this too by reason of transgression. The disobedient Jew and the apostate Christian have alike been cast down before him; and the stars, or rulers, of the host have been stamped upon by him. Principalities and bishoprics have alike fallen under his despotic sway. He stood up also against the Prince of the host—the Prince of princes. He acknowledged the mission of Christ as a prophet, but professed himself one greater. Teaching his followers to entertain a high and mysterious reverence for the Son of Mary, as an apostle of God, and conceding the immaculate conception of his mother, a doctrine borrowed from the Koran by the Latins, he, nevertheless, represented Him as a mere mortal. He also taught that Christ was not crucified in reality, but that a phantom or criminal was substituted in his place, and that Christ, as an innocent saint, was translated to the seventh heaven. He also claimed that the predictions of Moses concerning a future prophet, and of Christ concerning the Paraclete or comforter, were fulfilled in him, as the last and greatest of the apostles of God.

He thus set himself up to subvert the Christian religion by the substitution of his own, and by these arrogant claims endeavored alike to destroy the Jewish hope of the Messiah, and the Christian's anticipations of a glorious kingdom under the administration of the Son of God.

As our paper is becoming somewhat long, we leave our further expositions for another time. S. A. C.

Report of Labors.

The discussion announced in the RESTITUTION, to commence at Coopertown, Brown county, Ill., is numbered with the things that are past.

My opponent, Mr. Scott, failed the most signally of any man whom I ever heard attempt to discuss any question before the public. He occupied most of his time in ridicule and everything else except argument. Adduced nearly all the texts usually quoted to sustain his side of the questions, but failed to make the points usually made by able debaters. The result was good. Many friends were made for the truth. The prospects are very fair of many accessions to the friends of truth, as the result of this discussion.

The attendance was large, and the interest from first to last very good. Our friends and brethren talk of building a house of worship at Coopertown. They will never have a better time. Many of those without will assist them. We can get no place in Coopertown in which to hold meeting. The Baptists, with whose minister I debated, control both the meeting houses and the school house. I hope our brethren will improve the present opportunity, and avail themselves of the interest created by the triumphs of truth, to build a fine church or hall in which to hold meetings. J. M. S.

BRO. REESE:—Several months have passed away since the readers of THE RESTITUTION have seen anything from my pen, but it is not because my interest is waning in the soon-coming kingdom of God, when the rightful heir to the throne of David, (and "Solomon, who sat on the throne of the Lord, and prospered, and all Israel obeyed him," 1 Chron. xxix. 23), shall return to reign, and execute judgment and justice in the earth.

"Well, dear pilgrims, I am looking and hoping for that day to come; that shall in due time put an end to sin and death. The past winter has been a sad one to me, and the spring, more so; I have sat alone much of the time, with my sick husband, and have seen him pine away and die. He died the first day of May, in hope of life eternal in the kingdom of our Redeemer. It was blessed to see with what composure he met the tyrant, death. A neighbor and his wife came in to see him just before his breath stopped. The man sat down by his bed, supposing him unconscious, and put his finger on his pulse, when he opened his eyes and asked calmly, "Very low?" The neighbor said, "Yes, I don't feel any." "I can't live much longer, then, can I?" said the dying man. "No," said the neighbor, "I think not; how do you feel about it?" "All right," he answered, with emphasis, "and I want to meet you all in that blessed kingdom." All in the room were much affected to witness his calmness and resignation in view of death. The popular church, think we who do not believe that man has an immortal soul that soars away to the skies at death, cannot die peacefully, or triumphantly, as they are pleased to call it. I wish all such had seen my husband die. A Congregational deacon came from an adjoining town to our house a few days before my husband died. He saw that he must die, and tried to comfort him by telling him of the better country, (heaven.) "There will be indeed a better country," said the dying man, "when Jesus comes to remove the curse from this earth, and fit up a home for his people. There will be no sickness nor death there," he said, "and if I die I expect to lie down in the grave, and wait till Jesus comes." The deacon could not say anything more to him, but probably pitied him to think he had not yet a better hope to comfort him. But, dear friends, the apostle calls it a blessed hope, and I feel that it is truly such. It is blessed in life, amid all its trials and perplexities, to sustain and comfort. Oh, what could I, poor mortal, do without such a hope? Since I embraced the doctrines of the Bible I have been called upon to part with a dear father and mother, and three children, (all I had,) and now my husband is laid away in the silent grave! Do I not know how to prize the hope of a resurrection? I feel that I do, dear friends. The blessed hope grows dearer and more blessed to me. The Lord has not suffered me to be left alone, or without friends, praise His name! I have an adopted daughter, (adopted when she was six years of age), who has three children that are a comfort to me in my widow-hood; and I have another 10 years old that I took to take care of two years ago. So by trying to do good to others I find I am doing good to myself. O, that Golden Rule! "Do unto others as you would have others do to you," has proved GOLDEN in my case, as it will in all others.

I am isolated from all of like faith, out of my own family, but that does not discourage me, and I am trying to sow the seeds of truth "beside all waters," or wherever I find opportunity, praying the Lord to bless His own truth. My prayer is, that Jehovah will bless all who are engaged in spreading the glad tidings of the coming kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, and cause men who have the means to sustain them in "their work of faith, and labor of love."

A terra cotta vase lately discovered at Illilah, near the site of ancient Babylon, now in the British Museum, is probably a divining cup. It has an elevation or boss in the middle—a peculiarity of that utensil—and a magical inscription around the inside in square characters, and dates most likely from the times of the later Jewish schools at Babylon. The manner of divining is not known. The Talmudists say by striking—a sort of spirit-rapping as old as Joseph; but, from the Hebrew word for divination, it was probably by a muttered incantation. In Gen. xxx. 27, our version wrongly renders this word. Laban says: "I have consulted divination, and the Lord hath blessed me for thy sake." But our version strangely renders it: "I have learned by experience that," etc. Our translators evidently followed the Vulgate "experimento didici" with a misapprehension. The true meaning of experimento is "by augury," as in the usual Latin phrase "experiri augurio"—e. g. Livy, I. 36. The word for cup, both in the Hebrew and in the Latin, in Gen. xliv. is not the ordinary word, but one specially signifying, according to the old authorities, a cup of the sort used in religious or magical exercises.

According to H. Fox Talbot, the Mazzaróth of Job is probably to be interpreted as the constellations which marked the watches of the night by coming to the meridian. He reasons therefor are the meaning and use of the word Mazzaróth, of perpetual recurrence on the Assyrian astronomical tablets, meaning "a watch," and the finding of its plural, or Mazzaróth-Shath, on one of the tablets, which reads "He did not watch the stars of heaven nor the Mazzaróth"—i. e., not the watches. The verb from which these nouns come is of frequent use in Assyrian and occurs in Hebrew (and Syriac) as, e. g., Psalm cxli. 3.—"Watch the door of my lips."

In Rawlinson's "Inscriptions," Vol. IV., pl. vi. l. 37, according to George Smith, occurs a very curious illustration of a chapter in Revelation. Rev. xxi. 15, reads: "And he that talked with me had a golden reed to measure the city, and the gates thereof, and the wall thereof." The cuneiform (Assyrian) passage above referred to reads: "1. A golden reed, very long; a reed very precious. 2. the splendid measur of the gods. 3. It was a reed of pure gold, whose scale was cunningly divided." Here the word for "reed" is the same with the Hebrew used in Ezek. xl. for the measuring "reed," the well-known word that appears in various languages and in our English "cane." The word for "pure gold" is the Hebrew "paz," which occurs several times in the Bible with the same meaning. The word for "scale" is the same word used in the Bible for Jacob's scala or ladder. The Assyrian pasur is often mentioned and said to be made of pure gold; but, further than this technical use, its meaning seems not to be settled.

No Compromise with Popery.

Every true Protestant will most assuredly say, Amen to the following sentiments, expressed by Rev. J. S. Willis from the pulpit of the Seventh Street M. E. church, in this city: "The Bible is eyes to the blind, feet to the lame, comfort to prisoners in their gloomy dungeons. The Bible has unfassed the chains of slaves, has made the wilderness to blossom as the rose, and through strife and agony and grief and the din of life has taught lessons of duty; and our fathers put into our schools a book so noble and inspiring. Our Republic is the highest exponent of human liberty, the loftiest thought of centuries, the result of the principles of the golden rule filtering down through society. We want to continue our glorious American Republic. We can't do it without the Bible. There is no reason why it should be excluded from our schools. The Bible is part and parcel of our American civilization. It is charged that it is a Protestant Bible. It is not a Protestant Bible; it is an American Bible—a republican Bible. Is it not an invasion to attempt to take it from the schools? The Catholic says, 'I have a conscience, and protest against the Bible in our schools.' The Protestant says, 'I have a conscience, and protest against the Bible being taken from our public schools.' Here is conscience pitted against conscience. Who is this that is clamoring about invasion of rights? It is the Roman Church. Such talk does not come well from this source. This is the church that has cut off tongues and toes and applied hot pincers to the flesh and fried heretics on gridirons. Clamoring about the invasion of rights does not come well from the representatives of the church that burned Wycliffe and the glorious old martyrs of the past; that perpetrated the atrocities of St. *Bartholomew's Eve in Paris; that to*day furnishes three-fourths of our paupers and nine-tenths of our convicts; that got up the Kim Park and Orange riots, and that sent emissaries here with the blood-red terretta to set up a principality among republicans. The engines of the Inquisition are still fired. We ask moral and not religious teaching. The true issue is not the Bible. The first step is to get the Bible out of the schools and then put in parochial Roman teachers. Let there be no temporizing and no compromise. The Roman Catholic church never temporizes except with the fagot and fire and drawn sword and rack and dungeon. Let there be one Bible, one faith, one baptism, one God."—National Protestant.

NEW YORK, June, 1875.

The Early Triumph of Christianity.

"A being, known to the world only as a Jewish peasant, delivered a system of doctrine which overthrew, not merely some foolish philosophy or some harsh superstition, but both the theory and establishment of the state religion, guarded and fought for by the armed strength of the most powerful government of the greatest of all empires.

Thousands and tens of thousands owed their daily bread to their connection with that religion. Millions on millions had identified it with all their conceptions of life, of enjoyment and of that obscure hope in which the heathen saw a life to come. The noble families owed to it a large portion of their rank and influence.

The Emperor himself was the High Priest. Old tradition, invigorated into living belief, made it the pledge of safety to the empire; a sacred protector, without which the glories of Roman dominion were destined to inevitable ruin. Yet against this colossal and haughty edifice—the consumate work of sublimity and strength—stood forth a solitary being, and at his word the whole pile fell; the great fortress that towered up to heaven, came, wall and gate, to the ground. And by what means had this been done? By nothing *that can find a parallel in the his*tory of human impulse. Signal authority, enthusiasm, wealth military genius, the promise of splendid success, visionary doctrines, the display of a sensual paradise, have made proselytes in barbarous ages, or among the loose creeds of contending heresies. But the founder of Christianity cast away all those weapons of our lower nature. He shrank from no declaration of the most unpalatable truth. He told the Jew that his spiritual pride was a deadly crime. He declared that the cherished impurity of the Gentile was a deadly crime. He plucked up the temporal ambition of his followers by the roots, and told them that if they were to be great, it must be through the grave. In the full view of unpopularity, desolation and death, He pronounced to the Jews the extinction of their national existence; to the disciples their lives of persecution. At the time of his death his name had scarcely passed beyond his disciples' province; and when at length it reached Rome, it was known only in contemptuous connexion with that of a crowd of unfortunate men condemned to the rack and the flame. Yet within the life of a man, his religion constituted the worship of emperor and people; his doctrines were acknowledged as inspirative, and the civilized world bowed down before Him as the God whom the heaven of heavens cannot contain. These wonders are familiar to the Christian; but they are still wonders; the mightiest phenomena on which the spirit of man can gaze; the stars of our moral twilight, and worthy of our loftiest admiration, till the gates of the grave shall be unbarred, and the vision of glory shall spread before us without a cloud."—Crosby on the Apocalypse.

With all the Heart.

That was a striking thing said of one of the kings belonging to the Hebrew royalty, when the work and the results of his successful reign were being summed up: "He did it with all his heart and prospered."

This doing things with a hearty enthusiasm is often what makes the doer a marked person, and his deeds effective. It is so everywhere. The most ordinary service is dignified when it is performed in that spirit. Every employer wants those who work for him to put heart into the toil. He soon picks out those whose souls are in their service, and gives them evidences of his appreciation. They do not need constant watching. He can trust them in his absence. The places of honor and profit naturally fall to them. They are the rising members of the toiling brotherhood. They grow. They succeed. They are honored. They are in demand. They rebuke indifference and inspire fidelity in others by their example. They prosper, for they work in harmony with the law which God has established and maintained in the world.

In the sphere of religion this heartiness is service is specially needful and vital. What is not done heartily here is hardly done at all, as God estimates it. He wants sincerity, resolution, persistence, enthusiasm—not merely the consenting word and the formal act. A service that begins and ends with the letter is never acceptable service with him. The Pharisee's tithes of mints and anise and cummin are often an offence; the publican's penitent cry, and the poor woman's gift of two mites, wear a right royal glory in his eye, because he sees the wholesouled devotion that lies behind them. —Morning Star.

Textual Distortion of Truth.

The Hon. W. E. Gladstone, in his new pamphlet makes incidental allusion to narrow and partial ideas or Christianity derived from the interpretation of isolated texts, and remarks: "Is not the function of the church to study the Divine Word as a whole, and to gather into the fact of her teachings the rays that proceed from all its parts? Is not this narrow, sterile, willful textualism the favorite resort of sectaries, the general character of all license and self-will that lays waste the garden of the Lord? Is it not this that destroys the largeness and fair proportions of the Truth, squeezing here and stretching there, substituting for the reverent jealousy of a faithful guardianship the ambitious aims of a class, and gradually forcing the heavenly pattern into harder and still harder forms of distortion and caricature?"

—God allows room for repentance, and so must we.

The Rock that is Higher than I.

ELVIRA S. TENNISON.

While in affliction's dark'ning night
I drift upon a stormy sea,
The clouds of gloom obscure my light,
And hide the sheltering Rock from me.

O'erwhelmed my heart, depressed my soul;
My sinking spirit lifts the cry—
While wave on wave of sorrow rolls—
Where is the Rock that is higher than I?

The raging storm abates at length,
And finally through the mist I see
A bow of purest hue—an arm of strength—
Is reaching still from the Rock to me.

Still doubts and fears fain struggling long,
My frail bark tossed by wind and tide,
Would soar to the Rock so high and strong,
Fain drop the anchor, and there abide.

Guarding me 'gainst the fulfilling ear,
While o'er head star of hope is set,
And pushing toward the star-lit shore,
Safe to the Rock that's higher than I.

Though other lights and hopes may flee
On which my faith and love rely,
There shineth ever true to me,
The Star—the Rock that's higher than I.

O Rock of ages—Rock sublime!
Cleft for us—fallen, helpless, lost;
Unmarred by storms, unchanged by time—
We will cling to thee forevermore!

Are the Saints with Christ Between Death and the Resurrection?

L. G. KERR.

From the extreme popular view of immortal-soulism some have dissented, claiming that souls do not go to heaven at death, but only to paradise or hades, and that this is a subterranean region in the interior of the earth. Yet among the many speculations on this subject they have never been able to show the entrance to it, or give a satisfactory description thereof. Some of late think they have discovered the entrance gate to it—upon the investigation of the Great Pyramid of Egypt. It is said that there is a throat in this pyramid which leads down into the heart of the earth, to the intermediate state, and this is the place by which Christ entered paradise with the thief on the day of his crucifixion, and into which the good of all ages have been passing at death. This is quite a discovery for the advocates of that theory, and will doubtless relieve their bewildered minds some. But if they would only turn to the word of God, they might be delivered from this unnecessary trouble much more easily.

Geologists say that the whole interior of the earth, save only about thirty miles or so of the outer surface, is an internally heated mass, in a condition of molten fluidity, which leaves no place in it for a paradise for the righteous to inherit or a hell for the conscious existence of dead men. Yet it is claimed that the interior of the earth is a receptacle of saints and sinners at death, when they are rewarded and punished according to the deeds done in the body. Upon this point, however, the Bible is so plain that there is no room for misapprehension. It forbids the existence of a burning hell until the judgment, and also the punishment therein, or the entering of Paradise until that time.

If men are rewarded or punished before the day of judgment, they are rewarded before they are judged, for John says, when "the kingdoms of this world become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ" (which has not come yet), "the time" comes that "the dead should be judged and that thou shouldest destroy them which destroy the earth." Rev. xi. 15–18. This cannot be true if the theory above referred to is true, and to this agrees 2 Cor. v. 10: "We must all appear before the judgment seat of Christ, that every man may receive the things done in his body, according to that he hath done, whether it be good or bad." Why such language if men receive for the things done in the body before that? There is a mistake somewhere, and if the Bible is right, the mistake is in the theory, which rewards and punishes prior to the judgment.

Some set up the claim that Peter's "spirits in prison" prove the punishment of the wicked before judgment. But let us see how that will agree with their own teaching upon the subject. Peter says: "By which (spirit) he (Christ) went and preached unto the spirits in prison." 1 Pet. iii. 19. We are told that "spirits in prison" signifies sinners in the burning hell in the heart of the earth, and that Christ descended from the cross into this hell and preached to impenitents who were writhing in torments, which preaching was of three day's duration, at the end of which time he came back and resumed the house, the body, and took it along with him. Now how will this tally with the common assertion that Christ and the thief went not to Gehenna fire, but to paradise the same day he hung on the cross? Or is it intended to teach that paradise and hell are both one and the same place; and to have the thief go to hell after all.

But we are told again that the thief is now in company with Christ. Then it follows that paradise is not in the earth, for Christ is in heaven, and has been ever since his ascension. Stephen saw him standing on the right hand of God, Acts vii. 56. The angels said he was "taken up into heaven." Acts i. 11. Peter said that "the heavens must receive him until the time of restitution of all things," which time has not yet come. These passages prove to a demonstration that paradise is not where some say it is, in the intermediate state in the earth, but is in heaven.

In the "Herald" for February 24, 1876, an article appeared on the coming of Christ, in which article the writer speaks of the death of the body, and at that time "we shall depart and be with Christ." Many have become skeptical of immortal soulism, as it is commonly taught, with the idea of men being ushered into the presence of God at death, and have modified their views a little by sending them into the intermediate state, and this writer seems to be one of them. But it will be seen that when hard pressed to prove the latter theory that souls go to an intermediate state—they have to use the same arguments they would in support of the former, which does really prove too much for that theory.

If "to depart and be with Christ" means personal presence, then we are nearer him while on the earth than though we were in it or under it. And then for this text to prove anything, it must prove that after death saints are in the very presence of Christ in heaven, and how will this agree with the Scriptures. Let us see.

Said Jesus to the officers, "Ye shall seek me and shall not find me; and where I am there ye cannot come." John vii. 34. It cannot be argued that this meant that wicked men as they were could not come, but it is harmonious with another statement upon the same subject, as recorded in John iii. 13, "no man hath ascended up to heaven," for the good reason that it was not in the divine economy to take man to heaven at any time, but to bring heaven to man upon earth. For he created the earth for man, and "created it not in vain," but to be inhabited (Isa. xlv. 18), and he gave it to man (Psa. cxv. 16), and when man dies upon it and is buried in it, a resurrection from the dead is essential to make him live upon it again. That those who are fallen asleep in Christ are not in heaven, present with him, enjoying something that never was promised to them, but are awaiting the sound of the trump of God, when they will be raised to immortality, and then they "will be" present "with the Lord," and not before. 1 Cor. xv. 52–53; 1 Thess. iv. 16–17.

We conclude then, from the foregoing, that the dead saints are not present with Christ personally, neither in heaven or earth. For to be in the intermediate state in the earth would not be present with him, for he is in heaven, and no man can go there, any more than they could in the type go into "the Holiest of Holies," while the high priest was performing the work of atonement for the people. No man was allowed to enter into the tabernacle made with hands, which was a pattern of the true tabernacle in heaven (Heb. viii. 1–5), and the anti-type demands this. "For Christ is not entered into the holy places made with hands, which are the figures of the true, but into heaven itself, now to appear in the presence of God for us. And unto them that look for him (as they did for Aaron) shall he appear the second time without [a] sin [offering] unto salvation. Heb. ix. 24–28.—Advent Christian Times.

"A Fair Chance."

I understand the advocates of the "fair chance" question to argue that the blessings promised through Abraham's seed to all the kindreds of the earth is simply to "hear the gospel," or "have a chance to be saved." Now brethren, it seems to me, if your conclusion is correct, that the blessing would prove to be a curse, instead of a blessing to a majority of mankind. For the masses that have the Bible within their reach do reject it. More than this, if I understand matters correctly, some classes have had more than one chance already. For instance, Judah, who rejected the offer, went into captivity to Babylon, and returned to their own land. And through the instrumentality of the Son of God the offer was made again; and yet the majority rejected it.

But if the promise, which was made with an oath, to all the kindred of the earth, consists of merely a chance to be saved, why a chance to be saved is all there is of it; and all that have had the chance have got the blessing. Abraham had the chance: therefore he got the blessing! But the apostle says "he died in faith, not having received the promise." Heb. xi. 13.

But again, if a chance for the bless*ing is the blessing itself, then all that* availed themselves of the chance from Abraham down to Christ got the blessing contrary to God's ordained rule, for it was to come through Abraham's seed, and that seed is Christ. Gal. iii. 16. Surely it was not obtainable before the seed came.

I understand that the promised blessing is in the great future; which even the ancient worthies have not yet obtained, whatever it may be; and it will embrace every human being, yes, "all the kindreds of the earth." Says the Psalmist: "All nations whom thou hast made shall come and worship before thee, O, Lord, and glorify thy name." Ps lxxvi. 9. This is the same language used in the oath to Abraham, "all nations." And Peter says it embraces "all the kindreds of the earth." Acts iii. 25. It is the will of God to have all men to be saved and come to a knowledge of the truth. 1 Tim. ii. 4. Does God desire a thing He can not accomplish? "Thy will be done in earth as it is in heaven." Matt. vi. 10. Would Christ instruct His disciples to pray for a thing that never will be? or will not the Lord cause His will and pleasure to be done? Hear what the prophet says: "My counsel shall stand, and I will do all my pleasure." Isa. xlvi. 10. God is able to do all His pleasure, and no doubt will, for we think His grace abounds at least equal to the offense. The offense has affected every human being, and will not His grace reach as far? Is there no balm in Gilead? Can not the Great Physician remove the cause and destroy its effects? Let us see. "Therefore as by the offense of one judgment came upon all men to condemnation: even so by the righteousness of one the free gift came upon all men unto justification of life. For as by one man's disobedience many (all) were made sinners, so by the obedience of one shall many (all) be made righteous. Moreover, the law entered that the offense might abound. But where sin abounded, grace did much more abound, that as sin hath reigned unto death, even so might grace reign through righteousness unto eternal life by Jesus Christ our Lord." Rom. v. 18 to 21. All were affected by the offense. All must be affected by the "free gift," *and that is unto justifica*tion of life?"

Can it not be true, brethren, that the disobedient will suffer the penalty of their sins, and yet be saved in the "ages to come?" It seems to me they can. Is there any place in the Word that threatens the sinner with endless misery, endless punishment, endless destruction, or endless death? I feel sure our brethren are too well posted on the words, everlasting, forever, eternal, etc., to claim endlessness from any of them. Even the word perpetual does not signify endlessness. "Eternal life" does not of itself imply endless duration, but simply "life of the age." Men who live in the "age to come," which is called "everlasting life," will die. The Sodomites suffered the "vengeance of eternal fire," (vengeance of the age,) but not endless fire, for they will be re*stored* back to their old estate. Ezek. xvi. There was a time when they worshipped the God of heaven, and thus I understand to be their "former estate," or at least they were "confederate with Abraham." But there is life without end, which is definitely expressed by the word "endless." Heb. vii. 10. But "endless death" is not in the Bible.

We believe Judah and Israel will be restored. And Ezekiel says that they were more wicked than Sodom. We should not be slow to believe anything that is plainly written in the Bible. The prophet says: "And it shall come to pass in that day that the Lord shall punish the host of the high ones that are on high, and kings of the earth upon the earth. And they shall be gathered together as prisoners are gathered in the pit (dungeon) and shall be shut up in the prison, and after many days shall they be visited." Isa. xxiv. 21–2. Doubtless these are wicked characters that oppose the Lord when seated on His throne. Yet there is a promise left them that they shall be visited after many days. If the Lord will, who will object?

Again, the Bible teaches us that Christ is the second Adam. Then all that was lost in the first Adam must be regained in the second Adam. Can He be the second Adam in fact without reaching the lost ones of the Adamic race? Surely not. How, then, does he reach them? "For as in Adam all die, even so in Christ shall all be made alive." 1 Cor. xv. 22. The same all that die in the first Adam shall be made alive in the second. I see no chance of getting away from this conclusion, for "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." Can death be destroyed while a single one of Adam's posterity remains under its gloomy domain? I think not.

Brethren, let us look at it in kindness. Weigh it with reason. Believe it if true.

Yours, desiring truth,
A. G. SHOUKEY.

Temperance.

No Bible Christian can afford to treat this subject with indifference. The divine sanction seems so signally attached to this movement, both in its history and origin, that he who would be in sympathy with God and his cause must find a warm approval in his heart for the cause of temperance.

The eighth National Convention has just been held in Chicago. There were in attendance six hundred and eighty-eight accredited delegates, besides a host of visitors. The large audience that assembled at each session of the convention are a fit evi*dence of the patriotism of Chicago* to the worthy subject under consideration. Still when we consider that there are eight thousand men in this city, engaged directly in the retail sale of intoxicating liquor it will be apparent that with all the zeal and enthusiasm that exists, the work is not yet nearly accomplished.

Vice President Wilson said in his speech during the first day:

"Forty years of experience and of observation have taught me that the greatest evil of our country, next, at any rate, to the one that has gone down in fire and blood to rise no more (slavery) is the evil of intemperance in our land."

Ex-Vice President Colfax said in his letter excusing his absence:

"Every year's observation only strengthens my conviction that the foe against which you war so unselfishly is the most insatiable and most ruthless enemy of *mankind and wo*mankind, and especially for the poor; that it is the cause of more wretchedness, destitution, unhappiness, pauperism, insanity, and crime than the triple furies of war, pestilence, and famine combined; that its banishment or extirpation would fill the world with indescribable happiness; and that every restraint that is put upon it carries joy and peace and hope to many agonized hearts and tempted victims."

It is so rare that men in high positions are life-long temperance advocates that we consider these testimonies worthy of preservation side by side.

In the address of welcome the speaker entertained the hope and expressed the wish that the day would come ere long when in all this great land, not one man would be found to sell or drink liquor. In the light of the past how futile is this hope! Some will be saved, but the extirpation of the evil will undoubtedly be left for another age.

The great danger in our humble opinion, before the cause of temperance at present is that it will become a political concern. A very spirited discussion took place on this subject. Finally the following resolution was adopted:

Resolved: That we recommend all citizens to take the temperance issue "without concealment, without compromise," to the caucus and the polls; to nominate and vote for such candidates only, State and National, as will unqualifiedly indorse and sustain the prohibition of the liquor traffic; that in every State, county, town and Congressional district in the United *States Prohibition Leagues be organ*ized; also, whenever suitable nominations are not otherwise made, that independent prohibition candidates be nominated for the suffrages of all thoughtful citizens; and that the Prohibition party should have the undivided support of all temperance voters in each State and Territory, wherein their judgment, such political action is the best method of securing the enactment of sufficient prohibitory laws.

I close with the following eloquent paragraph from D. Cuyler as to the duty of Christians:

"The issues of the great conflict with the demons of the decanter and the dram-shop really lie in the keeping of God's people. If the church and the pulpit are silent, no power on earth can check the floods of drunkenness. If God's salt lose its savor, wherewith shall a wicked world be salted? Intemperance never will be stayed, the dram deas never will be closed, the drinking usages of society never can be revolutionized until the followers of Jesus Christ do their uttermost duty."

Respectfully submitted,
C. G. MARSTON.

Teaching Children to Lie.

They do not mean to do it, those fond, doting parents. They would be horrified if you were to accuse them of teaching their children to lie, but watch them awhile in their dealings with their little ones and see if this is not the case. Some promise is made, but amid the horrid business of the day it is forgotten. Threats are made that are never put into execution—that were never intended to be put into execution. The child soon learns that you will not throw it out of the window because it cries, that a bad dog will not come to bite off its arm, and that its ears will remain whole, however much you may threaten to cut them off. It soon finds out when you slip out of the back way, and go shopping, visiting, or calling, that you intend to deceive it. You lie to the child by your actions, and you must not wonder if it lies in return.

You break with impunity the promise you make to your child, and it will break the promises it makes to you.

If you want your children to reverence the sacredness of truth, keep your word inviolate. Never fool or deceive them, even in fun. Lying, a lying,—if it is but in sport, and the most dreadful consequences may follow.

Your children lose confidence in you, they distrust you, and come to despise you, your subterfuges, your authority, when you have once deceived them, and before they reach a dozen years, they are masters in the art of duplicity, and are making rapid strides in the road of crime; and are preparing for you a heart-sickening array of trouble and tears.

The beauty of your child will weigh nothing in the estimation of the good against its want of principle. You may pet and praise it as much as you please; but the dark stains are not covered—it is a liar, and the doors of usefulness and honor are barred against it. All its present life is darkened, and more dreadful than all else, it is shut out of the world to come.

Truth is universally admired. We love and trust God because He is a God of truth. The very foundations of society, of government, rest upon truth, and totter and fall when truth is forsaken.

Then teach your children to reverence the truth, by making no promise, no threat, but what you intend to fulfill. Be true to them in your words, in your actions, in every thing. Be true to each other. The wife must not deceive the husband, nor the husband the wife, nor must either be false in their relations to, and their dealings with society.

I shall always respect the man who drove a mile or two out of his way to get his children some candy because he had promised it to them, and would not break his word.

And I shall always see as one of the most beautiful pictures of memory, my little school-fellow, Eugene Trask, springing to his feet one Friday afternoon, (when the teacher had read him out "perfect,") and saying, "Oh, Mr. Fay, you forgot; I was cut out on the ice one day at noon, and did not get in until after school had taken up."

May God bless each one of the household and save the "little ones," and all when Jesus comes!

S. ROXANA WING.

—A beautiful answer was given by a little Scotch girl. When her class was examined, she replied to the question, "What is patience?" "Wait a wee, and dinna weary."

—The slanders of libellers may be compared to fuller's earth, which though it may seem dirt to you at first only leaves you more pure and spotless when it is rubbed off.

DIED

At Mt. Carroll, Ill., June 13, 1875, sister ALICE NELSON, of inflammation of the bowels, aged twenty-six years, eight months and thirteen days.

Sister Nelson laid very low for six weeks and suffered very much, but bore it all with patience to the last. A large circle of friends mourn her loss. May they all get ready to meet her in the Kingdom of God, where parting will be no more. Knowing that there is no assurance of life here, let us one and all live close to our profession, that we all may meet in the Kingdom where we will be blessed forevermore. Funeral services by the writer, subject the death state and the resurrection.

J. S. ARNOLD.

On Wednesday, June 2, 1875, at nine o'clock A. M. our beloved sister EVA MUSE, wife of brother Wallace Bark.

Sister Eva lay sick about four months, died of a disease known as Marasmus, or more plainly speaking "wasting of flesh." She was taken sick about the time her sister Martha Bark died, whose obituary notice was given through the HERALD OF JAN. in February last. Sister Eva, always patient, kind and affectionate, died as she had lived, a devoted Christian. She was immersed in the spring of 1869, by old brother W. M. Howard. I conversed with her freely the day before she died. She told me plainly her hope was in the first resurrection. She fell asleep in Jesus. We laid her gently in the cold cold grave, beside her sleeping sister Martha. Words of comfort were spoken by the writer, to an attentive audience. Let us who knew her best imitate her daily and godly conversation, and finally when Christ who is our life shall appear, may we meet her in the kingdom.

PREACHING NOTICE.

I am ready and willing to go anywhere in "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and hear me "at the time appointed."

Having no means of my own, my traveling expenses will have to be met from some other source. Let the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, and at an eligible point in Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, who desire a course of Biblical Lectures, address me early, at ADEN, Union county, Ill.

AMOS HARPOLE.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Annual Conference of the State of Indiana will convene at Rensselaer, Jasper county, Thursday, August 12, 1875.

A hearty welcome is extended by the brethren of Rensselaer to all who favor the Conference to be holden, in all who desire to be present at this yearly convocation.

JOHN L. WISER, Secretary.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

1.—All communications for the RESTITUTION should be written in a plain, legible hand; and, to save mistakes, carefully revised and corrected.

2.—Business notes and communications, if on the same sheet, should be written so that they can be taken apart, without dividing the communication. If necessary, a separate slip may be enclosed in the same envelope.

3.—In the extra list of names of new subscribers, let them be inserted as such.

4.—Be careful to write all names of persons and places plainly and distinctly.

5.—In all cases, give the name of the post-office, county, and state. When a town or village is called by one name, and the post-office by another, be sure to give the name of the post-office.

6.—When the direction of a paper is to be changed do not forget to name the office to which it has been sent. Unless this is done, it is out of our power to make the change.

7.—When subscribers remove, let us know immediately. Otherwise, their papers will continue to be sent, and to their charge, until such notice is given.

8.—When subscribers wish to discontinue, let them remember that all arrearages must first be paid.

9.—Parties ordering Misc. returned, must prepay the postage; otherwise they will remain in this office.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY E. WILSON, AND H. V. REED.

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God. * * * Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature, location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible is taking concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy is fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish His Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "OUR REST." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently confer in its circulation. If he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would convey it to others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

THE RESTITUTION.

The Night Cometh.

Time's sun is fast setting,
Its twilight is nigh,
Its evening is fading
In cloud of o'erhanging sky;
Its shadows are stretching
In endless gloom;
Its midnight approaches,
The night of the tomb.

Then haste, sinner, haste! there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, flee, flee.

The vision is nearing,
The Judge and the throne!
The voice of the angel
Proclaims, "It is done!"
On the wind of the tempest
Its ruler shall come,
And the blaze of his glory
Wrath cast from its gloom.

Then haste, sinner haste! there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, flee, flee.

With clouds he is coming!
His people shall sing,
With gladness they hail him
Redeemer and King.
The iron rod wielding,
The rod of his ire,
He cometh to kindle
Earth's last, fatal fire.

Then haste, sinner, haste! there is mercy for thee,
And wrath is preparing—flee, flee, flee.

The Blessed Hope.

Think which was a "blessed hope" in the beginning of this dispensation is a "blessed hope" still. Indeed, it is the only hope that Christians who take the Scriptures for their guiding light dare cherish, for the simple reason that those Scriptures warrant none other. Hope for the regeneration of society, and the conversion of the world, from the efforts of all the Churches, there is none. It is not the law of the case. It does not fit in with God's plan. And he needs no suggestion from us, and will accept no "amendment" of ours to any resolution of his. Our place is to stand reverently with closed lips and open ears when he makes known his purpose regarding the ages; and when he has done speaking, our duty is to hasten to obey, without asking any questions regarding the probable or possible results of our obedience. If we are to teach and preach, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, to feed the lambs and the sheep of the gracious and beloved Shepherd and Bishop of our souls, and to show forth the praises of him who hath called us out of darkness into his marvellous light, by all means let us enjoy the honor and the privilege of doing these things heartily, lovingly, promptly, without asking the question, What will be the result of our obedience? The question is impertinent, both in the proper sense of being beside the mark and in the popular sense of irreverence. We have no right to ask it. A servant does not ask his master why he is required to do a given thing; duty is the law of his position; and if he faithfully discharge that he will be deemed a good servant, whatever may be the effect on his master's interests of the duty he has discharged. The master himself is the best judge of that. So our Master asks us to be faithful, to shine as lights in the world, to bring forth fruit unto God, to be a separated people, and to live not to ourselves but to him; but he has nowhere told us that our testimony will meet with universal acceptance, that the nations will surrender to him at our bidding, or that the fruit of our labor will be a regenerated world and a Millennial Sabbath from the rising to the setting of the sun. An elective dispensation, which we are assured this is (Acts xv. 14), precludes the idea of universal conversion so long as it lasts; and even if we suppose every man upon the face of the earth a Christian, the blessed hope to which Paul directs our thoughts would still have to be cherished, for that is not a Christianized world, but "the glorious appearing of the Great God and our Savior Jesus Christ." Titus ii. 13.

Until he appear who is our life, the resurrection incorruptibility and glory promised to his Body the Church cannot be realized. "When Christ, who is our life, shall appear, then shall ye also appear with him in glory." Col. iii. 4. If all nations were absorbed into one vast Christian commonwealth, and if every member of this enormous community were a true disciple of Christ, however fascinating such an imaginary picture may be, creation would still groan and travel in pain, and all the inhabitants of the world would have to say, "And not only they but ourselves also, which have the first fruits of the Spirit, even we ourselves groan within ourselves, waiting for the adoption, to-wit, the redemption of our body." Surely such a state of things as that cannot be the end contemplated by Infinite Wisdom. No; the coming of Christ, and the resurrection and manifestation of the sons of God in his life and his likeness, are parts of the original purpose, from which there has been and can be no departure. It is truly a glorious purpose, so wonderfully glorious, indeed, that when we look at ourselves and feel that we are poor, helpless, ignorant, dying creatures, we are tempted to think that it cannot be true; but then when we remember that even this looking at self is a thing to be avoided, and that looking unto Jesus is the law of the case, we take the courage of faith and see that it must be true; for he, the Savior of the body, its Head and its Life, is worthy of it all. Strictly speaking it is not we who are to be thus glorified when the Lord comes, but he in us; and it is this that makes us glad and helps us to credit fully all the revealed wonders that accompany and follow his advent. Too much cannot be done for him; and if the Father intends to shed the lustre of his Son's likeness on the many sons whom he is bringing to glory, that they, in turn, may reflect that lustre upon the countless multitudes that are yet to inhabit the earth under the reign of the great King, we can but say, adoringly, Amen; so be it; let us have this great honor that we may lay it at his feet!

"He shall come to be glorified in his saints." To the grateful Christian heart, this is a most delicious revelation. Our best labors for him have so many imperfections, our holiest consecrations have so many spots, and our warmest zeal for his honor has so many flashes of strange fire, that when we discharge the needed duty of self-examination, we are filled with shame and sorrow, and can only cry for pardon; but the time is coming when all this will be changed for the better, and this blessed change will continue for ever. We shall not go back to the days of our imperfection, but shall be, as the Master, without spot before God. Then indeed Christ will be glorified in us. It will no longer be a question, no longer open to doubt, whether we are his or not. All who see us will know at once that the glory that is upon us is from him, and he will be honored. That is the joy of the prospect! Our services are poor and feeble now; they will be splendid then; but let us not forget that those who will be advanced to positions of regal influence in the kingdom of God are just the men who are faithful in a few things during this preparatory dispensation.—Sel.

Our Earthly House.

For we know that if our earthly house of this tabernacle (dwelling) were dissolved, we have a building of God, a house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."—2 Cor. v. 1.

Modern theology explains this earthly house to be Paul's natural body. Is this correct? We think not, for various reasons. This argument gives Paul two bodies—the earthly, his natural body; the house from heaven, his spiritual body. So when Paul leaves the earthly house or body, he goes to heaven and enters into his house not made with hands, or spiritual body. Now, is this earthly house or body to have a resurrection? Modern theology says it will. Can Paul inhabit two bodies at the same time? Surely not. Which one, then, is to give way? If the natural body, why then did God raise it from the dead? If the spiritual body, how then is it eternal? These questions demand an answer—one that will introduce harmony and consistency in the theory itself, and reconcile the Scriptures therewith.

"For in this (earthly house) we groan earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house from heaven. If so be, that being clothed we shall not be found naked. For we that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened not for that we would be unclothed but clothed upon that mortality might be swallowed up of life." The grammar of the text forbids the would-be exposition which we are venturing to reject. Mark these points: "We," in the plural, earthly house or tabernacle in the singular. If either the earthly house or tabernacle represents the natural body, as "we" means more than one, it may have, for aught we know, a hundred immortal souls dwelling in it, which lays the foundation for the doctrine of the transmigration of souls. In our investigation of the Word we find that the words "body" and "flesh" are used in various ways, sometimes to represent a sinful state; also to denote a state of mortality and corruption. So in this connection "earthly house" and "tabernacle" are used to denote a state of mortality and corruption in which the church of God is now dwelling, and laboring for deliverance. Hence the propriety and consistency of the expression used by the apostle when he saith, "In this we (Christians who compose the church), groan earnestly desiring to be clothed upon with our house which is from heaven." Mark this point. Paul was not, as many are at the present day, desiring to go up to heaven, but he was desiring something "from heaven." He also says, "We that are in this tabernacle do groan, being burdened not for that we would be unclothed." So then he was not groaning for the immortal soul to shake off its mortal body and thus unclothe itself and soar away on eagles' wings beyond the bounds of time and space. This was not his desire, but his desire was to be clothed upon. How clothed upon? He answers "that mortality might be swallowed up of life." When will this take place? The same writer informs us: "Behold, I shew you a mystery. We shall not all sleep (or die) but we shall all be changed. In a moment, in the twinkling of an eye, at the last trump, for the trumpet shall sound, and the dead shall be raised incorruptible; and we shall all be changed; for this corruptible must put on in incorruption, and this mortal shall put on immortality." So when this corruptible shall have put on incorruption, and this mortal shall have put on immortality, then shall be brought to pass the saying that is written, "death is swallowed up in victory." 1 Cor. xv. vi. 4. Here we learn that it will be at the last trump, when death is swallowed up in victory, then will mortality be swallowed up of life, at which time the resurrection will take place, for he affirms that then the dead shall be raised, and "we (the same persons he represents as groaning in the tabernacle), shall be changed," which change will be from a state of corruption to incorruption, from mortality to immortality. Now if this "we" spoken of as dwelling in this earthly house or tabernacle is already immortal, how can it be changed to immortality at the coming of Christ and the resurrection? Answer this question, or else be silent about the "we" in the earthly house meaning immortal souls. "Therefore we are always confident, knowing that whilst we are at home in the body we are absent from the Lord." The word "body" denotes a state of mortality and corruption; while in such a state we are absent from the Lord. Why? Let Paul answer: "Flesh and blood can not inherit the kingdom of God, neither doth corruption inherit incorruption."—1 Cor. xv., 50. He also assigns a reason in the text itself: "For we walk by faith, not by sight." When shall we walk by sight? The answer is given in 1 John, iii., 2: "Beloved, now are we the sons of God, and it doth not yet appear what we shall be, but we know that when he shall appear we shall be like him, for we shall see him as he is." Then we shall walk by sight, and be present with the Lord—then and not until then. We all agree that the living saints are absent from the Lord, but disagree in relation to the condition of the dead saints. It is claimed that they are present with the Lord. Now I propose to prove that they are just as much absent from the Lord as the living saints are. Then to the law and testimony, for if we speak not according to this it is because there is no light in us. Peter says of our father David, that he is dead and buried and that his sepulchre is with us unto this day. "For David is not ascended into the heavens, but he saith himself, The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool."—Acts ii., 29 to 34. His argument is, Christ is in heaven, in the presence of God, but David is not there; hence David is not present with the Lord. Now what is true of one saint in death is true of all. In the eighth verse Paul expresses his willingness to be absent from this body of corruption and mortality, and be present with the Lord in his glorified state. And this certainly is and should be the desire of every Christian heart fully inspired with the glorious hope of life and immortality to be given at the appearing and kingdom of Christ.

Binding Burdens.

It is a well-known feature of all false religions that they chiefly consist in outward observances, rites and ceremonies. Their founders being unable to conceive of a God who is alone pleased with inward purity and love, and wholly indifferent to the outward forms, yet being conscious that something is due to Him from his creatures are solicitous to propitiate Him by gifts, offerings, observance of days, religious rites of various kinds, self abasement and the like; precisely as they would propitiate an offended earthly potentate.

It is also a well marked feature of Christianity in its decay. Every form of apostate Christianity is notably loaded down with rites and outward observances; so that the degree of such apostacy can almost be determined by the amount of burdens imposed by the religious guides upon the people. Just as men love the inward grace they increase the outward burden. Precisely as when the life of the body has fled it becomes an object of great tenderness, so that even its enemies lose their hatred and become gentle towards it.

When the Jewish system waxed old and was ready to vanish away to be superceded by a better; when priests and people had lost sight of the real significance of their institutions, and the spirit was lost in the letter, the religious guides began to multiply burdens until they were indeed intolerable. "They bind heavy burdens and grievous to be borne, and lay them on mens shoulders" said the Master. So when the Galatians began to depart from the simplicity of the Gospel, Paul rebuked them and said, "Ye observe days and months, and times, and years, I am afraid of you lest I have bestowed upon you labor in vain." And exhorted them to "stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage." This love of slavery, so manifest in old ages, among all nations, in all religions, is certainly a most curious fact and yet not impossible to understand. Men are born in ignorance of God, and few, if any, ever attain in this life to a proper conception of the real character of our heavenly Father. But to give the world a correct knowledge of Himself, and thus to win them to Himself and fit them for his eternal associates and obedient servants, seems to have been the constant aim of God in all the various dispensation of his will. Yet man is slow to learn that "God is love." Even the crowning evidences of that fact given to the world in the Christian scheme, have never to any great extent been comprehended. Slowly and laboriously, hesitatingly and reluctantly men recognize the fact that God is not a slave holder wielding the lash, but a living Father full of gifts. At the very dawn of that system of bondage which his wisdom thought best to impose until the time of reformation, (perhaps because he saw they would be slaves and were not yet fit for freedom). He tenderly appeals to them, as though his hands reluctantly bound the chains they greedily desired, upon their limbs, "What doth the Lord thy God require of thee but to deal justly, love mercy, and to walk humbly with thy God." As if He had said, "If ye will be children when you ought to be men, if ye must be slave when ye may be free, then take this system of bondage and be slaves of one God rather than of many, and serve me in the observance of days and months, and times and years, in feasts and fasts, in washings and sacrifices and obligations; bear this yoke of grievous bondage if you will till "the Son shall make you free," and then "you shall be free indeed." But their love of slavery like that of all other is clearly referable to two sources: First, their inability to conceive of God as freely giving pardon and eternal life and everlasting love, because of that very love and requiring nought but love in return, and secondly, because of the natural pride of man which prompts him to become to a greater or less extent an instrument of his own salvation. This thought was very forcibly expressed (if not elegantly) by the infidel Jamelson, at Beaver Dam, not long since, in this wise: "I would rather be decently damned than to sneak into heaven on the merits of another."

Men seem incapable of realizing that salvation, eternal life, is the gift of God through Christ, and so they go about continually to buy with their shabby observances a right to that which God has freely given them. They are like a recently manumitted slave, they cannot realize the situation, but go about hat in hand bowing and crying, and saying, massa, massa. Christianity to them is but a change of masters. A change for the better it is true, but still bondage. And so they must observe a holy day with awe and solemnity. With bated breath and downcast eyes, they slowly and solemnly go about till the children declare they don't want to go to heaven, if it is one eternal Sabbath. They must wear their hair a certain length, and their garments of a certain color or fashion. Must have no buttons on their coats, nor trim their beards. Their children should have been born with cotton caps on their heads. Or they must wash their feet at stated times and devote just so much time to prayer, must be very regular and precise in their worship. Or they must be very conscientious about what they eat. The very rite by which they are joined to Christ must be performed by some one, properly and authoritatively appointed. A simple Christian who knows the way, cannot instruct his fellow and baptize him into Christ; there would be too much freedom about it. And then the rite must be performed under just such circumstances and in a precise manner. Even the Lords supper, the very badge of our freedom must be made into a grievous yoke and be administered by authority at regular periods once a week or once a year, and will not be valid nor acceptable otherwise. Just as if it was an offering made to an angry God who demands the most punctilious observance of a prescribed mode or he would flout the offering, however sincerely made, instead of a joyful privilege of the saint and his family at any time or place, at home or abroad, alone or with the family, or the public (the church) as an efficient means to enliven his memory and warm his heart, and strengthen his faith, to be repeated "as oft" as you please or circumstances require, and the oftener the better.

I seem to hear our Father saying, "Will my children never know me?" "What doth the Lord thy God require of thee but to deal justly, love mercy and walk humbly with thy God." "Stand fast therefore in the liberty wherewith Christ hath made us free, and be not entangled again with the yoke of bondage."

Controversy.

The first controversy had its existence in the paradise of Eden, between the serpent and the word. The spirit of truth was engaged upon one side—the spirit of evil on the other. With mankind the spirit of evil seemed to have the best of the argument. Adam decided the issue in its favor. In consequence thereof "he died," and every living son and daughter of Adam is to day in a dying condition. "Thou shalt surely die" said the word; "Ye shall not surely die" declared the serpent. The whole world was engaged in that controversy. The whole world is in controversy now. However much men may deplore controversy, there is no way to avoid it. They may cry "peace, peace, but there is no peace," in the sense of having no controversy—nothing to do. In the church of God there is peace. "My peace I give unto you" said Jesus to the disciples, and Paul exhorts to "be at peace among yourselves." Those in "the faith of Jesus"—the "one faith" are, and will be, at peace, but they are engaged in a grand controversy. In the contention between truth and error, there is no compromise. The spirit of truth, which Jesus sent, says to his friends, "Ye should earnestly contend for the faith once delivered unto the saints." Only those in "the faith" will contend for it, and consequently against every other faith. Those not in the "one faith" may cry "peace and safety," but it is in vain, for "then sudden destruction cometh upon them, * * and they shall not escape," says Brother Paul. The controversy may seem to be unequal. Indeed, it is, in point of numbers. The "few" who find the narrow way "which leadeth unto life" are earnestly contending against the "many" in the broad way, "that leadeth to destruction."

The conflict is irrepressible. The lines are between Christ and his "few"—Anti-Christ and the "many." But the victory is certain for the united "few." Thank God! the enemies of Jesus are divided. Said he, "suppose ye that I am come to give peace on the earth? I tell you nay; but rather division." When on the earth "there was a division among the people because of him." There is division among the people now, else the brethren of the "one faith" would be "slain with the sword" or going about "destitute, afflicted, oppressed with evils, wandering in deserts, mountains, caverns and dens of the earth." Comparatively they have peace through the division of their enemies, and it enables them to keep up the controversy, "For the Lord hath a controversy with the nations; He will plead with all flesh; He will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord." And now comes the editor of the "A. C. Times" and puts in a plea for abatement, for the purpose of suppressing controversies. He wants no controversy and publishes his leading editorial under that head in the issue of the 24th inst. Like Grant he seems to be saying, "Let us have peace," and like Jeff. Davis, he wants to be "let alone." Evidently some of the "one faith" contenders whom he denominates "theological gladiators," have been attacking him with the "sword of the spirit" and controverting his "advent faith." He doesn't seem to care so much for Himself as for his flock whom he advises to have no "controversy" with "theological gladiators," but to patiently endure "the trying ordeal." He tells them that "the spirit of God is not a spirit of controversy or contention," strange as it may appear, in the very same issue, under the head of "What next?" the editor enters into a controversy with his brethren, Dr. E. H. Barbour and Wm. C. Thurman. The former he denounces as a "fanatical leader on definite time," and speaks of his disappointed Brother Thurman in a manner calculated to stir up feelings of unkindness instead of brotherly love. With their controversy I have nothing to do, for the reason that it is about the "advent faith," and not the "one faith." But one can not help reflecting that Adventism had its birth in 1843-4. It was begotten by its partisan leader, "Father Miller," and brought forth by its mother, "Definite Time." The "Times has heretofore endorsed "Thurman's Chronology," and assented to the probability of his '76 definite time calculation being correct. Now that the time is past, and these honest, earnest believers in Adventism are smarting under the failure in their calculations of the prophetic periods, isn't it a little unkind in friend Burr to cast the same in their teeth?

But the RESTITUTION demands short articles, and in conclusion, let me urge the brethren of the Abrahamic faith to continue the controversy for truth, in the spirit of love, at the same time not forgetting Brother Paul's advice to Timothy (1 Tim. vi. 3-5 Anderson's Translation). "If any one teaches other things, and does not assent to the sound words of our Lord Jesus Christ, and to the teachings which is according to godliness, he is mad with conceit, knowing nothing, but has a morbid fondness for questions and contentions about words, out of which come envy, strife, railing, evil suspicions, and wranglings, on the part of men who are corrupt in mind, and destitute of the truth, who suppose that godliness is a source of gain. From such withdraw yourself."

ATTICA, ILL.

The Mind and the Soul.

In considering the above subject, it ought to be borne in mind by the reader, that although it is not for a moment supposed that doctrines of physiology, and the mortality of man are to be considered as Gospel, yet they are negative truths that are useful, very useful, in the consideration of other subjects that are of greater importance. If it is not building, it is clearing away the rubbish of the old shanty of human traditions for the foundation of the solid structure of the Gospel of the kingdom.

The object of this paper then, is to get at a clear understanding of man and his constitution, and the words we use to define him and his. I have in two former papers endeavored to give out some thoughts on these subjects, the first of which has been criticised by one of the brethren, who signs himself "Antioch Disciple." I am not sorry that the views have been opposed, for two reasons: 1. It will advertise the subject before the brethren. 2. Opposition always throws light on, and reveals the weak points in an argument, if there are any, as well as brings the strong points into still greater relief. I would have liked much better if Antioch Disciple had read my article "is spirit matter or mind?" for then I think he would have understood my position better, for I must lay it to his charge that he makes me affirm in one instance what I never affirmed. This resulted, in my opinion, from superficial reading, and not from any intended misrepresentation.

With the permission, then, of our brethren, the editors of the RESTITUTION, I will again endeavor to clear up that much muddled subject; and it is not, in my opinion, that the subject is not naturally as clear and pellucid as the mountain stream, but the muddle is caused by the mixing of terms. People stumble on their own language as little boys trip themselves up with their own shoe laces.

Let me then define the terms I use; and to do this it is not necessary to go into a chemical or anatomical analysis, but only define them sufficiently well to be understood by the average reader or preacher, as, when we wish to identify a person, it is not necessary to give all the details of his height, weight, color of eyes, number of hairs on his head, and an unabridged history of his relations. If I want to talk of brother Reed, which Reed? you will say. Why H. V. Reed, Editor of the RESTITUTION, I reply, and the identification is complete, and all who know brother Reed, would know exactly who I spoke of. And so with any other term. Antioch Disciple mentions iron. I think iron could be identified in the same way, or any other well known substance without entering into any lithical detail. And it is thus that I would define the term soul, I am one soul and Antioch Disciple is another soul. We are substantial solid and opaque objects, weighing something over one hundred pounds, composed chiefly of bone, flesh and blood in a highly organized condition, and capable of living and possessing various powers; such as locomotion, speech, sight, hearing, thought or mind. A soul, according to my understanding, is an animal or person, an organized body capable of conscious individuality. This is the original meaning of the word soul according to the Mosaic and prophetic usage. There are secondary meanings applied to it sometimes, but that does not alter the primary meaning.

Now that we have got at a definition of the term soul, let us proceed with mind.

Mind has neither form nor weight. It is merely one of the attributes of the soul, as motion or digestion is. You ask me "to separate them," well, I must confess, it is rather hard to draw the line of separation between a person and his digestion, or his mind; nevertheless, they have been defined separately, even as we would define between a man and his face. You ask me "Can a soul exist independent of mind?" It certainly can. You ask me "What would a soul be without mind?" Either dead or asleep. "But the soul can only act by the impulse of the mind," says Antioch Disciple. Perhaps so, brother, but we cannot see how that affects the argument; for the soul only sees by the "light of the eye," or hears by the hearing of the ear; and even if it were impossible to separate a man, or a person, or a soul, from his own sight, or hearing, or digestion, or mind, yet it would be very awkward, if we had those terms mixed up, so that we could not tell the difference between sight and soul, or mind and soul.

"According to brother G.," says Antioch Disciple, "mind is the essence of the brain." Such an idea never crossed me, brother. I know not where you derived the idea from, except that I said that I supposed you might have such a thing as the essence of brains,—adding, that I had no doubt that it could be a material essence. I might have further added, that very likely the said decoction would be somewhat of the consistency of calf's foot jelly. I certainly never intended to say that mind was the essence of brains, any more than a smile is the essence of a face, or a gesticulation the essence of arms, or a revolution the essence of a wheel. These are only the names that we give to the action of the above mentioned structures.

As far as human research has gone, as yet it has discovered that man, and the lower animals collect, by means of the five senses, information of the outside world, and secures it. This power of holding facts is called memory, or knowledge. Besides this, they have the other power of adjusting those facts, and placing a relative value on each; which power is reason, or judgment. These two powers are what I should call mind, or mental power.

This power, among all the creatures of God that come within the range of our association, is most fully developed in man; that the lower animals possess it in a lesser degree is certain; but that plants possess this power, in any degree, is a theory, that in my opinion, is contrary to all human experience. Some plants possess sensation, as the sensitive plant, the vine in its tendrils, the sun flower, etc., but their actions are directly automatic, much similar to the action of a thin sheet of horn which curls on the application of heat, or like the sensitiveness of the photographers plate, or the thermometer or barometer.

As to the wonderful arrangement in plants for the propagation of their species, this cannot possibly be accounted for on the ground of their intelligence. There is nothing wonderful in the vegetable kingdom, or in the lower animal kingdom, in regard to their generation, or excelled in the generation of their own species; and be it specially observed, that the process of generation is carried on without the intelligence and sometimes in spite of the will of the mother. The preservation of the offspring in our own species up to a certain date, is automatic. Where the highest order of intelligence is developed, it is found to have no control in regard to this; and by what logic are we to deduce that the generation of the plant, be it ever so wonderful, exhibits any mind in it? The power that acts, and the mind that directs in this case, is the might and the spirit of the great Creator. "As thou knowest not the way of the Spirit or how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child, even so thou knowest not the works of God who maketh all." Eccl. xi. 5. The part that the animal or vegetable has in the work is as the hammer and tongs in the hands of the workman. "Consider the lilies of the field," says Christ; "they toil not, neither do they spin," "Your heavenly Father feedeth them." Here is the solution of the mystery. Tis the God of heaven that creates, and Sir Isaac Newton, and a worm is his handiwork. The works of God are in direct communication with his eternal throne. With a faith like this we can lean back comfortably, and repose on the arm of the Creator. There is no necessity for guardian angels round the head the hairs of which are numbered by Omnipotence. The promise and potency of life in every form of matter which has been quoted by Antioch Disciple from Tyndall, I hope to be able to reply to at some future period, in an article entitled "The Word of God."

J. L. GILLETLY.

Truth is Important.

"What if it is true?" we are often asked when pressing the claims of some great Bible doctrine on the attention of our religious neighbors. Widen the question and put in the mouth of an infidel: "What if the Bible is true? Is God's word." Then infidelity as a lawful conclusion, is a monstrous lie, and everyone holding the infidel creed is exposed to the wrath of that God whom the Bible reveals. If such a fearful result follows the rejection of the Book as an inspired system of truth, and the acceptance of it simply as a revelation from heaven, does not make one a Christian, then it is true that some things taught in it as the ground of faith and the rule of obedience must be absolutely essential to salvation. There is, therefore, great danger of standing out against truth vital to Christianity. The least truth—if I may so speak—in God's word, is important, and the error or falsity which might supplant it in the mind of man, would be entirely worthless if not pernicious. The great truths of revelation have been bartered for monstrous errors, which, when embodied in religious systems, have blasted and blighted the nobler faculties of man's nature. The history of the church shows this. Evil communications corrupt good manners, says Paul. To say the resurrection was past, was a word or discourse which "eat as a canker" and, "overthrew the faith of some." To embrace the doctrine of the soul's immortality in lieu of the resurrection, as some did at Corinth, involved the question of future salvation. In view of the above statements, what shall we say of the professed Christian church of to-day, who, claiming that they have immortality by creation and birth, reject the promise of life in Christ, and to such extent make void the covenant. This is a very serious matter.

JOHN L. WITHEE.

Vol. XXII No. 26 June 30, 1875

My Prayer.

With Thee, my God, alone
I bow before thy throne.
And all my sins confess—
My faults and waywardness—
My coldness in the cause—
Digression from thy laws—
My want of fervent love
To Thee, my God above.

Through Him who died for me
I make this humble plea;
His precious blood alone
For sin and guilt atone.
O God, through Him forgive
My sins, and let me live;
Oh, cleanse and make me pure,
May I, O Lord, endure
The trials by Heaven sent
Knowing for good they're meant;
Whate'er their shape or form—
Tempest or cloud or storm—
Bereavements, want, distress,
Are sent by Thee to bless.

I offer now to Thee—
Though small it all may be—
The words of grateful praise—
The strength of vouthful days—
The service of my life
In labor, toil, and strife.

Now for thy church I pray:
Through all the evil day,
May thy protecting care
Guard from the tempter's snare—
Keep from the paths of sin—
Oh make her pure within;
Death and worldly pride—
May they be crucified;
For truth may she contend
Until her conflicts end—
Until the cross gives way
To crowns of that bright day,—
Until the spotless bride
Is by the Bridegroom's side.

The Two Witnesses.

ISRAEL AND THE CHURCH.

1. The Book of Revelation abounds in symbols, signs or representations of moral things, by the properties of natural things, a mode of instruction frequently employed by all the "holy men of God, who spoke (or wrote) as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." And so of the "two witnesses," who were to prophesy "a thousand two hundred and three score days," (a day for a year) "clothed in sack cloth;" (mourning and distress) "who are the two olive trees, and the two candle sticks standing before the God of the earth?" Rev. xi. 3, 4.

2. At what time these "two witnesses" commenced their prophecy, or testimony for God, in the Apocalyptic programme of future events, "according to the eternal purpose which He purposed in Christ Jesus our Lord," (Eph. iii. 11.) we can not determine with exactitude. But somewhere, doubtless, between A. D. 493, and 533; the former being the date of the establishment of the Saracen empire over Asia and the Holy Land, and the latter, that of the erection of the Mosque of Omar, on the very site where ones proudly stood the temple of God.

3. Since this complete "overspreading of abominations," (Dan. ix. 27.) Israel and the church, "clothed in sackcloth" have been Jehovah's only "two witnesses." His only "two olive trees." Precious plant. See Jer. xi 16; Hos. xiv. 6–7; Rom. xi. 17. And his only "two candlesticks." Light heavens to the Nations. See Rev. i. 20.

4. "These have power to shut heaven." To Israel and the church only, have belonged miraculous power; and to them it will yet pertain in greater fulness than formerly. The apostles possessed but "the first fruits of the Spirit." Rom. viii. 23; Joel ii. 28–32.

5. They will soon "have finished their testimony." The Beast (an ecclesiastico-politico-power, soon to be developed,) "shall make war against them, and shall overcome them, and kill them." (Disfranchised and ostracised, with dreadful persecutions, for the prophetic period of "three days and a half.") When "they that dwell upon the earth shall rejoice over them, make merry," &c. But "the triumphing of the wicked is short."

6. The initial of the development of this Beast "out of the bottomless pit," no doubt, is now seen in the present attitude of the Pope and Bismark. Though, thus killed,—rendered powerless, without influence,—Israel and the Church "will not be put in graves,"—will not be hidden from view. But "their dead bodies shall lie in the street of the great city, which is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt, where our Lord was crucified,"—the government of the Beast, the perfected Anti-Christ, the full grown Man of Sin, "whom the Lord will consume with the spirit of his mouth, and shall destroy with the brightness of his coming," at the end of the "three days and a half." 2 Thess. ii. 8.

7. "And after three days and a half the spirit of life from God entered into them, and they stood upon their feet; and they heard a great voice from heaven, saying unto them, Come up hither; and they ascended up to heaven in a cloud," &c. Which symbolically represents the exaltation and honor of Israel and the church above and over their enemies. As the Lord swore to Abraham, "thy seed shall possess the gate of his enemies."

8. Then follows "a great earthquake,—a terrible shock and consternation among the allied powers of the Beast. "The tenth part of the city" (mystic Babylon) falls, and "seven thousand" of her men are slain. "For, behold, the Lord will come with fire, and with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire. For by fire and by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh; and the slain of the Lord shall be many. For strong is the Lord God that judgeth her." Isa. lxvi. 15, 16; Rev. xviii.

9. Then shall be heard from every valley, hill, and mountain top, the jubilant acclaim, "The kingdoms of this world are become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ; and He shall reign forever and ever."

10. Then the kingdom of Israel will be restored, the church glorified by the crucified One, and a thousand promises and prophecies made in behalf of Israel and the church within the last three thousand years, be glorified in the accomplishment of this one,—"Arise and thrash, O daughter of Zion; for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass; and thou shalt beat in pieces many people; and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth." Micah iv. 13. D. F. SALLEY.

MIDWAY, ARK.

Anti-Christ.

To nearly every Christian, there is subject which has called and received considerable attention, and that is "Who or what is Anti-Christ?" Many and super-abundant have been the proofs adduced, both from Scripture and history, showing beyond a peradventure, that the anti-christ is nothing more nor less than papacy. What with the prophesied period of its use, and the bowing before and support of it by the kings, the making of war by it, and the subduing of the saints, and the shedding of the blood of saints and martyrs and becoming drunk therewith. The taking of the name, which alone and only belongeth to God the Father: "Our most holy Father," and "Our most holy Lord the Pope," thus "opposing and exalting itself above all that is called God." And still unsatisfied with this blasphemy, declares to an astonished world that he is "infallible." If all this cannot convince us who as to anti-christ is, I fear we never will be convinced. Has he not sat in the "Temple of God?" "Know ye not that ye are the temple of God?" 1 Cor. iii. 17. "For ye are the temple of the living God." 2 Cor. vi. 17. If we (the church) then are the "temple of God," has not the Papacy sat therein, and claimed to be our "head" which Christ alone is? Have we not obeyed the voice which said, "Come out of her my people?" Is it not the very city wherein it was foretold anti-christ would sit, namely Rome. "That great city which (then did) reigneth over the kings of the earth." Rev. xvii. 18. Nay is not the very grandeur described with which it bedecks itself? Nay morell is not the very colors in which it is arrayed foretold? "Purple and scarlet color." All this and much more has been spoken and written, time and time again, and much more satisfactorily than I could ever undertake to do. But it is possible that I am betraying my ignorance, that I trust to a good purpose,) when I say I have never heard spoken of, or seen written about, what I conceive to be one of the main links of the great chain of evidence. Nay more, it sharpens the very finger that points toward the Papacy as anti-christ. The apostle John wrote, "And every spirit that confesseth not Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God, and this is that spirit of anti-christ whereof ye have heard that it should come and even now already it is in the world." 1 John iv. 3. "For many deceivers are entered into the world, who confess not that Jesus is come in the flesh. This is a deceiver and an anti-christ. 2 John v. 7.

I may state that of late I felt somewhat desirous of knowing to a certainty what the Roman Catholic doctrine of the "Immaculate Conception" really was, and was fortunate enough to purchase (for the book is scarce) the Pope's Bull defining the dogma. Previous to this I had always supposed that it was the conception of Christ that was alluded to as being immaculate, and yet I thought it singular that if it was that, why somuch ado about it? But here I have only shown my ignorance. It was not Christ that was born without the aid of a man, that is alluded to at all; but it is that the Blessed Virgin Mary, was born immaculate, of different flesh, and of a different nature from the rest of mankind. To give the whole "Bull" to you to publish, would consume too much of your space and might spoil your appetites; but I will give you only some of the "tenderest steakes" from his ponderous body. You will understand, of course, the bull itself is in Latin, but I have it in four languages, and among them the English, translated by John McHale, Roman Catholic Bishop of Tuam, Ireland. The italics and emphasis are mine. The first I give, are are a few treating upon the point of Mary being free from original sin. The church has honored her:

"By a specially appointed mass, by which the singular prerogative of the Virgin, her complete exemption from every hereditary sin;"

and

"The Blessed Virgin Mary, who through the prevenient grace of the Holy Ghost, had been preserved free from original sin;"

and

"So far, and away surpassing all others, her purity, sanctity and entire freedom from every stain of sin."

And again to show that the Papacy makes her a new kind of creature, see:

"That the soul of the Blessed Virgin Mary, during her creation, and at the moment of its infusion in the body, was enriched with grace of the Holy Ghost, and was preserved free from original sin."

"And that all body by nature, and entirely unconscious of any stain, she came like the morning star into the world, all splendid and sparkling, in her immaculate conception, to stand forth a miracle which could not be described, coming from the hands of God, may the center and sun of all other miracles—a mother worthy of even God himself."

And,again, to prove that the Roman church believes her higher in her creation than any other creature:

"Immaculate, and in every respect immaculate (innocent) and the most perfectly innocent, undefiled and completely undefiled, holy, and entirely removed from all contamination of sin, all pure, all inviolate, may the model itself, it may be said, of purity and innocence, more beauteous than beauty itself, more graceful than gracefulness, more holy than holiness, that she alone was holy and most pure in mind and body. As she soared above integrity and virginity, and wholly constituted the abode of all the graces of the Holy Ghost, and, with the exception of God alone, she is superior to all created beings; fairer and more beauteous, and more holy than even the cherubim and seraphim and the entire host of angels."

"The church has in truth held up the conception of this Virgin Mary as singular, wonderful, and completely foreign to and far away from the original conception of the rest of mankind, and in itself entirely holy and deserving of worship."

I fear I have already trespassed, or I would show you how they even go to show that the Virgin Mary was even superior in her creation, to Eve before the fall. That her blood, and her flesh, was the source from whence Christ derived his, and was consequently superior to ours, thus proving, if true, that he did not come in the flesh at all; but that he was clothed with a kind of flesh which we cannot understand nor comprehend; consequently not the flesh that constitutes Christ as the Son of Man. Another question I will ask and then I am done. What becomes of the doctrine set forth by some, that anti-christ will deny Christ altogether? That anti-christ will come declaring himself to be Christ? My Bible teaches me that he will claim the porogatives of Christ by exalting himself, yet agreeing that Jesus is Christ, but denying his birth to have been in the flesh. Does not the Papacy fill the bill? Does he not claim to be "head of the church?" Does he not constitute himself a mediation between God and man? Does not the Pope come in the flesh, to do for us what Christ in his superior creation could not do? namely, speak to us as the Son of Man. All praise to God, for our Lord Jesus Christ was "made of a woman, made under the law," (Gal. iv. 4) "touched with the feeling of our infirmities, and was in all points tempted like as we are, yet without sin." Heb. iv. 15. This Son of Man, was also by virtue of his Father, the Son of God, and my prayer for, and exhortation to all is, "Let us come boldly unto the throne of grace that we may obtain mercy, and find grace to help in time of need," and without going to Rome to get it.

Your brother in this Christ,
JOHN DONALDSON, JR.

Presbyterian Sentiment.

The following resolutions relating to the common schools of the country were introduced during the late session of the Presbyterian General Assembly, held at Cleveland, Ohio. They were offered by Rev. J. S. Noble, of New Jersey, and have the right ring:

Resolved, That the continuous, persisted, and repeated efforts of the Papists throughout the country, under the tutelage, direction, and advice of the Papal hierarchy, to obtain control of the school funds in the several States of the Union, or to have a portion of said school funds diverted from the legal and legitimate uses to which said funds are pledged, in order to devote the money to the support of Papistical schools, demand from all Protestant Christians of every denomination, and every citizen of the United States opposed to a union of church and state, resolute, determined, and combined effort and unceasing watchfulness to prevent the success of insidious attempts now being made in all sections of the country, by the adherents of the Papacy, to secure control of the school money. And it is hereby recommended by the General Assembly of the Presbyterian Church that all attempts to subvert our school funds or divert any portion of the various school funds in any of the states in the Union to, or for the use of, any church or sect, shall be resisted and prevented by all legal and honorable means.

Resolved, That the outcry of the Papal hierarchy against what they call our "Godless schools," can with far more justice and greater propriety be applied to the schools they have instituted. In the common schools of our country the pure Word of God is read without comment, while in the Papistical schools the Bible is excluded, and dogmas and traditions of men are substituted for the commandments of God."—National Protestant.

Conference Report.

Conference met according to appointment, June 3, at six P. M., Brother E. Hoyt spoke on the saint's victory. 1 Cor. xv. 54, 57. "Death is swallowed up in victory." "But thanks be to God who giveth us the victory through our Lord Jesus Christ."

E. Miller, E. Hoyt, and D. F. Spencer were appointed a committee of arrangements.

Friday, met at nine A. M., for Conference. At half past ten brother J. A. Simonds spoke on the one motive of the Gospel. In the afternoon business meeting, introduced by singing and reading the Word. The secretary and treasurer's reports were read and accepted. It was moved by O. R. L. Crozier that the executive board be limited to $1.50 per day as compensation for evangelist labors. The motion passed, but was re-considered, and the following substitute passed in its place: "That executive board are instructed to employ an efficient evangelist to devote his time to the work at such compensation as it may require, and that they employ such of our resident speakers to assist in the work as they may deem proper at a compensation not exceeding $1.50 per day. The report of the committee on revising the constitution was read and adopted.

A five P. M., Friday brother Crozier spoke on the subject embodied in 1 Cor. xv. 1–3.

Saturday morning business meeting. A resolution was introduced by brother Crozier, "That we are more than ever convinced of the evil and mischievous tendency of human creeds, and of the sufficiency and convenience of the Bible alone as a definition and guide for religious opinion and practice." This resolution was passed almost unanimously by a rising vote—no one voting against it.

Saturday afternoon brother Wilcox preached "on the liberty wherewith Christ maketh us free." Showing from the history of the church the evil tendency of creeds outside of the Bible. At five P. M., brother W. spoke again on "justification by faith."

On Sunday morning we repaired to the water, when brother Miller immersed for the remission of sins, a young sister Hopkins. Had an interesting time. After the reading of the Word had a good Conference, brethren and sisters exhorting each other in view of "the approaching day." This was followed by brother Wilcox on the subject of the inspiration of the Bible. His arguments for the truth of the Scriptures commended themselves to a large and attentive audience. At one P. M., brother W. gave a clear and original account of "life and immortality brought to light through the Gospel. The death of the Lord was then celebrated in his appointed way.

Our last meeting was at six P. M., Brother Wilcox preaching an appropriate discourse, and leaving an appointment for the next (Monday) evening. He continued his labors for several days with good effect. The only report of evangelical labor during the year was made by brother Miller. The severity of the winter prevented much being done. It is earnestly hoped that more will be done to publish the good news in our state the present year. E. HOYT, Sec'y.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND H. V. REED

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God. * * * Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ; together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the future location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish His Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "OUR REST." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently assist in its circulation If he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would care to see it in others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

Price $5.00. Extra binding $6.00.

THE RESTITUTION.

Here and There.

Here there are tears of sadness,
And fright hard to bear;
There all is joy and gladness,
Without a passing care.

Here there are heavy crosses,
Which weigh the spirit down,
There every brow is circled
With an immortal crown.

Here wars, and strifes, and tumults
Rage on, and never cease;
There not a thought can ruffle
The deep celestial peace.

Here worn with anxious toiling,
Our brows weary grow;
There rest is one with service,
And work is but repose.

Here fairest buds of promise
Droop in the stormful showers;
There, in their perfect beauty,
Are never-fading flowers.

Here there are separations
That almost break the heart;
There loved ones never part, and never Know what it is to part.

Here oft in bitter anguish
We weep from day to day;
There God's own hand so gently
Wipes all our tears away.

Here sin and imperfection
The purest actions blight;
There holy as the angels
Appear each white-robed saint.

Here we a little longer
Must life's brief story tell;
There in the many mansions
We shall forever dwell.

Stone Witnesses.

WHAT SOME OLD STONES SAY ABOUT AN OLD BOOK.*

[The following is the substance of a Lecture delivered a few years since "to some working men and working women, in the Ragged School Union Lecture-house," England, by Harriett Tilyard, Honorary Secretary to the Manchester Ragged Schools. When delivered it was illustrated with numerous engravings. It has been published in book form by Morgan and Scott, London, and from their work we copy.—EDITOR.]

INTRODUCTORY.

I purpose telling you what some old stones say about an old book; and as I do not wish to mystify you, but to speak plainly, I may say at once, that the old book is none other than the Bible.

Now, do not turn away under the mistaken notion that I am about to give you a dry sermon. It is quite an error to fancy that no one can speak of the Bible without "preaching." Only those who do not know the Bible call it a dry book. To know it, is to love it; to love it is to be happy, for it tells us of those things that make for our peace and add no sorrow.

It has become fashionable in this nineteenth century to cast a doubt upon portions of its history, and to deny many of its facts. We have arrived at a perilous time. Notions are now openly advocated that formerly some men would have shuddered to have thought of. It is, in fact, an age of open infidelity, or of secret doubt. Now all this is the result, in a great measure, of professing Christians having acknowledged certain points of doctrine and belief, without knowing upon what those points have rested; taking things upon trust, as it were, or upon the mere statement of another. They hold to them, simply because they have been brought up in them, having learned them from their parents. They have never searched for themselves, so as to be able to give a reason for the hope that is in them; and so, when cavillers and would-be sceptics arise, proposing the most unreasonable doubts and superficial difficulties, they have eagerly grasped at them, and founded upon them a reason for indifference or positive unbelief.

If we were only candid, we should at once acknowledge that, upon whatever class of evidence we may choose to rely, there is no book which can bring such a mass of concurrent testimony in its favor as the Bible. Whether external or internal, direct or circumstantial, every kind of evidence only tends to prove its complete truthfulness. In spite of all attempts by clever infidels or learned sceptics, the glorious facts remain indisputable and unconvertible. Whilst theory after theory has exploded and vanished in thin air, facts and circumstances have arisen and come up every day, all testifying that "Thy Word, O God, is truth."

Now, I want you to travel with me in thought to Bible lands, and there to recall Bible facts. I want you to read upon the very spot, "line upon line, here a little, there a little," all blending and forming one harmonious whole—a clear line of testimony to the truth of "Moses and the prophets." The stones shall be our teachers, and modern science shall be our interpreter. Heathen kings and Arab tradition shall tell us strange things; and the men of Nineveh, the kings of Assyria, the god's of the heathen, shall all bear witness to the truth of God's Word. And as we travel in these interesting paths, let us ask the aid of the Holy Spirit, not only that we may be interested and instructed, but that we may be able to testify with the Psalmist of Israel, "The entrance of thy Word giveth light."

THE STONES OF EGYPT.

Let us suppose ourselves to have travelled from the noisy city of Cairo, up the Nile, as far as Memphis—once the capital of Egypt—now a green plain dotted with groves of palm trees.

Scarcely a vestige of its former greatness remains, unless it be that colossal figure of Rameses, the great and mighty conqueror, now laying on its face amidst a group of palm-trees—broken and debased, like the power of bygone Egypt. "How are the mighty fallen!" instinctively rises to our lips: and when we remember the proud tyrant in his greatness and grandeur, how terribly true the prophet's words now read: "Son of man, I have broken the arm of Pharaoh, king of Egypt; and, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed." Ezek. xxx. 21. Looking out beyond, over the African range, we see the Pyramids—those "desolate places" of Job—that the kings and princes of Egypt loved to build. There they are in groups—Dashur, Sakkara, Abousir, Ghizeh—the Sphinx guarding them with battered visage, like some grim sentinel.

We choose Sakkara, and make our way to the greatest pyramid of the group, the tomb of Pharaoh Apophis. By its side is the tomb of a prince, whose name and titles are in hieroglyphic writing. The name is "Eltsaph," and from amidst his many titles we choose two, "Director of the king's granaries," and the other is an Egyptian title "Abrech."†

This signifies a sort of viceroy or high officer—if not the highest officer of the state. He was something approaching to our lord mayor, and like him, was distinguished by a "chain of office" and a signet ring.

What has this to do with the old Book?

Pharaoh Apophis reigned in Egypt in Joseph's time; and if we turn to our "old book" (Gen. xlii.) and read the history of Joseph, we find how, "because the Lord was with him," he rose from the degraded position of a dungeon slave to the highest point of honor in the land of Egypt, was made "Director of the Royal Granaries," rode in the king's second chariot, attired in his state robes of silk, with his chain of gold about his neck, the signet-ring upon his finger, and before whom the royal heralds cried, "Abrech," to announce his approach.

And still further is the name "Eltsaph" an indication of identity:—it means "he came to save." And if we look at the name given to Joseph—it was Zaphnath-Paaneah, a word, like Abrech, that our translators failed to understand, because it is purely Egyptian—it means "Savior of the Age." And it was fitting that he who saved the country from famine, and made his name to be known among all nations, he to whom the proud Pharaoh had said "Only on the throne will I be greater than thou," should have a tomb next that of the king in his death.

But how could Joseph's tomb be in Egypt, when his body was buried in Shechem? To this I reply, that the kings and princes built their tombs during their lifetime; and in more than one instance, where the builder died before its completion, he had been buried amidst his unfinished work. So Joseph would have his tomb; and at his death the physicians embalmed his body, "put him in a coffin in Egypt," and there it remained until "that night"—that dreadful night of the Exodus—when in spite of all the terrible surroundings, and amidst all the hurry and distress, the Israelites did not forget his dying injunction; for "Moses took the bones of Joseph with him," and carefully were they tended and borne through all their dreary wanderings, until they reached Shechem. Where they buried him. This, then, is what one old stone says about the old book.

Next we enter one of the royal tombs. It is hardly possible to realize the wonderful appearance presented by the interior of these tombs; the colors, glowing in all the freshness of the varied tints, seem but as the work of yesterday, whilst "the eye becomes involved in endless processions of Jackal-headed divinities, mummies, serpents, meandering above, below, around; white and blue, and red and blue, legs and arms and wings, spreading in enormous forms at last over the ceiling, beneath which lies the granite sarcophagus, and within that the coffin of the king."‡

But in the one we have now entered is a painting, beyond all the others distinguished by its peculiarity. It represents an ark or boat or rushes, floating on the river Nile, and within it lies an infant with the head of a hawk.§

Now by this we understand the painting to mean, that a wonderful child was thus discovered—the hawk's head signifying the highest wisdom and at once our thoughts are carried back to the narrative of the old book, where we read of the little Hebrew child placed in an ark of bulrushes, and laid among the flags of the river Nile, found by the tenderest and carried to the king's daughter, and by her named Moses, and adopted to be her son: and who was trained in all the wisdom of the Egyptians, and became "mighty in words and in deeds."

But that is not all, for at Thebes we find an obelisk, on which is written a female name—rather a rare occurrence—"Termuthis," who was Regent—at a period identical with the narrative of our old book; and her titles are given as "Great Royal Sister," "Pharaoh's daughter." Next we ask what these old stones say about an Old Book?

* * * * * * *

We are now at Thebes, which by some is said to be derived from Thebi, "an ark," and we know its ancient name was "No," "No-Amon," "populous No" (Nahum iii. 8,) after Noah. Here too was the seat of the worship of Noah, which was strangely blended with that of the sun.

Here also are the three gigantic statues so well known, and so fully described—the mighty statue of Rameses, fallen and broken, his face disfigured to make millstones for the Arabs; and the two sitting figures of Memphis III., which were reproduced so admirably in the Crystal Palace, but have since been unfortunately destroyed by fire.

Passing by these, we come to a cluster of ruins and sculptured pillars that once formed the magnificent temple of Karnac. Here amidst the many scenes of Pharaoh's exploits, we choose one pillar that has the picture describing Sishak's victories. He is represented with a string of captives, and one of them bears his name, in hieroglyphic writing, "Yahouda Melek," king of Judah. Now, in 1 Kings xiv. 25, 26, we read, "And it came to pass in the fifth year of king Rehoboam, that Shishak king of Egypt came up against Jerusalem; and he took away the treasures of the house of the Lord, and the treasures of the king's house; he even took away all." Here then is the old stone pillar's account of the same event.

Next let us enter the tomb of Roskeere. He was high officer of Pharaoh's court, overseer of public works and buildings. On the walls of this tomb is represented a painting, now well known to all who are interested in these things. There are laborers at work, engaged in brick-making—some carrying clay, others placing the finished bricks in stacks or carrying them away. The majority of the countenances are decidedly Jewish, but there are also some few Egyptians. The persons depicted are dirty and ragged, and degraded in appearance, and are watched over by an Egyptian taskmaster, who, with uplifted rod, is chiding one for being dilatory.

Now this was in the days of Thothmes. It was he who "made the lives of the Israelites bitter with hard bondage, in mortar, and in brick, and in all manner of service in the field," and "did set taskmasters over them to afflict them with burdens" (Exodus i.) It is probable that some of the Egyptians who had incurred the displeasure of Pharaoh were placed to work with the Israelites, and that we have them so engaged. We know that a "mixed rabble" went out of Egypt with the Israelites, *and we have here an explan*ation of the otherwise unintelligible fact of how it came to pass that the Egyptians should mix themselves with the degraded Hebrews; and we also obtain a clue as to who were the "mixed rabble" who went forth with the Israelites at the Exodus. This surely is plain enough in speech to us.

"Oh, that we could only see some of these very bricks!" do you say? Well then, come to the British Museum, and there they are, with Thothmes' own signet upon them; and if you look upon this broken one, you will find it has only a very little chopped straw in it. Why so little? Let the 7th verse of the 5th chapter of Exodus answer,—"Ye shall no more give the people straw to make brick as heretofore; let them go and gather straw for themselves. And the tale of the bricks, which they did make heretofore, ye shall lay upon them; ye shall not diminish aught thereof."

THE EXODE.

The time came for Israel's deliverance from this cruel bondage, and Moses was sent to be their guide. His proud spirit had been humbled, and had been trained by meditation and quiet study in solitude for the office of leader of his people. Under the tuition of his father-in-law, Jethro, his learning and wisdom had been developed, and, perhaps aided by the counsels of the priest, coupled with the traditions handed down from his birth, he may have written the book of Genesis. Thus fitted, he went to the proud Pharaoh with the message from Jehovah. We all know how, by his hand, God wrought signs and wonders which culminated in the death of the first-born and "one night" the children of Israel went up out of the land of Egypt, "about men, besides children, and a mixed multitude went up also with them, and flocks and herds and very much cattle."

First they pitched at Succoth, then at Etham, and lastly at Pi-hahiroth, on the border of the Red Sea, (Exodus xiv. 2,) now called Wady Mousa ("Valley of Moses.) If you travel to the spot, as nearly as the description would indicate, you find a large "cavity" or valley capable of holding two millions of people, and the Arabs call it Wady Tarabeh (the Valley of Nocturnal Travelers.) The "night" of the Exodus was to be "observed of all the children of Israel in all their generations," (Exodus xii. 42,) and here is the spot of their resting, after their nocturnal journey, clearly marked by its Arab name.

Let us note another stone ere we leave the land of Egypt. On a monument we find recorded that the Pharaoh who reigned at the time of the Exodus had a son who died, and that he was succeeded by his second son. Now the elder son died it does not say, but we can supply the facts. On that dreadful night of death, the angel of the Lord went throughout the land and smote all the first-born of Egypt, "from the first-born of Pharaoh that sat on his throne unto the first-born of the captive that was in the dungeon," (Exodus xii. 29,) and stranger still, on the great Sphinx of Ghizeh is written in glowing terms a description of Pharaoh's character, "and then" and there it stops. Why stop so suddenly? Was not his course suddenly stopped, when, amidst the surging waves of the Red Sea, in the midst of his chariots and horsemen he sank to rise no more?

Taking our leave of Egypt we pass over the Red Sea, and at the spot where the dreadful catastrophe probably occurred, just opposite to Pi-hahiroth, is a bay, the north cape of which is called Ras Musa (the Cape of Moses,) and that part of the sea is called by the Arabs "Bahar Kolzum" or the Sea of Destruction. Curiously enough the word Kolzum is but a synonyme for the Hebrew word Bala, which we find used in Exodus xv. 12. Now "Bala" is from an Egyptian root; so is the Arab word "Kolzum." The word used by Moses in describing the event is synonymous with that used by the Arabs in distinguishing the scene where it occurred; and as we see this remarkable coincidence we read with increasing interest the brilliant description Moses has given of the miracle, because we find the "testimony of the rocks" speaks the same thing in nearly the same words.

We now cross the Red Sea, and arriving on the other side, find ourselves surrounded by traces of Mosaic history. Take the six landing-places, and interpret their Arabic names:—

1. Ayun Musa.
"The Wells of Moses."
2. Wady Rahoub.
"The valley of the people."
3. Wady Kudeirah.
"The valley of the Multitude."
4. Wady El-Arabia.
"The valley of the Pilgrims."
5. Wady Sudr.
"The valley of those who came out of the water."
6. Wady Wardan.
"The valley of descent into the water."

"It is needful to say a word for these names, given to these places, not by Bible readers, not by Jews, but by the Arabs, believers in Mahomet and his Koran?

The Cardinal's Oath Again.

His Eminence the Pope claims to have eight millions of loving subjects in the United States. Under pretence of giving them pleasure, but really with a view to strengthening the Papacy in this country, he has given them a Cardinal in the person of McCloskey. In accepting the Cardinalate, the Archbishop was, of course, obliged to conform to the usages of Rome, and take the oath prescribed for those who become princes of the Church. What was the nature of that oath? In what position does it place the American Cardinal towards his own Government? How does it affect his status toward Protestantism in this country? What new obligations has that oath imposed upon him? The obligation was administered in private by Abdegate Roncetti, and its nature has not been made public. The nature of that oath has been confined to the immediate participants, and a very few of the Church dignitaries who were admitted to the ceremony.

The questions we have propounded interest others besides Catholics. Protestants of every denominational name have a right to understand the form and nature of that oath, and how it is to affect themselves or coming posterity. It is too much to expect that Cardinal McCloskey, or the few who were present when the Pope's trusted Envoy administered the oath, will undertake to satisfy our curiosity. Happily, we are not left entirely in the dark. In 1850, Lord Palmerston submitted to the English Parliament the oath taken by Cardinals on assuming office. It contains promises to be faithful and obedient unto St. Peter, the Holy Apostolic Roman Church, the Lord, the Pope and his successors canonically and lawfully elected; to faithfully preserve all secrets entrusted to him as such; to give all possible assistance in retaining, defending, and recovering the Roman Papacy and the regalia of Peter with all might and endeavor, so far as the rights and privileges of his order allow; to direct, defend, and co-operate with the legates and nuncios of the Apostolic See in the territories, churches, and monasteries under his keeping; to strive by every way and by every means to preserve and augment the rights, honors, privileges, and authority of the Holy Roman Bishop, the Pope, and to observe all decrees and ordinances as to visiting the thresholds of the Apostles at certain prescribed times. The following are the concluding words of this strongly binding oath: "I will seek out and oppose (persecute and fight against) heretics, schismatics against the same our Lord the Pope and his before-mentioned successors with every possible effort."

Romanism is the same the world over. Its purpose is the same everywhere. The Pope stands committed, as have been his predecessors, against freedom of conscience and popular rights. He denounces as heretics and schismatics all who do not yield him obedience, and pronounces upon them the punishment and woe of the second death. Pius IX. is not in love with a republican form of government or with republican institutions. It is not, therefore, to be supposed that he has made an exception in favor of the United States by permitting the newly-created Cardinal to take an oath dissimilar to all others. When Lord Palmerston submitted the oath to Parliament, the servants of Rome contended that the vow against heretics was a matter of form handed down through centuries, and was not considered binding in the extreme meaning of the words. When, we ask, in all sincerity, did Rome change? "A mere matter of form"—handed down through centuries." Was it a matter of form when the Pope excommunicated the English Barons and attempted to annul MAGNA CHARTA, the foundation of English liberty? Was it a matter of form when the Papacy carried fire and sword among the Albigenses—when it massacred the Huguenots—when it burned Wycklifites and Hussites at the stake? Or was it mere matter of form when Lutherans were persecuted for conscience' sake? The spirit of the past dwells in the bosom of Pius IX. Hildebrand was not more arrogant and unyielding. Shut up in the Vatican, he gnashes his teeth with rage, and puts in motion all the machinery at his command against those who oppose him. He hurls his maledictions against all who would preserve civil government and the rights of conscience, and denounces them as "hell-born miscreants and devils."

The Pope is infallible. According to Catholic belief, he cannot err. To him all Protestants are schismatics and heretics. An anti-Catholic in the United States is quite as obnoxious to the Pope as a dissenter in England, France, Spain, or Germany. All are under his harp; and Cardinal McCloskey has taken an oath to obey his Lord the Pope in all things, even to the extirpation of all who do not subscribe to the doctrines of Rome and conform to her worship. His Eminence may not be able to set up an inquisition in New York, or erect the stake and kindle the fagot in Central Park, but he is under obligation so to do whenever the blasting hand of Romanism becomes strong enough to elevate the spiritual above the temporal government.—National Protestant.

From Brother Weeks.

BROTHER HEAD:—

One Sunday evening about twelve months ago, our little gathering was agreeably surprised, on assembling to break bread, to meet a man who had journeyed some two hundred miles with the object of being baptized; our Brother Magruder complied with his request that afternoon, and he returned next day with a light heart to his home in the mountains.

This man was our Brother James Harris, of Lonaconing, and from then till now, he has kept the things concerning the kingdom steadily before his neighbors, in the midst of much opposition, and standing alone in his testimony.

Encouragement came at last, however: two of his neighbors and two of his own family expressed a desire to obey the truth in baptism, but meanwhile sickness had brought him very low. He was unable to take these first fruits of his labor to the water, and so it was that he sent us word to come over and help him, and that your correspondent, at the request of the brethren here, left Baltimore Saturday morning, June ——, on the most agreeable mission.

It was a journey which occupied the entire day, over a road leading through scenes of surpassing beauty; winding *along the broad valley of the Shenan*doah, creeping slowly over great bridges that span its swift but shallow waters, rattling through the gloomy tunnels to emerge again in the uncertain shadows of the high hills, whose rocky walls rose to a perpendicular height above us; great monuments are they of a past age, stately and sublime, and though, in these sandal days of speculation, their base is smirched over with the unseemly puffs of the modern quack; yet appealing to those nobler instincts of our nature, and pointing us upward in silent reverence to Him who spreadeth out the heavens as a tent to dwell in, and layeth the foundations of the earth.

We had a book before us issuing from the school of Darwin, Spencer & Co., on the origin of created things, but it ill accorded with the evidences around us; of a truth "the heavens declare the glory of God and the firmament sheweth his handy work!"

Half past 8 o'clock in the evening, brought us to Lonaconing, where Brother Harris was awaiting our arrival, and having refreshed ourselves after our journey, in the house of our (now) Brother Smith, we adjourned to the school house, where, according to appointment, we spoke on the glad tidings of the kingdom. Quite a number were gathered together, the majority of whom proved to be "Campbellites," and much general discussion followed our remarks.

On the following morning, being the first day of the week, at half after 10 o'clock, we assembled for baptism. It was on the bank of a mountain stream, at the foot of a dam; around us were the great mountains of the Alleghany with their stores of mineral wealth, which affords employment to the town of Lonaconing and its surroundings. Assembled to hear us, were, perhaps 150 persons, who gave us their marked attention while we explained the nature and purpose of the act in which we were about to participate. Amidst the greatest silence and most earnest attention of all assembled, we stepped down into the water, and there, on the confession of their faith in the glad tidings of the kingdom of God, and in Jesus of Nazareth as the Christ, we baptized the wife and daughter of our Brother Harris, and our (now) Brother Smith and his wife. It was a time of rejoicing among us and mutual congratulation. Weak in body, scarcely able to stand by us, our Brother Harris beheld in those four as they rose from the waters, a goodly recompense for his past labor, and an encouragement for the future. Filled with gratitude to the great Giver of every good and perfect gift, and with renewed faith in his wisdom and love, we adjourned to Brother Smith's house, and there for the first time in Lonaconing, remembered the Lord's death and resurrection in the breaking of bread.

At half after 1 o'clock, we held a meeting in the school house, for the purpose of discussing the question of the constitution of man. A meeting, which, from the great earnestness with which these questions were considered, I trust, was profitable to all concerned. That evening our brethren, Smith and Harris, introduced us to the mysteries of a coal mine, and sitting in one of the chambers hewn by our Brother Smith, from the solid coal, we talked together of the wondrous agreement of God's word and works, of his creative power, of the order of his creation, and our brethren recounted some few facts which have come beneath their notice in the depths of the earth's strata, which confirm the Genesis of Moses.

And so our share in the work came to an end. We left our brethren and sisters in their mountain home, a feeble body, but strong in faith, to hold up the standard of our Lord, to fight the good fight, and we trust lay hold on eternal life in the coming kingdom.

Should any brethren happen to come in the neighborhood of Cumberland, (Baltimore & Ohio railroad), a short trip up the mountains on the Pennsylvania and Cumberland railroad, to Lonaconing, would gain for them a hearty welcome from our brethren, while they would find a field of labor which would well repay their effort.

Should any such chance that way, please enquire for James Harris, he is a man to whom few are strangers.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS,
All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.
Letters for the Editor should be sent to the same place.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the transmutation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

CHARACTER OF.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Future Destiny of the Earth.

"Nevertheless we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness."—2 Peter iii. 13.

We all live, and recognize the phenomena of life; but the wisest philosophers among us are totally ignorant of what life itself is. We are conscious of life, see it in animal, bird and flower, but no man ever solved the mystery of its essence. There are some things, then, here, that, in our present capacities, we are not able to know. The limitations of private knowledge is an interesting problem and the recognition of the fact would stop the impudent assumption and reckless reasoning of inbitted minds.

Is it strange then that it is impossible to communicate in finite thought and still more finite speech, the transcendent truths of the celestial state? Why! you all have had thoughts burning in your brain and sentiments thrilling in your emotional nature which you could not communicate in words. You have longed to tell them; you have yearned to make your dearest friends know the deep sweet love or joy you feel, but have shrunk back in pain and disappointment—almost in anguish—that it was impossible. It would be such a comfort and satisfaction to utter the pent-up emotions of the soul. There is music and poetry and thought and love unutterable in some souls.

We count the broken lyres that rest
Where the sweet wailing singers slumber;
But o'er their silent sister's breast,
The wild flowers, who can number?
A few may strike the magic string,
And noisy Fame is proud to win them;
Alas! for those who never sing
And die with all their music in them.

The earth has undergone many transformations already, improving its condition, adapting it each time to the happy existence of successive higher orders of plants and animals. It is, therefore, rational, scientific as well as scriptural to expect a still further and higher transformation of the earth, adapting it to the happiness and existence of spiritual and immortal and holy beings. No man can say it is impossible, and we have found it probable, not to say certain. The most gorgeous imagery of nature is employed in scripture to describe the future state of the earth. Figuratively, a glorious city prepared by God, comes down to the earth. Its massive foundations are precious stones, its walls jasper, its gates solid pearl, its streets pure gold, like transparent glass. The Lord God Almighty and the Lamb are the glorious temple of the city. Not the sun and moon, but the glory of God, enlightens it, and the Lamb is the light thereof. From the throne flows the river of the water of life, clear as crystal, and along its banks grow the great trees of life, with twelve manner of fruits—one fruit for each month. I understand all this merely to indicate the splendor and perfection of the drapery of the new heavens and the new earth. If God has ordained this old earth, some day, to be inhabited by holy, happy immortal beings, rest assured He will fit it up in palatial splendor befitting the spiritual dignity and holy character of His ransomed family. Can we, who now see matter, in forms of ruby and diamond, in lily and rose, in carmined cloud and autumnal foliage, in the microscopic beauties of a butterfly's wing or the delicate plumage of a ring-dove's neck, question that God can fit up the matter of our globe into subtle and refined and beautiful forms and conditions, fit for the habitations of mortals.

As easily as the same opaque matter in charcoal becomes the flashing diamond; as easily as common dirt is transmuted into the delicate petals of the violet; so easily can God transform our gross earth into a spiritual realm of transcendant beauty. Such I understand the new heaven and earth will be. The details are not given, because, probably, in our present state, we could not comprehend them.

Now, if this earth be thus renovated and garnished with all the opulent splendor and richness of which the Creator of worlds is capable, what objection to making it our eternal abode? I do not dogmatically assert it, but suggest it as a glorious possibility; yes, a rational and scriptural probability. I perceive the queries and objections that may be urged against it. I answer them all in a bundle, "I don't know!" Then I turn on the questioners the ad hominem interrogation: "How do you know that it won't be so? Are you in the secret counsel of God that you know all He will or won't do? Then you are omniscient—that is God! For if there is one thing about the future that you don't know, that one fact may be the renovation and rehabilitation of the earth." Let me now lean back on the granite strength of distinguished minds to support my own thoughts. The great Tholuck says: "The idea that the perfected kingdom of Christ is to be transferred to heaven, is properly a modern notion." President Hitchcock declares: "The wide-spread opinion that heaven will be a sort of airy elysium where the present laws of nature will be unknown, and where matter, if it exist at all, will exist only in its most attenuated form, is a notion to which the Bible is a stranger." "The earth will be renovated by the final conflagration and become the home of the righteous." Dr. Knapp in his work on theology says: "We expect a new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, is an entirely new, altered, and beautiful abode for man to be built from the ruins of his former dwelling place, as the future habitation of the pious. This will be very much the same way as a more perfect and immortal body will be reared from the one we now possess." President Griffin writes: "It is a most animating thought that this visible creation which sin has marred, —which the polluted breath of men and devils has defiled, and which, by sin, will be reduced to utter ruin—will be restored by our Jesus—will arise from its ruins in ten-fold splendor and shine with more illustrious glory than before it was defaced by sin." The learned Dr. John Pye Smith says: "I cannot but feel astonished that any serious and intelligent man should have his mind fettered with the common, I might call it the vulgar notion of a proper destruction of the earth; and some seem to extend the notion to the whole solar system and even the entire universe, applying the idea of extinction of being, a reduction to nothingness. . . . . But I confess myself unable to find any evidence for it in nature, reason, or Scripture. . . We according to his promise, look for a new heavens and a new earth wherein dwelleth righteousness." Wesley discusses the question elaborately and thus summarizes: "For all the earth will be a more beautiful paradise than Adam ever saw. Hence will arise an unmixed state of holiness and happiness far superior to that which Adam enjoyed in paradise." After all this, if I should be wrong in my notion, I am quite proud of the distinguished company I am found in. It is quite assuring for ordinary men threading the realm of mysteries, to feel the kindly touch and hear the sympathetic words of renowned spirits. But does the Word of God still more cheer us? Revelation by John gives us more suggestions of the celestial world than any other Scripture, and that seems to lean to our view. The very anthems of eternity resound with our doctrine. The new song is vocal with it. The redeemed in bliss are singing it. "And they sung a new song saying, Thou art worthy; . . . . . for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood, out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation, and hast made us, unto our God, kings and priests, and we shall reign on the earth." Mingling thus with the adoration of Christ, is the announcement that the new earth is to be their abode. There is no intimation of home in some distant and foreign world but a happy residence in the old renovated homestead.

Again hear the revelator: "And I saw a new heaven and a new earth, for the first heaven and the first earth were passed away and there was no more sea, and I, John, saw this holy city New Jerusalem coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. And I heard a great voice out of heaven saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he shall dwell with them and God himself shall be with them and be their God." The natural inference of this passage, is that the enriching bliss of the future state comes down from heaven to earth. There is no intimation that the righteous will be translated from earth to some airy Elysium in some unknown region of the universe. God tabernacles with men. God Himself shall be with them. Christ went to prepare a place for us. The city descended "prepared as a bride adorned for her husband." What amazing scenes! What unconceived splendors now greet each other! The new earth, beautiful in bloom, garnished in glory, greets the descending New Jerusalem—perhaps as the glorious capital of the perfected kingdom—and over this effulgent empire, populated with redeemed immortals God our Savior reigns in majesty and glory! Things begin to mass themselves in new and consistent harmonies!

What more fit place for the King of kings, in a material body now spiritualized and glorified, to reign over his saints in material bodies now spiritualized and glorified, than this ancient empire of material earth, were its redeemed and they regenerated and resurrected, now spiritualized and glorified in all the splendor and beauty amid which the Father would honor and enthrone his adorable Son and emparadise his saints? Take away the sin and curse from our earth; let God by some evolution, after or through conflagration, purify, re-combine, and re-beautify it with more than the loveliness of its bridal morning; let Him expiate over it the splendors and garnishments expressive of his glory and power. Again invoking the song of morning stars, and the exulting shout of the sons of God, let Him again fill it with the fullness of his own glorious presence, communing with man face to face; let the slimy trail of the old serpent be obliterated, and every trace of corruption be wiped away; let us know that there will be beauty to delight the eye, and music to regale the ear, and truth to ennoble and enrich the soul; let it be realized that there will be no more sickness or sorrow, or disease or death, trials or tears; let it be fully felt that there we meet all that are dear in love and sacred in friendship, to enjoy rapt intercourse in blessed converse, gladdening each other with benignant smiles, touching and thrilling each other's heart with the soft and soothing melody of old familiar accents; and this earth will be fair enough for the saint's eternal delight, pure enough for their everlasting abode! We would ask no better heaven, and the enraptured soul cries out, "It is enough! I shall dwell forever in the Paradise of God and beneath the pavilion of his glory.

And to my thought there are reasons why this earth would be preferable, as our final abode, to any world above us. Here we are born, live, love, and die. Here we are born again and here is the scene of our conflicts. Here is the terrific battlefield of destiny; and where could the victorious warriors enjoy sweeter rest than in the realm in which they conquered? Here happened the great catastrophe which plunged our race in sin and ruin. Here was accomplished the great salvation which reconciled us with God. Here to-day the glorious Gospel struggles toward its ultimate triumph; and when the final victory comes I can conceive of no place more fit and satisfying, to enjoy its everlasting blessedness, and shout our paeans of joy, and crown and celebrate the praises of our conquering King! A poetic sense of fitness and justice compels me to this. To my thoughts, for Christ to abdicate this earth is a surrender to Satan. Here he dragged men into revolt. Here he has tempted, and seduced, and destroyed. To admit the popular conception that this earth is to be utterly destroyed, that the vast expanse of worlds to be broken up and buried in dreadful chaos, amid the universal wreck of matter and crash of worlds; that yon blazing canopy which Jehovah wears as a garment of glory is to be rent asunder, torn in shreds and flung in tatters on the wild tempest of desolation, is too horrible a concession to the triumph of the princes of darkness! Could America give up Bunker Hill, and Lexington, and Yorktown? Could she surrender the soil crimsoned with the blood and cemented by the heroism of her sons? Will Christ think less of the battlefields and martyr scenes of his church? Here, where for so many centuries the destroyer has had his empire and throne; here is the direst place for the Kingdom and throne of the Deliverer. How inspiring the conception that where sin has blasted the joys and debased the souls of men, here holiness should have blissful dominion in everlasting healing! How grand the thought that on the very spot where death now triumphs and robs us of our dearest, there the resurrection and the life should reign in endless immortality! How completely this idea answers to the voice of the enthroned Christ, "Behold I create all things new."

John Foster on "Decision of Character."

John Foster's truly capital "Essay on Decision of Character" is a book that might be very profitably read by all our readers. In our opinion it abounds in a vast amount of good sense. His Letter IV. in this Essay, speaks of courage as an essential part of a decisive character. We extract a portion of the letter of which we write:—

"After the illustrations on the last article, it will seem but a very slight transition when I proceed to specify Courage as an essential part of the decisive character. An intelligent man, adventurous only in thought, may sketch the most excellent scheme, and after duly admiring it, and himself as its author, may be reduced to say, 'What a noble spirit that would be which would dare to realize this! A noble spirit! is it I?' And his heart may answer in the negative, while he glances a mortified thought of inquiry round to recollect persons who would venture what he dares not, and almost hopes not to find them. Or if by extreme effort he has brought himself to a resolution of braving the difficulty, he is compelled to execrate the timid lingerings that still keep him back from the trial. A man endowed with the complete character, might say, with a complete consciousness, as remote from the spirit of bravado as it is from timidity, 'Thus, and thus, is my conviction and my determination; now for the phantoms of fear; let me look them in the face; their menacing glare and ominous tones will be lost on me; I dare do all that may become a man. I trust I shall firmly confront everything that threatens me while prosecuting my purpose, and I am prepared to meet the consequences of it when it is accomplished. I should despise a being, though it were myself, whose agency could be held enslaved by the gloomy shapes of imagination, by the haunting recollection of a dream, by the whistling or howling of the winds, by the shriek of owls, by the shades of midnight, or by the threats or frowns of man. I should be indignant to feel that, in the commencement of an adventure, I could think of nothing but the deep pit by the side of the way where I must walk, into which I may slide, the mad animal which it is not impossible that I may meet, or the assassin who may lurk in a thicket of under wood. And I disdain to compromise the interests that rouse me to action, for the privilege of an ignoble security.'

"As the conduct of a man of decision is always individual, and often singular, he may expect some serious trials of courage. For one thing, he may be encountered by the strongest disapprobation of many of his connexions, and the censure of the greater part of the society where he is known. In this case, it is not a man of common spirit that can show himself just as at other times, and meet their anger in the same undisturbed manner as he would meet some ordinary inclemency of the weather; that can, without harshness or violence, continue to effect every moment some part of his design, coolly replying to each ungracious look and indignant voice, 'I am sorry to oppose you; I am not unfriendly to you, while thus persisting in what excites your displeasure; it would please me to have your approbation and concurrence, and I think I should have them if you would seriously consider my reasons; but meanwhile, I am superior to opinion, I am not to be intimidated by reproaches, nor would your favor and applause be any reward for the sacrifice of my object. As you can do without my approbation, I can certainly do without yours; it is enough that I can approve myself; it is enough that I appeal to the last authority in the creation. Amuse yourselves as you may, by continuing to censure or to rail; I must continue to act.'

"The attack of contempt and ridicule is perhaps a still greater trial of courage. It is felt by all to be an abominable thing, when it can in no degree be ascribed to the hardness of either stupidity or confirmed depravity, to sustain for a considerable time, or in numerous instances, the looks of scorn, or an unrestrained shower of taunts and jeers with perfect composure, and proceed immediately after, or at the time, on business that provokes all this ridicule. This invincibility of temper will often make even scoffers themselves tired of the sport; they begin to feel that against such a man it is of poor sort of hostility to joke and sneer; and there is nothing that people are more mortified to spend in vain than their scorn. Till, however, a man shall become a veteran, he must reckon on sometimes meeting this trial in the course of virtuous enterprise. And if, at the suggestion of some meritorious but unprecedented proceeding, I hear him ask, with a look and tone of shrinking alarm, 'But will they not laugh at me?'—I know that he is not the person whom this essay attempts to describe. A man of the right kind would say, 'They will smile, they will laugh, will they? Much good may it do them. I have something else to do than to trouble myself about their mirth. I do not care if the whole neighborhood were to laugh in a chorus. I should indeed be sorry to see or hear such a number of fools, but pleased enough to find that they considered me as an outlaw to their tribe. The good to result from my project will not be less, because vain and shallow minds that cannot understand it are diverted at it and me. What should I think of my pursuits, if every trivial, thoughtless being could comprehend or would applaud them; and of myself, if my needed levity and ignorance for their allies, or could be abashed at their sneers?' . . . .

"But there may be situations where decision of character will be brought to trial against evils of a darker aspect than disapprobation or contempt. There may be the threatening of serious sufferings; and very often to dare as far as conscience or a great cause required, has been to dare to die. In almost all plans of great enterprise, a man must systematically dismiss, at the entrance, every wish to stipulate with his destiny for safety. He voluntarily travels within the precincts of danger; and though it be possible he may escape, he ought to be prepared with the fortitude of a self-devoted victim. This is the inevitable condition on which heroes, travelers, or missionaries among savage nations, and reformers on a grand scale, must commence their career. Either they must allay their fire of enterprise, or abide the liability to be exploded by it from the world.

"The last decisive energy of a rational courage which confides in the Supreme Power is very sublime. It makes a man who intrepidly dares everything that can oppose or attack him within the whole sphere of mortality; who will still press toward his object while death is impending over him; who would retain his purpose unshaken amidst the ruins of the world.

It was in the true elevation of this character that Luther, when cited to appear at the Diet of Worms, under a very questionable assurance of safety from high authority, said to his friends, who conjured him not to go, and warned him by the example of John Huss, whom, in a similar situation, the same pledge of protection had not saved from the fire, "I am called in the name of God to go; and I would go, though I were certain to meet as many devils in Worms as there are tiles on the houses."

A reader of the Bible will not forget Daniel, braving in calm devotion the decree which virtually consigned him to the den of lions; or Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, saying to the tyrant, "We are not careful to answer thee in this matter," when the "burning fiery" furnaces was in sight.—Bible Echo.

The Jordan.

There is no river in the world like the Jordan; none so wonderful in its historic memories, none so hallowed in sacred associations, and none so remarkable in its physical geography. It is emphatically "the river" of the Holy Land. It has been more or less intimately connected with all the great events of Scripture history from the patriarchs to the apostles. Its banks have been the scene of the most stupendous miracles of judgment, power and love, the earth ever witnessed. When the fire of heaven had burnt up Sodom's guilty cities and polluted plain, the waters of the Jordan rolled over them and buried them forever from the face of man. Thrice was the swollen torrent of that river stayed, and its channel divided to let God's people and prophets pass over "dry shod." Once, at the bidding of the man of God, the iron ax rose buoyant from its deep channel, and floated on its surface. Once its waters gave forth healing virtue, as if to prove to the proud Syrian chief the fallacy of his sneering exclamation, "Are not Abana and Pharpar, rivers of Damascus, better than all the rivers of Israel?" Greater still were these miracles of our Lord, which the evangelists have grouped thickly on and around the central lake of the Jordan. There did the storm-tossed billows hear and obey his voice; there did he walk upon the face of the deep; there, obedient to his will, the fishes filled the disciples' nets; along these shores the lame walked, the deaf heard, the blind saw, the sick were healed, lepers were cleansed, the dead were raised to life again. But the most glorious event the Jordan ever witnessed was Christ's baptism; for when he was baptized "the heavens were opened unto him, and he saw the Spirit of God descending like a dove, and lighting upon him;" and when the divine Son was perfectly equipped for his great work of redeeming love, when just about to set out on his glorious mission, the voice of the divine Father pierces the vault of heaven, and proclaims to the astonished and joyful disciples on Jordan's banks the divine approval of both work and worker: "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased." Surely then we may say that every spot along this stream is "holy ground," and that the name Jordan is not only emblazoned on the page of history, but is enshrined in the Christian's heart.

It would almost seem as if nature, or nature's God had from the first prepared this river to be the scene of wondrous events, by giving to its physical geography some wondrous characteristics. Its principal fountain, bursting from the base of Hermon, is like the mouths of other rivers, on the level of the ocean. In descends rapidly through its whole course, and at length empties into the Dead Sea, whose surface has a depression of no less than 1,312 feet. The whole valley of the Jordan is thus a huge rent or fissure in the earth's crust. Though it is not much over a hundred miles in length, at its southern end, along the shores of that mysterious lake we have the climate and products of the tropics, while at its northern end we have a region of perpetual snow.—Herald of Life.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....July 7, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ We are to preach at Remington, Ind., next Sunday. Hope the friends in that vicinity will attend.

☞ Robert Dale Owen, the great exponent of Modern Spiritualism has become hopelessly insane. The deception perpetrated upon himself and others in the Hume and Katie King fraud, was more than his mental powers could stand. Mr. Owen was a man of broad culture, possessed many noble qualities and was undoubtedly honest in his views of Spiritualism. But when it became apparent that his supposed proofs for spirit-life were mere tricks of dishonest mediums he became hopelessly insane.

☞ We spent Sunday, July 4th, with the church in Plymouth. The day was excessively hot, but a goodly number came out to hear the Word. After the morning service we went to Pretty Lake, some three miles distant, and immersed two believers in the name of Christ. In the evening we preached from Gal. i. 11, 12: "But I certify you, brethren, that the Gospel which was preached of me is not after man. For I neither received it of man, neither was I taught it, but by the revelation of Jesus Christ." At close of the discourse we celebrated the death of our Lord. Our society is gaining slowly in numbers and is exerting a good influence in the community.

☞ A brother in New York writes us, that we are not sufficiently comprehensive in our view of the restitution of all things. He not only believes that all men will be restored, but that the whole animal world will gain ultimate victory over death. He quotes in proof of his position, the same texts which are relied upon by our brethren of the restoration view. We shall, therefore, turn him over to their tender mercies. The sacred Word declares of certain characters, that they are "natural brute beasts, made to be taken and destroyed," and that they "shall utterly perish in their own corruption." The same argument that will restore the wicked men, will probably restore the animal world. Our brother is, therefore, respectfully referred to our Universalist friends, who will undoubtedly, extend to him great consideration for his comprehensive view of the mercies of God. As for us, we cannot quite see what particular use there is in raising to life potatoe bugs, grasshoppers, crocodiles, and vultures. Indeed there is no promise of such a state of things, and it is only an extraneous view of certain texts which will lead to such conclusions. It might not be out of place here, to state that John Wesley, the founder of Methodism, rather endorsed this view of the final return to life of the whole animal world. Freeman Clarke, also, the great Unitarian minister of Boston, now teaches that animals hav immortal souls, which will find a place in the future life. Our brother is in quite respectable company, but his view is not supported by the Word of God.

At Hand.

Some have supposed that the kingdom of God must have come on the day of Pentecost, or within a short time thereafter, from the fact that John preached that the kingdom of God was at hand. The same is true of the preaching of Christ. "Repent for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." Others claim that the kingdom of God was set up at the time of the destruction of Jerusalem. They also base their argument upon this expression.

If we look at this phrase as used in other parts of the Bible we shall find that the above stated positions are wholly unfounded. The phrase "at hand" may allude to events hundreds of years distant from the time the expression is made. In Isa. viii. 6, it is stated, when referring to the destruction of Babylon: "Howl ye; for the day of the Lord is at hand, it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty."

This prediction was not fulfilled for nearly two hundred years afterward, and yet it is stated the day of the Lord is at hand. See also Joel ii. 1, 2. The idea in this place seems to refer more to the certainty of the event than to the nearness of time. The same is true of Peter iv. 7, "But the end of all things is at hand; be ye therefore sober and watch unto prayer." Here the time or nearness of the event does not seem to be so much the idea as the absolute certainty of its coming. It is surely coming! There were those in apostolic times who seemed to think that the day was just upon them, and it was this which gave rise to that word of caution by the apostle. "That ye be not soon shaken in mind, or be troubled neither by spirit, nor by word, nor by letter as from us, as that the day of Christ is at hand." Here the phrase "at hand" is from another Greek word and denotes more nearly the idea of real presence. In the phrase "the kingdom of heaven is at hand" the original word for at hand, is eggizo. This word occurs in the following passage. "For the law made nothing perfect, but the bringing in of a better hope did; by the which we draw nigh unto God." And again: "Draw nigh to God and he will draw nigh to you." The same idea is brought out in Luke x. 8, 9. "And into whatsoever city ye enter, and they received you, eat such things as are set before you; and heal the sick that are therein, and say unto them The kingdom of God is come nigh unto you."

The kingdom was near that city in the same sense in which we draw nigh unto God and He draws nigh unto us. The word does not, in these cases refer to nearness as to time, but nearness in the sense of union with God and conformity to his will. So the kingdom was proclaimed to men, it was brought near unto them in the blessed revelations of the Gospel of Christ, and they were made to feel that they could become heirs of an eternal inheritance and sharers of the glorious kingdom. May it not be in this sense that Jesus used the phrase: "The Kingdom of heaven is at hand." If we take into consideration the fact that he coupled with this statement the preparatory work of repentance it appears to be the most probable meaning. "Repent ye for the kingdom is at hand." Not at hand in point of time but nigh then as a means of hope, as God is nigh unto all them that call upon Him. This view is further strengthened by the additional fact that the Pharisees had shut up the kingdom of heaven against men. They cut off all means of approach, but under the blessed light and truth of the Gospel of Jesus the kingdom was brought nigh unto all who desire to share in its glories. It is made available through his teachings and mission, and those obstructions thrown in the way by the Pharisees are now removed. This exposition in no way conflicts with the meaning of the original term, but is in strict harmony with it. But if we take the view advocated by those referred to in the beginning of this article, and are to infer that the kingdom was at hand in point of time, then the difficulties increase on our hands. For after the day of Pentecost, and even after the destruction of Jerusalem this expression continues to be used. says John in the Revelation "The time is at hand." "Behold I come quickly." Please read Luke xxi. 31; Rev. i. 3; xxii. 10. We submit therefore that the most reasonable view is that which brings the kingdom of God within the reach of all who desire to share in its glories. And as flesh and blood cannot inherit that kingdom, the heirs thereof must be changed from mortality to immortality, to participate in its blessings and immunities. This is to occur at the resurrection of the holy dead and the return of our blessed Lord.

Probation.

Christianity comes to man in his individual character. The salvation achieved through Jesus Christ is not the salvation of organized bodies, or associations. Churches are not saved in the aggregate. To belong to a denominational corporation guarantees endless life to no man. One of the pernicious errors of Romanism is, salvation in an organization, instead of salvation in Christ. Christianity singles out the man or woman, and claims faith and obedience on the ground of individual necessities. To each separate person, as individually ruined, it proffers a personal salvation. All the conquests of Christianity are effected through individual regeneration. Our connection with great associations, claiming to be churches, instead of being the means of our spiritual advancement and final salvation, is, on the contrary, sometimes calculated to insure our certain condemnation and final destruction. "Come out of her, my people," is the imperative command of God to those who may be found connected with the membership of the great apostasy, though she may claim to be the only true and universal church. To live within her pale is to be adjudged as partaking of her sins, and the result to all such will be, to partake finally of her plagues. A church, under the gospel arrangement, never embodies more than a single congregation of obedient believers, acknowledging no Head but Christ, and no system of doctrines, or code of morals and law, but the Scriptures. Christ has promised to be with such congregations, even if consisting of not more than two or three, convening in his name. Associations formed in any other way are not churches, but organizations on a human basis, wholly worldly like Rome, or of a mixed character like some Protestant denominations.

The ministry of the word has to deal with isolated responsibility. It must regard each man in the singleness of his obligations to God. Each one, in the journey of life, must be addressed as a lone pilgrim, who may, of choice, take the narrow way of life, or, with the multitude, throng the way to destruction. Christianity has nothing to do directly with institutions, governments, or human associations, as such, of any kind. Its work is to mold the individual. Low down in the "abysmal depths of personality," that no measuring line of philosophy has ever sounded, that finite penetration has never explored, or described, it does its mighty work. From the mine of humanity it quarries and fashions single "living stones" for the future temple of God. There, singly and alone, they are fitted and polished for their proper place in the glorious edifice.

Christian congregations then can only be helps, but the moral character, and consequent destiny, of every individual is wrought out in isolation. The great transactions, on which the destiny of each and every one for eternity is suspended, must be conducted in probationary seclusion. The very term probation implies insulation. In the all-important concerns of salvation each one acts for himself; every man, woman, or child, stands alone, and gaining, or losing, a crown of glory, is a purely personal matter. Changes of character, and the critical transitions in our moral state and relation, for which the gospel makes provision, are effected in solitude. Preaching itself has a solitary aim. The proclamation of the glad tidings is to be made to "every creature" and the individual "shall be saved," who believes and obeys.

This is a peculiarity of the gospel message. It speaks to you, to me, to every other one, each in his individual capacity. Each one in the singleness of his identity, must work out his own salvation. All preaching should impress, on each one addressed, his separate responsibility, with directness, earnestness, and faithful solicitude. Each one, in view of a judgment to come, should be dealt with as the only lost being in the universe, and each one, addressed by the gospel, should work as though he were the only one privileged with the opportunity to secure life everlasting. Churches are only good as composed of holy men and women; and churches are not finally saved in the aggregate, but holy, individual men and women out of churches. We do not know that the Eunuch ever joined any particular congregation, or church.

The innumerable company of the redeemed will not be composed of churches saved en masse, but of individuals "of all nations, and kindreds, and peoples, and tongues"—a vast multitude whose robes are washed and made white in the blood of the Lamb.

The Gospel is a scheme for the salvation of individuals: and, as individuals, we must, each for himself, make our calling and election sure. By thus doing, an entrance will finally be administered to us abundantly into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ. If the pathway lead through much tribulation, may we all endure as seeing him that is invisible, and gain the kingdom at last.

S. A. C.

The Conference at Alden Iowa.

As the report of this meeting will appear in the RESTITUTION, we will only refer to such things as left their impress upon our mind. We were glad to meet a goodly number of brethren and sisters, some of whom we had not seen for years. There was a larger gathering from a distance than could have been expected considering the almost constant rains, bad roads, and swollen streams. Good attention was given to the word spoken. All moved along smoothly and harmoniously, except a small wave of excitement which was started by T. Woodrow. Whatever doubts any may have had in reference to his religious status, must have been completely dispelled. He gave us a rehash of Hosea Ballou, with some things which were far from being an improvement on his plan of universal salvation. He boldly and dogmatically advocated the unconditional immortalization of the race. He claims that the entire fifteenth of first Corinthians, touching the resurrection of the dead, relates to the entire race of man. He affirmed that all the dead would be raised incorruptible, glorious, powerful, spiritual, and, having put on incorruptibility and immortality, they will shout victory over death and the grave, through the Lord Jesus Christ. He affirmed that not one of all the dead will be raised mortal. He also affirmed that the antideluvians and the people of Sodom, who were destroyed, had suffered the penalty; and therefore, the Law of God had no further claims upon them; thus when raised, they will be raised independent of Christ or pardon. From these examples we conclude that all men settle their accounts with God at death, and will have no need of a Savior or pardon. All, he argued, are under condemnation now, and will through these efficient instrumentalities be brought to honor and submit to Christ. He makes condemnation the greatest blessing which can be conferred upon mortal man, judging from its beneficial results. He had better stop preaching the Gospel and preach damnation, because the Gospel has not produced obedience in half who have heard it, but damnation, according to Mr. Woodrow, will convert and save every body. He has billions of immortal babies raised from the grave to grow up into the full stature of men and women. He left us in the dark as to whether adults who do not belong to Christ's royal family, will be born again in their original babyhood. Nor has the head-center of this view, Wm. P. Shockey, been any more fortunate in making those who heard him in Des Moines, understand his precise views on this pivoted point. Mr. W. reached the conclusion by a series of logical sequences perfectly clear to himself, we presume, that Christ could not be a father without having a wife, and she could not be a wife without having children. I suppose Mr. W. never saw, or heard of a wife who was not a mother. According to this logic, the Great God cannot be our father without having a wife—thus Spiritualists are consistent in praying to father God and mother God. He affirmed that Christ's bride will not have literal children after her resurrection, because they that shall be accounted worthy to obtain that age, and the resurrection from among the dead, will neither marry nor be given in marriage. He then assumed that she must be the mother of children by raising them from the dead. He failed to refer us to a single text to sustain this singular position. He applies to the Saints the language of Christ to his apostles, that they should do greater works than he had done. He had before affirmed that the bride of Christ would have the same nature of her royal Consort. He next affirmed that the children of the Lamb's wife would all be in the image of their mother, and that she will be incorruptible and immortal; therefore, her children, which will embrace the entire race, except the bride, will possess incorruptible and immortal natures also. According to this logic, man must have been incorruptible and immortal at the beginning, without having to wait at least six thousand years unto the resurrection for it—because he was made in the image of God. Such utopian views we have seldom ever heard advocated.

Wm. P. Shockey, preached the same views in the Universalist Church, in this city. The Universalists as a class, will not endorse his views relative to the nature of man, and the resurrection of the dead. Nor will he be able to convert many of them to the doctrine of the future personal advent of Christ to remain with man on earth to all eternity. We doubt whether he will succeed in converting one out of fifty of the Universalists to the unconditional salvation of the race. Nearly all of the better class of Universalists advocate a system of restorationism suspended upon compliance with the conditions prescribed. True, when all else fails, they fall back upon the fixed decrees of God. We made a brief reply to Mr. Woodrow. Two or three felt bad at the way the meeting closed, but all the rest rejoiced that such erroneous views, and such wild speculations, were exposed. It probably did not occur to Mr. W's friends that the responsibility rested upon the shoulders of Mr. W. who fulminated these antibible views upon the meeting.

Criticism.

As we avoid in person, dress or manners, anything that may give disgust or pain, so must we do in our conversation. We must no more use vulgar expressions than we would wear vulgar garments. Our talk should be as clean as our fingers. We should no more bite one with our words than with our teeth. An angry word is as bad as a blow, and a satirical word is like a sting. If we are never to say anything to a person that will give him disgust or pain, we must be even less careful not to say anything of any one which will injure him in the estimation of others. Playful, good-natured criticism upon the little follies and peculiarities of others may do more harm, and may even be useful, but it ceases to be good-natured when it gives pain.

Bards of the Bible.

The Bible is a mass of beautiful figures; its words and its thoughts are alike poetical; it has gathered around its central truths all natural beauty and interests; it is a temple with one altar and one God, illuminated by a thousand varied lights, and studded with a thousand ornaments. It has substantially but one declaration to make, but it utters it in the voices of the creation.

Shining forth from the excellent glory, its light has been reflected in a myriad of intervening objects. Till it has become at length attempered for our earthly vision. It now beams upon us at once from the heart of man and the countenance of nature. It has arrayed itself in the charms of fiction. It has gathered new beauties from the works of creation, and new warmth and new power from the very passions of clay. It has pressed into its service the animals of the forest, the flowers of the field, the stars of heaven,—all the elements of nature. The lion spurring the sands of the desert, the wild roe leaping over the mountains, the lamb led in silence to the slaughter, the goat speeding to the wilderness, the rose blossoming in Sharon, the lily drooping in the valley, the apple-tree bowing under its fruit, the great rock shadowing a weary land, the river gladdening a dry place, the moon and the morning star, Carmel by the sea, and Tabor in the mountains, the dew from the womb of the morning, the rain upon the mown grass, the rainbow encompassing a dark place, the light God's shadow, the thunder his footsteps,—all such varied objects are made as if naturally designed from their creation, to represent him to whom the book and all its emblems point. Thus the spirit of the book has ransacked creation to lay its treasures on Jehovah's altar, united the innumerable rays of a far streaming glory on the little hill of Calvary, and woven a garland for the bleeding brow of Immanuel, the flowers of which have been culled from the garden of a universe. The power of the Bible over man has been long and obstinately resisted; but resisted in vain. For ages has this artless, loosely piled little book been exposed to the fire of the keenest investigations, a fire meanwhile which has consumed contemptuously the mythology of the Iliad, the husbandry of the Georgics, the historical truth of Livy, the fables of the Shaster, the Talmud and the Koran, the artistic merit of many a work of philosophy and science. And yet there the Bible lies unhurt, untouched with not one of its pages singed, with not even the smell of fire having passed upon it. Many an attempt has been made to scare away this fiery pillar of our wanderings, to prove it a mere natural product of the wilderness; but still night after night rises, like one of the suns and ever shining stars in the vanguard of the great march of man, the old column gliding slow, but guiding certainly to future lands of promise, both in the life that is, and that which cometh hereafter.

While other books are planets shining with reflected radiance, this book, like the sun, shines with ancient and unborrowed rays.

Other books, after shining their little seasons, may perish in flames fiercer than those which destroyed the Alexandrian library; this must in essence remain fine as gold, but inconsumable as asbestos in the general conflagration.

Flesh and Blood.

"Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom."—1 Cor. xv. 50.

There are several other similar expressions in the New Testament. Matt xvi. 18. "Flesh and blood hath not revealed it unto thee,"—i. e., man—no human being hath revealed this; and though the text is literal enough, yet all should know that this is a Hebrew periphrasis for man. See Dr. Clark. Hence the text might read, man has not revealed it. Gal. i. 16. "I conferred not with flesh and blood,"—i. e., with man. Eph. vi. 12. "For we wrestle not against flesh and blood," i. e., not against men, but against their errors. Flesh and blood cannot inherit the kingdom—man in a natural state cannot; or by virtue of being children of the first Adam, who was of the earth, no one can obtain the kingdom. They must be related to Christ, the second Adam, in order to share with Him in the kingdom. On no other principle, as we conceive, will any one inherit the kingdom, either in this age or that which is to come.

—Specular religion is what the "Graphic" calls the ecclesiastical parades and exhibitions of millinery, in which the Roman Catholic church has of late been indulging.

Newman and Manning.

M. D. Conway, in one of his [illegible] to the Cincinnati "Commercial," [illegible] that he has good authority for the following story:

"Soon after John Henry Newman had gone off to the Church of Rome, with some of his followers, and the minds of the young men who are now leaders were profoundly agitated by the contrarious winds of doctrine, two of those, who had long been intimate, were engaged in earnest conversation. One of them said to the other: 'What think you of these men who have gone off to Rome? Is there any mental or moral characteristic common to them, any ethos, any uniform trait among them?' 'Yes,' replied the other, 'there is one feature they all have—a lack of moral honesty.' The man who asked the question is now the Right Hon. W. E. Gladston.: he who gave the startling reply is now the Catholic Archbishop of Westminster. About two years after the conversation Manning had joined the ranks of the class he had so sweepingly impeached."

Mr. Conway quotes Dr. Newman's remark, that it is the Jesuites who have alienated from the church "so religious a mind" as that of Mr. Gladstone, and adds: "This singular phrase has a double significance. It is a confirmation of the fact I have already stated in this correspondence that Gladstone has been very near to the Church of Rome—probably about the time that his sister entered it. Gladstone's deep religious sentiment was received from his devout mother, who held a mild, evangelical faith, but gave him no dogmatic training. While he was at Oxford, there was a period when Pusey was looked at askance for his ritualism and J. H. Newman for his low evangelism!"

Sins Blotted Out.

"I have blotted out as a thick cloud thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins. Isa. xliv. 22.

I do not know of an image that could more emphatically express the entireness of God's forgiveness. On some sultry summer day I have seen a dark cloud gather in the west. Gradually it rises and spreads till it covers the whole heavens, and hangs like a pall of darkness over field and forest. Soon the great harbinger drops begin to fall, and then comes the pouring rain until the clouds are emptied. And now the westerly wind springs up and sweeps away every vestige of cloud, leaving the sky as blue and stainless as though not a cloud had ever flecked it. And the setting sun throws its radiance over the landscape, which was just now covered with darkness and gloom. The change is perfect. The thick clouds are blotted out, gone, swept away. Beautiful image of the change through which the soul passes in coming into the experience of God's forgiving love. The consciousness of sin rises as a heavy cloud and hangs over the soul dark and threatening. The thunders of divine wrath are heard. But while the soul trembles and looks in vain for a hiding place, the breath of God's forgiveness scatters the clouds, and the heavens, just now black and threatening, are bright and cloudless, and the Sun of Righteousness sheds his bright beams over all, and a voice is heard within the soul, saying, "I have blotted out, as a thick cloud, thy transgressions, and, as a cloud, thy sins."—Rev. Wm. Lawson.

Man Lifeless and Alive.

"The Lord formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life, and man became a living soul."—Gen. ii. 7.

No careful reader of this verse can fail to see that the creation of man is described in two distinct stages, in each of which he is spoken of as man, though his condition in these two stages is widely different. The first stage is the creation of the organized body and figure in a lifeless state: "God formed man of the dust of the ground." Here we have the figure as it lay lifeless and thoughtless. And yet this figure was man. We cannot dispute this, for God tells us so Himself. It was man before he could think, or feel, or breathe.

That we are not straining language with any desire to accommodate it to a theory is evident from the fact that writers and reasoners of the highest ability, and whose opinions on the subject of our present work, differ altogether from ours, have taken the very same view of it that we do. "Man," says Bishop Hall, in his "Contemplations," "God did first form, then inspire." "Man," says Augustine, "was up to this only body." "He was already man," says Tertullian, "who as yet was but earth."—American Paper.

—The fact that men have misinterpreted the Bible is no more argument against it than the fact that men have misinterpreted nature is an argument against a true science.

Good Tidings.

How sweet are the tidings that greet the pilgrim's ear,
As he wanders to exile from home;
Soon, soon will the Savior in glory appear
And soon will his kingdom come.

Chorus:—
He is coming, coming, coming, soon I know,
Coming back to this earth again;
And the weary pilgrim will to glory go
When the Savior comes to reign.

The mossy old graves where the pilgrims sleep
Shall be opened as wide as before,
And the millions that sleep in the mighty deep
Shall live on this earth once more.

There we'll meet all our loved ones in our Eden home,
Sweet songs of redemption we'll sing;
From the north, from the south, all the ransomed will come
And worship our heavenly King.

Hallelujah amen! hallelujah amen!
In a little while we shall be there,
Only faithful, be hopeful, be joyful always,
To wear a crown of bright glory we'll earn.

—Lyric T. Hall.

Spirit Baptism—What is It?

This question settled, would help greatly to settle the whole controversy on the subject. "Holy men of old spake as they were moved by the Spirit," which was something of the same nature of spirit baptism, though never spoken of as such by the inspired writers. John the Immerser was thus moved by the Spirit, when he informed his auditors that one more exalted and worthy than himself would appear, who would baptise them with the Holy Ghost and with fire.

The prophets had foretold of a time when God would pour out of his spirit upon all flesh, and as a consequence "Your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, and your young men shall see visions and your old men shall dream dreams." An enlightening influence, causing the watchmen to see eye to eye, not needing to be taught, as now, when all will know the Lord, from the least to the greatest. This by some is supposed to have been, and is but partially fulfilled during the "times of the Gentiles." But the predictions seem to point to, and belong to the world to come; which a few in the beginning of the present age, were privileged to receive—"Tasting the good word of God and the powers of the world to come," —something like, instead of a fulfillment of, what the prophets saw. Heb. vi. 5; Joel ii.; Acts ii. 17. Apollos was fervent in the Spirit and mighty in the Scriptures before knowing of spirit baptism.

And Philip was sent by the Spirit to Samaria after he Spirit baptism, to preach the Gospel and baptize believers in water, who rejoiced in the hope of salvation and pardon of sins, and still not knowing anything of Spirit baptism. From these and similar facts, and a want of a thus saith the Lord that Spirit baptism is for the remission of sins; we conclude the baptism that precedes the remission of sins, and required as a condition, is the same as that instituted by John, with this difference. The candidate is required to believe that Jesus is the Christ the Son of the living God, "The lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world" His disciples, while He was among them, preached this good news to their countrymen, immersing believers in water for the remission of sins, as John had done—may we not conclude? Suppose John did tell the people that his Follower (ver. 6) should baptize them with the Holy Ghost and with fire? How do that prove that Spirit baptism takes the place of water baptism for the remission of sins? or that a person cannot be saved without Spirit baptism? A man ought to be in a safe condition when his sins are forgiven.

Let us not forget that Apollos and others knowing only the baptism of John, which, bear in mind, was appointed by high heaven for the remission of sins, have been fervent in the Spirit, led and guided by it as truly, as one baptized by the Spirit. Giving the Spirit in a degree or measure, requiring to be expressed by the word immersion, Christ states plainly, to his disciples, what it would be for. John xiv. 26. They were troubled at the idea of his leaving, but He assured them He would not leave them orphans. For, says He, "I will ask the Father and He will give you another helper, and this helper, the Holy Spirit which the Father will send, in my name, shall teach you all things, and remind you of all things, which I said to you,"—Diaglott. And just before his ascension He reminds his disciples of this promise, and tells them to wait in Jerusalem, until they received this help or power from on high.

Accordingly, ten days after, as we read, "There suddenly came a sound from heaven like a violent wind rushing, and it filled the whole house where they were sitting, and divided tongues appeared to them like fire, resting on each one of them. And they were all filled with the Holy Spirit, and began to speak in other languages as the Spirit gave them utterance." This is an inspired description and record of what Spirit baptism is.

Nothing is said here about its being for the remission of sins, but sent to glorify those illiterate disciples of Jesus for the great and arduous task of "wrestling against principalities and powers, against the rulers of the darkness of this world, against spiritual wickedness in high places." An enlightening influence that qualified them for work. Not having the bible as cheap and plentifully as at the present day, these Spirit baptised believers became living epistles of the word of God known and read of all men, and the fact that they all continued to baptise in water, is good proof that they did not understand that Spirit baptism was to supersede it. Then from whence cometh that wisdom that teacheth that "water baptism is the harlot's great enchantment, that needs to be utterly demolished?" This wisdom was long ago manifested in changing the ordinance to make it more convenient, and more recently has succeeded in demolishing it utterly; a wisdom that seeks to improve on infinite wisdom, dissecting and spiritualizing the plainest Scripture to destroy its true and obvious meaning, drawing inferences and building theories and doctrines upon assumptions that contradict the practices of the apostles. How loath like the insinuation is put forth, that the "candidate, in baptism, is passive," and hence, it follows that water baptism has nothing to do in this connection, as a saving ordinance. Mark xvi. 16.

Naaman's reasoning was not less objectionable, or more unwise, for he secured not unwilling to wash, provided he could do it in the rivers of his own country. Such seem to be seeking rest in a dry place. Matt. xii. 43. Seeking to find another door to enter the fold of Christ. The candidate in baptism is no more passive than was the blind man in washing the clay from his eyes. John ix. 7. This wisdom holds out the idea of being saved without works, "by grace through faith." Seeming to ignore the fact that we must have a faith made perfect by works, (James ii. 21 22,) before we can become "the passive recipients of God's promised favor," the salvation promised. It was a small work, the touching the border of Jesus' garment by the woman afflicted with the bloody issue, yet she was made whole by this simple act—the manifestation and evidence of her faith. Jesus' rule, in bestowing blessings, seems to have been, "according to your faith be it done unto you." So when there was no evidence of faith, as in the case of the blind man referred to, he required an act or work to perfect the faith.

Then, brethren, having been made free from sin by obeying from the heart the command to be baptized for the remission of sins, a form of the doctrine representing Christ's dying for our sins; his burial and resurrection the third day according to the Scriptures, let us strive to make our calling and election sure, and let no man deceive us with vain words. Should we fall in this, then shall we have believed in vain, and consequently have no part with the first-born at the coming of Jesus.

From the Scaffold to Heaven!

It is a noticeable fact that nearly all criminals die penitent and hopeful. As soon as it is finally and irrevocably settled that they shall pay the penalty of their atrociousness by ignominy and death, they immediately set about the work of repentance and faith. So long as there is hope of a reprieve from the governor or by a new trial before a newly selected jury they are not usually anxious about their soul's eternal interests, but when it is decided beyond the reach of protest, and the last ray of hope for life in this world vanishes, they apply themselves with most commendable zeal to the important work of fitting themselves up for the "life beyond death."

Recently the papers gave us a fine illustration of this. A man had been fairly convicted of murder in the first degree. But he entertains hope that he may yet be pardoned, although the day even of his execution is fixed. Earnest efforts are made by his friends but all without avail. Finally his attorney informs him that there is no hope—that he must die as appointed. From that moment he becomes serious (?) and religious. In a few days he is converted and happy, and spends the remainder of the time in rapture, rejoicing at the glorious prospects before him. Spiritual advisers administer to him in holy things, and it is amazing what a rapid "growth in grace" that murderer realizes during the few brief weeks of his divine experience, as evidenced by his statements to the reporter on the day of his execution. He ascends the scaffold not as a "criminal" but "an real."

With blazonfaredness he declares before heaven and earth that he never committed the crime. And then asserts that he dies happy. The pearly gates are all open to receive him. Gabriel and all the rest are coming down to welcome him home. The sheriff—angel of mercy—carefully adjusts the rope, and this Christian martyr is speedily ushered into more blissful surroundings.

What a ridiculous farce indeed is all this! Religion is a humbug or else this kind of experience is. It is not fair to quote the "thief on the cross," in extenuation of the scaffold religion of dying murderers. It must be remembered that the "thief" did not commence to repent as soon as he was nailed to the tree. For a while he reviled the Savior with the other malefactor. He continued to do so, indeed, until by the wonderful sights which he saw, he was convinced that Jesus was the Son of God. Then he repented and found forgiveness even at that late hour.

It is certainly proper for ministers of the Gospel to wait on condemned criminals and point them to the Lamb of God, who saves "to the uttermost," if haply they may find mercy and acceptance with the divine Father. It is also proper for these messengers of God to impress upon these justly condemned murderers that God is gracious and very compassionate, and will often forgive what a fellow man would condemn. But I think it should also be urged that a man who has coolly taken the life of a fellow being must not expect forgiveness without thorough repentance. And further that it is no good sign of a genuine work of grace in such a person to stoutly affirm his innocence of the crime when it has been fully proven that he is guilty. Humility of demeanor, and self abasement would much better become the occasion.

Certainly it is a dreadful thing to execute an innocent man, and without doubt many such have paid the death penalty which belonged rightly to another. But with the facilities for obtaining justice that abound at present, such cases must grow less and less as each year passes.

It can but be admired in a man to declare to the last his innocence if he is innocent. It is a species of moral heroism that is worthy of notice and honorable mention. But is has become so common for condemned criminals to avow their innocence on the fatal day, that but very little attention is given by the public to their dying statements, and very little sympathy is aroused by the most emphatic denials of guilt, or by the most penitent profession of repentance and faith in the Lord Jesus Christ.

In some cases these men have referred to Christ as an example of suffering. "He was crucified," they say, "and we are hung." What blasphemy, for a man whose hands are wreaking with the blood of a fellow being, to make such a comparison. I heard a minister preach the funeral of a man who had been killed in a drunken carousal in a gambling hell. One of his comforting (?) remarks was—"We place the bleeding man alongside of a bleeding Christ." Until it could be proven that Christ received his wounds in a carousal at the card table, the comparison was naps, debasing, blasphemous."

Modern Unbelief of the Resurrection.

BY REV. J. PANTON HAM, ENGLAND.

Christian philosophy of the nineteenth century, rejects the total decease of the conscious being in death, because it cannot square such a doctrine with its vague notions of personal identity. And Christian sentimentality rejects it, for the very self-sufficient reason, that it does not like it. This latter prefers the dreams of poets and painters, to the deliverances of prophets and apostles. It is useless to argue against a faith which is begotten of the fancy, and is the mere foster-child of the feelings. But of our philosophic friends we would ask, is your philosophy of identity so definitely shaped to your own perception, that you can venture to say that our interpretation of death and resurrection denies the preservation of personal identity in the being which dies and rises again? Let our objectors publish their philosophy of personal identity, and furnish irresistible evidence of the proposition that God cannot extinguish consciousness, and rekindle the identical consciousness again at his pleasure. Until this proposition be proved, the hackneyed objection falls to the ground. Will our objectors deny that God first created self-conscious, thinking being from nothing? He who could say, Come, ye children of men from the nothingness of the past, can surely say, Return ye children of men to your original nothingness, and, Come again, ye children of men. A hundred years ago, both writer and reader had neither consciousness nor existence; that Power, then, which has given both can surely take them away, and restore the identical gift again. Away with the flimsy objection about personal identity. Away with the impertinence which balances man's ignorance against the wisdom and power of the Almighty. If our inability to comprehend a profound mystery is to be the reason for repudiating that mystery, then consistency ought to oblige us to a universal skepticism, for, as one has well said, "Everything is mysterious, or nothing is mysterious."

To restore the Christian doctrine of the resurrection of the dead to the modern creed, it is first of all necessary to accept the Scripture theology of the constitution of man as a being, in no sense endowed with immortality or deathlessness but dependent on organization for existence and all the functions of an intellectual, moral, and emotional nature. Proud man must bow his head in humility before the universal challenge, "What man is he that liveth and shall not see death? Shall he deliver his soul from the hand of the grave?" He must acquiesce in the scripture philosophy, which teaches that "the dead know not anything, neither any that go down into silence;" that "the dead praise not the Lord;" that "in death there is no remembrance" of Him—"no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave" whither he are going. He must understand better that memorable deprecation by David and David's Lord, when he said, "Thou will not leave my soul in hades, neither will thou suffer thine Holy One to see corruption." And while he needs more knowledge and humility in reference to this terrible fact of death—the wages of sin—he must cherish more faith in the word and power of God, by which the faithful are assured that, though, like their Lord, they die, yet they shall live again, when he, "the Resurrection and the Life," and the Holder of "the keys of hades and death," comes "the second time for salvation."—Examiner.

Many Shall Run To and Fro.

In the prophecy by Daniel (xii. 4), it is said, "In the time of the end many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased." We believe events ever thickening, warrant us in regarding ourselves as living in the time of the prediction. Speaking of the prophecy just quoted, Dr. Adam Clark says:—

Many shall endeavor to search out the sense (of the prophecy) and knowledge shall be increased by these means.

Matthew Henry says:—

They shall read it over and over, shall meditate upon it, sift out the meaning of it, and thus knowledge shall be increased.

Dr. Gill says:—

Many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased; that is, toward the end of the time appointed, many shall be stirred up to enquire into these things delivered in this book, and will spare no pains or cost to get a knowledge of them; . . . . will carefully peruse the writing of such who have lived before them, who have attempted anything of this kind, and will go far and near to converse with persons that have any understanding of these things; and by such means, with the blessing of God upon them, the knowledge of the book of prophecy will be increased, and things will appear plainer and clearer the nearer the accomplishment of them is; and especially, when prophecy and facts can be compared.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

John T. Ogsley, Macedonia, Crawford county, Pa.

Elder Jacob Shaffer, Kewanna, Fulton county Ind.

DIED

Near Woodfill, Ind., Feb. 23d, 1875, Samuel S. Fox, on the 75th year of his age; he leaves a wife and three children to mourn his loss, though we do not mourn as those that have no hope. Father has been a strong believer in the Abrahamic Faith for a number of years. He did not fear death, although he had a strong desire to live until Christ should come, which he thought would not be long. Funeral preached by Brother Hildreth from 1 Cor. xv. 51.

Near Elen P. O., in Atchison county, Kansas March 29, 1875, Ivy P. Rockets, aged 7 months and 12 days. Also May 16th, 1875, Sarah Mable Rockets, aged 2 years, 6 months, and 13 days; children of Luther Peter, and Sister Ella Rockets. The parents feel their bereavement keenly, but are comforted in the belief that Rockets children shall come again from the land of the enemy, and inhabit their own borders, and, like the Shunamitish woman, and upon the same principal (that of faith) can say it is well.

The writer was called upon to deliver a funeral discourse in memory of the dear little ones, which he did on the second Sunday in June, to a large and attentive audience, from these words, "Some men will say, how are the dead raised up and with what body do they come?"—arguing that the resurrection is a millenial, eradicated of faith, and that Infants take the condition of the parents. May Brother and Sister Rockets, and all the Church of God, live up to their high calling and be found worthy to obtain that world and the resurrection from among the dead, and get their little ones back as a part of their reward, is my prayer.

APPOINTMENTS.

We are requested to state that Brother J. F. Wilcox is to preach the third Sunday in this month, at Lamont, Ills.

The Lord willing, I will be at the following places: The third Sunday in July, in Pontiatic county, at Brother Howard's near Sprout. Meeting to commence Friday night before. The fourth Sunday, in Warren county, at the brethren may appoint, on Friday night before. The first Sunday in August, at Brother Henry Meadhouse's, seven miles south of Warren. Meeting on Friday night before. The second Sunday, in Brother Gaskin's neighborhood, as he may appoint. Friday night before.

J. S. HAYDE.

A SERIES OF MEETINGS.

Brethren A. F. Dugger and D. C. Robison willhold a protracted meeting at the Center school house, in brother David Beck's neighborhood, four miles south from Goshen City, near Modena, in the southwestern part of Mercer county, Mo., beginning on the Saturday night before the first Sunday in August. Require for David part. Remember time and place. At the close of this meeting, they will come to Bavaria, Mercer county, Mo., and begin a meeting on the Friday night following, and continue several days. Brother Dugger will make Bavaria, Mo., his head quarters for at least two months from the first of August. During his stay here he will visit any place in Putnam and Harrison counties, Mo., and Wayne and Decatur counties, Iowa, as the brethren in those counties may arrange. You may address us this week and after August 1st Bavaria, Mercer county, Mo. Will brother Church please write me as soon as he sees this notice.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Annual Conference of the State of Indiana will convene at Rensselaer, Jasper county, Thursday, August 12, 1875.

A regular session will be held by the brethren of Rensselaer, with whom the conference is to be resident, to all who desire to be present at this yearly convocation.

JOHN L. WISE, Secretary.

There will be a Conference Meeting of the people of the Church of God, four miles south of the Osage Mission, in Neosho county, Kansas, at the South Liberty school house. Meeting to begin Saturday before the first Sunday in August, 1875. A general invitation is given to all, and especial invitation to those of the preaching brethren, Kinney, Glover, Bligen, Green, Pickett, Harlen, Wilkins, and all others not named in this. And we want a delegate from each church in the south-west. W. N. Smith and Sons think it will be expected. Come one, come all; let us have a good time together before the general shuffling of the great harvest. Brethren, there is no unity here for you, to pay your traveling expenses, but we will try to have something to eat for you. Nausea is nearly destitute of preachers. There appears not to be enough money here, or which we give all the old veterans (ladies and gents) the wheel of God, be something else to destroy everything. As some of our dear brethren will have to leave us on the account of the party, we would one more notice this season of them to this age, before we part, perhaps to meet with them no more, until we may meet in the Kingdom of God. Let there be a general rally for the truth contending for the faith; for Jesus and the kingdom.

JOHN TODD.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

1.—All communications for the HERALD OF TRUTH should be written in a plain, legible hand; and, before sent, carefully revised and corrected.

2.—Business notes and recommendations, if on the same sheet, should be written on that they can be taken apart, without dividing the communications. If necessary, a separate slip may be enclosed to the same effect.

3.—When you send names of new subscribers, let them be marked as such.

4.—Be careful to write all names of persons and places plainly and distinctly.

5.—In all cases, give the name of the post-office, county, and state. When a town or village is called by one name, and the post-office by another, be sure to give the name of the post-office.

6.—When the direction of a paper is to be changed do not forget to name the office to which it has been sent. Unless this is done, it is out of our power to make the change.

7.—When subscribers remove, let us know immediately. Otherwise, their papers will continue to be sent, and to their charge, until such notice is given.

8.—When subscribers wish to discontinue, let them remember that all arrearages must first be paid.

9.—Parties ordering MSS. returned, must prepay the postage; otherwise they will remain in this office.

PREACHING NOTICE.

I am ready and willing to go anywhere in "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and hear me "at the time appointed."

Having no means of my own, my travelling expenses will have to be met from some other source. Let the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, and at accessible points in Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, who desire a course of Biblical Lectures, address me early, at Ames, Union county, Ill.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND M. T. REED

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God. . . . Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest,"—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The objects in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon God for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish His Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "OUR REST." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently sustain its circulation. If he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would contribute it to others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

THE RESTITUTION.

Thy Will be Done.

We see not, know not; all our way
Is night; with thee alone is day.
From out the torrent's troubled drift,
Above the storm our prayer we lift,
Thy will be done!

The flesh may fail, the heart may faint;
But who are we to make complaint,
Or dare to plead to Him like these
The weakness of our love of ease?
Thy will be done!

We take with solemn thankfulness
Our burden up, nor ask it less,
And count it joy that even we
May suffer, serve, or wait for thee.
Whose will be done!

Though dim as yet in flesh and line,
We trace thy higher life's wise design,
And thank thee that our age supplies
The dark relief of sacrifice.
Thy will be done!

And if in our unworthiness
Thy sacrificial wine we press,
If from thy ordeal's heated bars
Our feet are scarred with crimson scars,
Thy will be done!

If, for the age to come, this hour
Of trial hath vicarious power,
And, blest by thee, our present pain
Be liberty's eternal gain,
Thy will be done!

Strike thou, the Master, we thy keys,
The anthem of thy destinies!
The minor of thy sorrow share,
Our hearts shall beat the old refrain,
Thy will be done!

—Whittier.

Notes From Boat Life in Egypt and Nubia.

BY WILLIAM C. PRIME.

There are some places on this old earth where antiquity sits throned and crowned, compelling homage to its old but radiant splendor. Thebes is a greater wonder than the Pyramids. The reader can with difficulty obtain an idea of the extent of the temples. It was not storm nor decay that overthrew the temples of Egypt. What then worked the ruin? The answer is with God. Conjecture vainly seeks to account for the ruin. Probably the conquering armies of invading nations wasted their power in the vain attempt to efface the memory of the conquered. I am more than ever infused with the conviction that the ancient Egyptians built temples for immortality. That they expected in their own proper persons to return to these plains, to worship at these altars, possibly with the visible presence of their Gods. For this they sought tombs in the solid mountain, whence they could walk out in later days, and view the redemption of the land of Misraim. For this they embalmed the dead, that in the resurrection they might know each other, and souls might not wander in deep darkness seeking a clay tenement.

Maabdeh is not the site of an ancient city. But it is the nearest point on the river to one of the most remarkable of the ancient catacombs of Egypt. Seven miles from the shore, beyond the eastern mountains, are the celebrated pits, which many travelers have attempted to explore. None, I think, have succeeded so thoroughly as myself. Sitting on the hill by the dim candle light, I overhauled Gods and men, with sacrilegious hand. It was a strange, wild and awful scene. Among all the pictures that my memory has treasured of wandering life, I have none so fearful as this. It was hell—a still, silent, cold hell. All these bodies lay in rows, in close packages, like so many souls damned to eternal silence and sorrow in this prison. Five bodies of men that I drew out of the mass lay before me, and cursed me with their hideous stillness and inaction. I dared them to tell me in words, the reproaches of which their silent forms were so liberal; reproaches for entering their abode and disturbing the repose of twenty or forty centuries. These were of the poorest and most common sort, wound in coarse cloth and laid in the grave with the beasts that were sacred to their God.

The Pyramids and sphinx are old acquaintances to all readers of books of travels, history, philosophy, and religion. They have done service by way of illustration so many thousand years, that they seem old friends, even to those who have not seen them face to face. It has been often said that they are not mentioned in the sacred Scriptures. It is, indeed, somewhat surprising that they are so seldom alluded to, but I cannot think they are entirely omitted. Moses, we suppose, wrote the book of Job.

The great law-giver was born and educated under the shadow of Cheops, and I have no doubt, had those vast tombs in his mind, when he placed in the mouth of Job, wishing for death that expression—"Then had I been at rest with Kings and counsellors of the earth who built desolate places for themselves." How we looked into a hundred vacant resting places of the old dead, and pondered much on the power of time, and the oblivion with which ages wrapt nations as with a grave-cloth and a grave, out of which their voices come in sepulchral tones; how at Cenih we climbed Cheops once more and swept our eyes over the plain, and up the Nile, and far away over the Libyan desert to the dim horizon that seemed as distant as the days of Moses.

New Light Sprung Up.

Elder A. F. Dugger of north-west Missouri, visited this place (Cornings Grove, Ills.) a few days ago, with a view of delivering a few lectures on temperance. While listening to preaching of the orthodox school he felt called upon to raise and unfurl the Gospel banner of truth, which he did to the entire satisfaction of a great many. To-day I rejoice in new light. I see new beauties and glories in the Word of God, which I never saw before which imparts to me new courage, and a zeal which is according to knowledge.

The Christian church in this place numbers about three hundred members. At first Elder Dugger occupied their house, though they profess not to be bound by any creed, yet they became uneasy, and manifested an unwillingness for him to occupy it any longer. The school house was offered, and accepted and the meetings continued uninterrupted, notwithstanding the busy season and the shortness of the nights. Every night the house was densely crowded and many out doors, and better order and attention never before known.

Not willing to attack him with the material on hand, they telegraphed for Elder Sweeney, who when he came said he had been fighting this thing and universalism for the last forty years. In his first speech he spoke with a great degree of positiveness, and with great boldness defied brother Dugger to prove certain points. His friends cheered him and seemed much lifted up. When brother Dugger followed, he removed every prop from under him, and met every objection. The points were taken up and met in such a way that Elder Sweeney's failure to evade or meet the argument, was seen by all. I think I am safe in saying, that the opinion outside of the Christian church is universal that Elder Sweeney met with a signal failure, and was glad to retire from the field of battle.

Truth is mighty, and will prevail. It looks beautiful when placed by the side of error. We expect brother Dugger to return to this place again this fall or winter, when we expect to organize a church, and perhaps build a house for worship. There are a number now ready to walk out and take a decided stand for the truth—myself and others. I have for years been interested in the study of the Word. I am more interested than ever now, and am determined by the grace of God to do all I can for the spread of the truth. Shall send to you for books, tracts and papers. I want to get me a good library of the right kind of books, and study the Word, to show myself a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the Word of truth.

Yours in hope of eternal life.
A. B. Ross.

From Brother Smith.

Dear Brethren:—I feel very much interested in the welfare of our dear paper. I feel that for one I could not do without it, although it contains many articles that are non-essential, and that are untaught. Many articles of late have appeared from our able brethren pro and con on the proper time for observing the (Lord's supper, as both parties are pleased to call it.) Now, I submit to the Brethren on both sides, wherein the Word are the emblems of the broken body, and shed blood of Christ that we are to eat and drink as a remembrance of the death of Christ until He comes, called a supper or the Lord's supper? I have been both a yearly and a weekly observer; but for some time past I occupy the ground of Brother Amos Sanford. I do not see that eternal life is at stake, but a duty that all Christians will gladly participate in. My late companion and myself, were agreed on this matter, and for years when brethren came to our house, regardless of the day of the week, or season of the year, we gathered around our table and partook of bread and wine in remembrance of the death of our absent Lord.

Brother Read, I wish you to publish this article in condensed form, also the address of our aged Brother, David Campbell, of Minn., with the request for him to continue his pieces on prophecy. I spend much of my time in talking to the people of the things concerning the kingdom of God, while some accept our views, many say that I am beside myself. But I tell them not; at least forth the words in truth and soberness. Your brother,

G. W. SMITH.

Immortality Through Christ Alone Safe and Salutary.

BY PROF. C. F. HUDSON.

The whole theory of conversion by terror is a great and radical error. The theory, as such, is indeed being now more and more abandoned. But Christendom is not yet escaped from the influence of it, as we see in that oft repeated misquotation, "Knowing, therefore, the terrors of the Lord, we persuade men." Christians are yet too much alarmed for the safety of the universe if their doctrine of penalty should be untrue, and are too prone to think of man as "desperately wicked" instead of desperately weak,† to cause their reliance on overwhelming fear as a leading influence in the changing of men's hearts. The title of that fearful sermon preached during the last century, and bringing the hearers to their feet for terror,—"Sinners in the hands of an angry God,"—still represents too much the sentiment of those to whom the Gospel of grace is committed. A great and auspicious change of sentiment is begun and is far advanced. But the reform is retarded by the fact that many who proclaim that God is Love have affirmed the salvation of all. It will still require much time and labor for the church to give the divine love its true interpretation and its just supremacy. We simply remark here, that God is not and cannot be Love if any of his creatures suffer forever. He may be loving and kind, if He saves a share of his children at the expense of deathless anguish to others. But such a limitation of goodness makes the attribute no longer central and ruling—it no longer represents or contains the true idea of GOD. And all preaching of the Gospel along with the doctrine of causeless anguish, loses immensely the proper power of the Gospel. In volving the most grievous misrepresentation and calumny of the divine character, as unloving or as impotent, it must often arouse feelings most unpropitious to conversion.‡ Many rejecting the doctrine, will say, and have said, "Your God is my devil." Others will be only heardened. There are brave and bold natures whom, the more you threaten them, the more you may. Many such were provoked into an attitude of defiance. Others receive the doctrine with little heart and less thought, until it develops in a morbid scepticism. "They preached the hell-fire doctrine," said one who was rejoicing in Christ as his hope of immortality, "until I believed it; and I believed it until it made me an infidel." How many have been driven away from God and from hope, into a forlorn feeling that Heaven is not their friend nor the friend of the universe, and that punishment is a police regulation, guarding the welfare of the elect, not rather the warming protector of life to all who love not death,—how many have failed to love God because they could not know Him as Love—eternity alone can tell.

How, then, it may be asked, shall we account for the apparent effect of the Gospel, as it has been preached for centuries, in leading men to Christ? The answer is: the doctrine of eternal suffering has been practically held mainly as a hyperbole. Men easily confound the immense with the infinite. The pulpit discourses of centuries past have contained the truth, in setting forth Christ as the only Savior for an eternal life, and from an utter ruin, and what is the substance of the glad tidings of life and hope. What has been added respecting eternal misery, has commonly had the effect of mere words. The words have been easily uttered and repeated. The arguments on the subject have been more or less current. But they have been only that verbal reasoning with which men often please or for a time deceive themselves. An able writer has told us that he was once a strong defender of the doctrine in question. His thought the fact and justice of eternal suffering all clear and plain. But as he came to know his own thoughts better, the whole dropped away as a sheer logical figment which had never been a part of his real mind or heart. And we must a short time since a fine instance showing how short a time may pass for as good as endless duration. A friend remarked that if the glorified state of the saints did not begin until the final resurrection it seemed hardly worth living for. The interval was his eternity. The infinite beyond eluded his thought.

And this may explain the fact which so much amazes and distresses many devout men—the indifference of men generally respecting the danger they are supposed to believe. "I confess," says Albert Barnes, "when I look . . . upon the world of woe, filled with hosts to suffer forever; when I see my friends, my parents, my family, my people, my fellow citizens; when I look upon a whole race, all involved in this sin and danger, and when I see the great mass of them wholly unconcerned, and when I feel that God only can save them, and yet He does not do it,—I am struck dumb. It is all dark, dark, dark to my soul, and I cannot disguise it." Here it must impress our minds that the great mass of men are "wholly unconcerned" about this supposed danger, when they seem to believe it, because they do not and cannot comprehend infinitude. They only grasp the finite. And the thought of eternal suffering may sometimes only weary the mind, when it does not stagger the faith.

* Our translation reads, "terror" but the original is "fear." The verse is, "Fearing the Lord," etc. See Christ our Life, pp. 56, 57.

† The original is weak, which denotes not a substantive noun; as an adjective feeble, weak, unreliable. We might render the phrase "desperately human."

‡ If evil is to be eternal, it must be because God lacks either the right or the will or the will to bring it to an end, or let it die of itself. The third and true will are conceded by all. The right is controversially denied indirectly, on the ground that evil is glorified in one form would appear or be aggravated in another form, which involves a denial of the right. See "Love and Grace," pp. 2, 4; and "The Rights of Wrong."

Evangelistic.

Having just returned home from an evangelizing tour, I submit a short report of the same for the readers of the RESTITUTION:

I left home Friday, May 28th, for Sparta, Wis., where I held a two days meeting with the church at Angelo. The occasion was in the main interesting and profitable. On Sunday, the 30th, we repaired to the water and immersed one willing soul into Christ. May God grant that he grow in grace and in the knowledge of the truth, and remember that he is now Christ's freeman, and in bondage to no man, sect or creed; but a learner in the school of Christ, and is under obligation to know "the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth," as far as in him lies. Elder D. S. Clark, pastor of the Advent Church at Sparta, preaches every two weeks at Angelo. I am glad of this, and desire our brethren there to give him a good hearing. For first, whatever of good he has, they will thereby receive. It belongs to them let them rejoice in it. And second, by showing their love without dissimulation, and their fair, impartial, and unprejudiced mind, they may be able to teach their teacher many things he does not now apprehend. I hope and trust both he and they will always remember that truth, and it alone, will make us free; and jointly labor to know the whole truth without fear. Monday night, I bid my friends and brethren farewell for a time, and took the night train for Chicago, en route for Plymouth, Ind., where I arrived Tuesday noon. Brother Chaplin met me at the depot, and extended the Christian hospitality of his home to a very weary pilgrim. Notwithstanding a heavy rain and still threatening weather, a fair congregation met in the pleasant chapel belonging to the society at Plymouth, Tuesday night, for worship. A cold on my lungs, caught Sunday night at Angelo, and a feeling of weariness from overwork and want of sleep, prevented me from enjoying the delivery of an otherwise interesting subject for investigation. I hope the congregation enjoyed it better that I did.

Wednesday and Thursday I rested at Plymouth, mostly at the pleasant home of Brother Reed, under the sisterly care of his wife. Friday evening I reached Mendon, Mich., via Fort Wayne, Ind. As an official report of the conference which met here will be furnished, I do not need to give an informal report. For myself, I can say, that the conference was to me a very enjoyable one, and I trust it will prove a profitable one to the Michigan church and the cause of truth generally.

Three nights after the conference, I spent in the neighborhood holding meetings. The attendance was good, for a farming community in the hurrying season, and during the week days. A good degree of interest was manifest throughout, and I have hope that some who have never manifested much interest in the Bible before, will come out on the side of truth.

Thursday night found me at Chicago, at the Massasoit House, sick with a severe attack of my nervous sick headache. Friday night, midnight, I reached Lanark, Ill., to find Brother Saylor in waiting for me at the depot. After a few hours of semi-consciousness, in which I seemed to be watching myself trying to sleep, I started in company with Brother Glotfelty and our young brother, Renner, for Plum River, the place where the Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin conference was then in session. Here I had the pleasure of meeting once more many old and tried friends, this side of the kingdom, and of speaking to them "the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus Christ." The attendance was larger than ever before in that place, and the interest much greater than I ever witnessed there.

Four bore witness to the truth by immersion, and the meeting broke up Sunday afternoon. An almost universal desire to have an evening meeting, was overruled by a better judgment, and we reluctantly took the parting hand in time to avoid a drenching rain. Four nights and the following Sunday was spent in laying before the people of Lanark the evidence on which the Christian faith stands. We never had so good an attendance and interest in Lanark; and the brethren who have labored there, against the most discouraging circumstances, are now revived in hope that their labors are soon to bear fruit unto God.

Tuesday morning found me once more with my family, grateful that a kind Father had preserved us, once more to meet in gladness in this world of care. I was absent from home just 24 days, traveled over a thousand miles, and preached 22 times to eager multitudes the "words of this life." May God's blessing attend it and rest on all who are engaged in like labors of love.

Sins of the Tongue.

The tongue is the glory of the human frame. Psa. xvi. 9. Acts ii. 26. It can be put to the choicest and holiest uses. It speaks the glory of the Most High God. It utters his lofty praise. It tells of all his righteous acts and wondrous works. It proclaims the story of his love. It unfolds the wondrous tale of Christ's sacrifice for sins. It declares the fullness of his redemption. It shouts the glad tidings of peace from the mountain tops. It proclaims pardon to the dying and life to the dead. It confesses before men Him by whom we hope to be confessed before the Father and his angelic hosts. It shall finally lift on high the song of triumph, victory, and peace, when redemption is accomplished and toils and conflicts are forever past.

Such an instrument as this is of vast importance, and no wonder that Satan seeks to control it and pervert its action. How fearfully does he do this!—until the tongue which should be touched as with a coal from the altar of the Most High, becomes a devastating flame, which setteth on fire the course of nature, and is set on fire of hell.

How many sins come from a misgoverned tongue. Without its agency there would be no quarrels, no slanders, no blasphemies, no flatteries, no evil speakings, no foolish speeches, no bitter, sinful, taunting, sneering, idle words; and none of the evil consequences that attend them. Words have broken hearts, blighted hopes, desolated homes, overturned nations, seduced the unwary, deluded the simple, led astray the wayward, stumbled the weak, discouraged the tempted, debased the virtuous, beguiled the intemperate, ruined prospects, blackened reputations, wrecked health,—yea, they have destroyed life itself.

No wonder that the Psalmist said, "I will take heed to my ways that I SIN NOT WITH MY TONGUE; I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me." Psa. xxxix. 1.

Words once spoken cannot be recalled. Often words are spoken carelessly, or upon false information, which do incalculable damage to others. No man can fully know the mischief wrought by the tongue. How many lies it cast down, how many afflicted, how many destroyed.

We speak of words as light, and cheap, and vain, and empty. But speech is our most spiritual act; it most fully shows our true character. By our words God reckons all our character. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "By thy words thou shalt be justified and by thy words shalt thou be condemned." "For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

Oh, these sins of the tongue. How they shall bow the soul in the awful judgment day. "In the multitude of words there wanteth not sin." And what multitudes of words are poured out on every hand from hour to hour.

Let us pause. Let us pray, "Set a watch, O God, before the door of my lips!" Let us take heed that we sin not with the tongue; remembering that, "if any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." And let our cry be that of the Psalmist, "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer." Psa. xix. 14.—Selected.

—Unmeaning sentences in high sounding words, are simply ridiculous.

—The report that 250,000 Polish Catholics have resolved to pass over to the Greek church is confirmed. A memorandum to the Emperor of Russia acknowledges the secession, and justifies it by "the moral impossibility of accepting the dogma of infallibility."

Sacred History Verified.

The account given by the prophet Daniel of the fall of Babylon has been said to be incorrect, inasmuch as good authorities asserted that at the time of the city's overthrow there reigned a king called Nabonedus, and not Belshazzar; moreover that he was absent at the time, and was not killed, but kindly treated by his captors. But a cylinder discovered some eight years since clears up this difficulty by proving that Belshar-ezer, as he is thereon denominated, was the eldest son of this Nabonedus, and associated with him in the government. Mr. Rawlinson goes on to say, "The fact that the Babylonian throne was at this time occupied conjointly by two monarchs is indicated in the sacred narrative by a curious casual touch. Belshazzar, anxious to obtain the interpretation of the miraculous 'handwriting upon the wall,' proclaims that whoever reads it shall be made 'the third ruler in the kingdom.'" Dan. v. 7. In every other similar case, the reward is the elevation of the individual who does the service to the second place in the kingdom, the place next to the king. The only reason that can be assigned for the variation in this instance is, that the first and second places were both filled, and that therefore the highest assignable reward was the third place." Thus from the dust of ruined cities buried two thousand years ago come facts to confute the skeptic and prove the Bible true.

Kansas Relief.

Report of money, provisions and clothing, received by the undersigned, and distributed among the brethren suffering in consequence of the grasshopper plague, this being the earliest report that could be made, as the donations have just ceased coming in: Total cash receipts, $113.55; goods received per freight: W. D. Townsend, one box containing produce and flour, all spoiled. One box and three barrels wheat, reported as sent, but never received. W. H. Wilson, one case of clothing, all right. One box clothing from Mrs. R. Wray, all right. F. R. Stees, sixteen barrels flour, three barrels seed wheat. One box clothing reported from M. R. Lee, not received, and probably lost. A portion of the flour was sold to pay freight; $73.50 being paid out in that way.

We tender our thanks to the brethren for their kindness in thus contributing so liberally, by which many hearts have been made glad, and many pangs of hunger have been relieved, and truly hope and pray that they may receive a rich reward in the "Sweet by and by."

Yours in hope of sharing a part in the kingdom of God,

A. J. YEATON.

Spontaneous Combustion.

The Sonora (Tuolumne county) "Independent" of June 12, relates the following wonderful story: "Last Saturday Judge Morkey, of Merced, discharged one of his hired men, who was a confirmed drunkard. The man stayed in Merced City until the following Monday, when he departed for La Grange, taking the precaution to take a gallon of gin along. Nothing was seen of him after this until Wednesday, when two small boys living just outside of La Grange, ran into their father's house in great alarm, saying there was a man on the road who was burning up. Such proved to be the case. The unfortunate man by his excess in drinking had destroyed his vital energies, and chemical agents had obtained the ascendancy, so the hydrogen of alcholic drinks had combined with the phosphorus of the body, forming phosphuretted hydrogen, which ignited spontaneously, and the wretched man died a most appalling death."

Increase of Catholics in the United States.

The "Christian Union" says: "The Pope has appointed seven new bishops for his church in this country, and has raised the dioceses of Boston, Philadelphia, Milwaukee, and Santa Fe to the grade of archdioceses. The Boston diocese will probably include the New England States, where Catholicism has grown quite rapidly within forty or fifty years. In 1825 there was one priest in Massachusetts, one in Maine, and one in New Hampshire. In 1835 there were in New England twenty-seven priests and twenty-two Catholic churches. In 1844 the number of Catholics in New England was about sixty thousand, and there were thirty priests and thirty-seven churches. In 1875 there are about one million of Catholics, with one archbishop, five bishops, four hundred and forty-one priests, and four hundred and thirty-two churches."

—How far that little candle throws his beams! So shines a good deed in a naughty world.

THE RESTITUTION

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

H. V. REED, Editor.
S. A. CHAPLIN,
J. M. STEPHENSON,
THOMAS WILSON,
Corresponding Editors.

TERMS:—$2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three and six months at the same rate.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS,
All business letters, or communications intended for publication, must be addressed as follows:—
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.
Letters for the Editor should be sent to his name plainly.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the Restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the resurrection of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of excluding those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Brothers of the One Faith.

Never, in all time, has there been such evidences manifested, in every part of the world, of the near advent of Christ, as in this age. Never before have able and pious writers brought to light so many hidden treasures in the Word of God.

According to the best of our approximate insights into chronology—for God, in his wisdom, has not yet suffered us to attain to precision in it, else we would fix the day and hour—"the jubilee of jubilees" is at hand, and the six thousand years are almost expired. Now, looking from this standpoint, O ye loved watching ones, will you become weary, faint, and slumber on the ground? No; a hundred times no! Lest the Master, coming suddenly, finds you sleeping. He says to all, you individually—"watch!"

"I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the tower, and will watch to see what he will say unto me, and what I shall answer when I am reproved." Hab. ii. 1.

"The vision is yet for an appointed time, but at the end it shall speak, and not lie; though it tarry, wait for it; because it will surely come, it will not tarry." Hab. ii. 3. May our hearts be directed in the patient waiting for Christ. Remember, those who wait for the Lord will clap glad hands and be caught up out of living houses and open graves, to join the celestial escort, and see the King of kings. "Lost in the world, lost in the glorified bands, lost in the sunbright sky." Descending with Him to the rejoicing hills of Palestine, we shall evermore share in the joys and glory of his blessed reign on earth. O ye weary and sad, cheer up. Ye sick and suffering be of good comfort. Ye whose hairs are white with the snows of many winters, and whose footsteps are feeble, hold on a little while longer and the victory is yours forever. Just a few more sighs, struggles, tears, temptations and trials, then there cometh that unspeakable glory and everlasting rest. O rapturous thought! To-morrow, in my flesh, though not corruptible, I may see God! O how comforting the thought that we are complete in Jesus!

Reader, are you without this hope? If you have never yet believed the Gospel and been baptised, let me affectionately say to you what the Savior said to a certain lawyer: "Go, and do likewise." Give yourself wholly to the service of the Lord—ere to-morrow it may be too late. Yes, attend to this interesting affair even before the means of obtaining food and clothing are agitating the mind. "Seek ye first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness." You have every inducement and encouragement to embrace the Christian life, both in Luke xi. and Matt. xxiv. Please read them,—they are worthy of your consideration. The following are loving appeals: "Come unto me all ye that labor and are heavy laden and I will give you rest." "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have eternal life." "But in lovingly believing the things concerning the kingdom of God, and the name of Jesus Christ; and going down into the baptismal waters, you will come forth leaving your sins behind you." You will then be enabled, with joy unspeakable, to "rejoice in hope of the glory of God."

We believe that the Gospel calls men to repentance. Now we do not suppose that when a person submits to the laws of faith in immersion that the end is reached. By no means. The work, comparatively speaking, is just begun, when the believer puts on Christ. That is the time when the Christian soldier enlists for the war, "to fight the good fight of faith." The race is only commenced "a race for an incorruptible crown"—and we are so to run that we may obtain.

"The obedience of faith" includes a carrying out of all things commanded for the disciples to observe. It calls for obedience to the laws which have been given to regulate our private, public and social life, and teaches us to live soberly, righteously and godly, denying ungodliness and worldly lust, looking for the blessed hope, and glorious appearing of our Savior.

A hope so great and so divine,
May trials well endure;
And purge ourselves from every sin,
As Christ himself is pure.

It comforts our hearts to reflect on the day
When sorrow and sighing shall vanish away;
Whilst the angels who sung the glad song of his birth,
Shall gather the saints from the ends of the earth.

Yours in hope of the kingdom.

Blameless, Not Faultless.

No Christian is or can be faultless before the Lord. Blameless all may and ought to be. The child that does its needlework faithfully is commended, though not a stitch is perfect. The child is blameless, but the work is not faultless. The Christian who lives up to his light and ability is blameless, but in God's sight faulty. He is not conscious of his defect, his eyes are not as sharp as God's; his best efforts are like the needlework of the little girl, well done for her, but so defective in fact that every stitch must be removed and done again by a more skillful and experienced hand.

Saints sometimes judge themselves perfect because they are not conscious of sin. They may be innocent, but surely not perfect. With more light and culture they would discern defects. Others of more experience observe them now, but they see them not, because not sufficiently educated or advanced in wisdom. The novice that paints a daub thinks it beautiful; and it is well done for him. He has done his best, and is blameless, but a few months of training makes him hide his earlier works in shame. Jesus keeps blameless, trusting souls, and step by step leads them up to higher culture, richer wisdom, purer tastes, until they attain his likeness in glory. —Selected.

Testimony to the Truth of the Bible.

Tyre from its ruins, Sodom from its ashes, Rome in her apostasy, Jerusalem in her degradation, the Arab in his tent, the Jew upon our streets, all living and lasting, even if unconscious, witnesses, proclaim that this Book has God for its Author, truth for its matter, as it has immortality and glory for its issues. Let me suppose, for a moment, that a number of persons in different ages and places had been engaged in making various parts of a marble statue; suppose a person in Petersburg made a finger, a second in Rome a hand, a third in Edinburg an ear, a fourth in Athens the body, and so on till the whole was completed, but all without communication with one another, and in different ages as in different lands. Suppose, that when all the fragments were brought together, they formed that magnificent statue, called the Apollo Belvedere; would you not say that some superintending statuary must have guided and given an impulse to every chisel; that some been ideal, some great archetype, must have been placed before each of them, after the form of which they were inspired constantly to work? In other words, that they composed the parts, not as their own fancy prescribed, but as the presiding power directed? This is the fact in reference to the Scriptures. Let us take the portrait of our Blessed Lord. Isaiah describes his sorrows, Malachi his triumphs; the dying Patriarch proclaims his empire, and the sweet Psalmist of Israel the extension of his kingdom; one prophet gives one feature, and one gives another; and looking at the parts in detail, irrespective of the original, and comparing one with the other, we should say that they are so contradictory that they can never belong to the same being. At last Bethlehem and Gethsemane rise above the horizon—Calvary lifts it awful head—the Son of God appears upon the cross—what prophets said is compared with what Christ is; and lo! all the parts delineated by the pens of prophets in distinct and different centuries, and under different circumstances, at first apparently contradictory, come to be put together, and they constitute the "brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person." By this alone it is proved that the prophets "wrote as they were moved and guided by the Holy Spirit," and that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah.—J. Cumming, D. D.

The Lord's Prayer at Different Dates.

This is the Lord's Prayer in the English of former times, and it shows how the language has changed:

A. D. 1258.—"Fader ure in heune, haleweide beoth thi neune, cumen thi kuneriche thi wille beoth idon in heune and in erthe. The euerych dawe bried gif ous thike dawe. And forzif ure delites as vi forzifen ure detteoures. And lede ous nought into temptatioun bot delyvor ous of yvel. Amen.

A. D. 1360.—"Fadir our in hevene, haleweded be thi name, thi kindoin come. Thi wilie be done as in havene in erthe. Ones urche dayes bred give us to-day. And forgive us oure dettes, as we forgive our detteoures. And lede us not into temptation, bote delyvere us of yvel. Amen.

A. D. 1582.—"Our father which art in heaven, hallowed be thy name. Let thy kingdom come. Thy will be done in earth, as it is in heaun. Giue vs this day our dayly bread. And forgiue us our debts as we forgiue our debtors. And lede us not into tenestation, but deliur vs from euil. For thine is the kingdome, and the power, and the glory for ever. Amen."

Prejudice.

Were your ever at sea in a thick fog, when you could not discern between a cloud and the land? Then you know what prejudice is. Those who form their opinions of others by what has been told them, or by merely seeing them pass by, look only through a thick fog, and cannot discern the true character. You may be a friend of ours; we may speak hard things of one you do not know, and on this account you are prejudiced against him. Is it right? There are scores of excellent men, shunned and disliked by those who know nothing derogatory to their character, but who have had their minds turned by some one who spoke a thoughtless word.

Be careful. Never speak lightly or contemptously of another on account of the prejudices of a friend. Men of sterling minds are not guilty of this breach of good manners.—Sel.

—An exchange pertinently inquires: "Is it an exaggeration to say that the professed churchmen of a city like New York, the people who kneel at our chancels and communicate at our altars, spend more on their wines than on their religion?" and ventures its opinion. "We believe that the statement is far within the truth. Their amusements cost them far more than their churches. Their luxuries receive their dollars; their charities carefully count their pennies."

—Friendship is the only thing in the world concerning the usefulness of which all mankind are agreed.

From Brother Thompson.

BROTHER REED:—

Another glorious time of refreshing has just transpired, away out on the western wilds of Kansas; one more union of the brethren and sisters, awaiting the speedy advent of our Lord and Savior; another blessed reunion of loving ones whose hearts and aims are one, "having the same Spirit of Faith." We refer to the conference meeting at Arion, Kansas, June 17th, 18th, 19th and 20th. On Thursday evening, Elder J. S. Thorpe spoke on the universal and the general salvation, basing his arguments on 1 Tim. iv. 10. The school session of Friday deferred further exercises until the evening, when Brother W. J. Orem, of Severance, Doniphan county, addressed an attentive audience, on the subject of Christian duty and development, from 2 Pet. i. 1—11; and was followed by the writer on the return of the Lord and the reign of the saints.

Saturday morning met in conference session and considered the following subjects, viz.: 1. How can we best send forth the gospel to a perishing world? 2. How can we best assist our needy brethren in Eastern and Southern Kansas? It was agreed by the conference that the former question be laid by for three months, till we could ascertain the result of our efforts to realize crops, etc.; and that then Brother L. Glover and T. Malone correspond with Brother W. J. Orem, of Doniphan county, with a view to secure his services as evangelist for Northern and Western Kansas. Preliminary to an attempt to relieve the grasshopper sufferers, it was directed by the conference, that the brethren who are in want be requested to report themselves by letter to Thomas Malone, Arion, Cloud county, Kansas, with a view to their assistance, if the crops of Western Kansas fill their present promise. A season was then spent in exhortations to earnestness in studying the Scriptures, relative to the "Faith" once delivered to the saints; and kindred topics.

The last day, (Sunday) a large audidence assembled in a grove, with baskets of provisions, prepared to remain during the day, and were addressed in the forenoon by Brother Orem, on the Kingdom of God, and in the afternoon by the writer, on the unity of the gospel and its comprehensiveness.

Excellent order and attention prevailed during the entire series of meetings. Unity, harmony, and brotherly love, were thoroughly manifested and practically inculcated by the brethren and sisters living at Arion, and those assembled there. All present were deeply impressed with this,—our first conference in Western Kansas. We had long waited for it, and enjoyed it to the fullest extent. We expect to meet again in about three months, if the Lord wills.

Yours for the truth,
J. K. THOMPSON.

Unnoticed Labor.

Many Christians have to endure the solitude of unnoticed labor. They are serving God in a way which is exceedingly useful, but not at all noticeable. How very sweet to many workers are those little corners of the newspapers and magazines which describe their labors and successes; yet some who are doing what God will think a great deal more of at the last, never saw their names in print.

Yonder beloved brother is plodding away in a little country village; nobody knows anything about him, but he is bringing souls to God. Unknown to fame, the angels are acquainted with him, and a few precious ones whom he has led to Jesus know him well.

Perhaps yonder sister has a little class in the Sunday School; there is nothing striking in her class; nobody thinks of her as a rer. remarkable worker; she is a flower that blooms almost unseen, but she is none the less fragrant.

There is a Bible-woman; she is mentioned in the report as making so many visits a week, but nobody discovers all that she is doing for the poor and needy, and how many are saved in the Lord through her instrumentality. Hundreds of God's dear servants are serving him without the encouragement of man's approving eye, yet they are not alone—the Father is with them.

Never mind where you work, care more about how you work. Never mind who sees, if God approves. If He smiles, be content. We cannot be always sure when we are most useful. 'Tis not the acreage you show; it is the multiplication which God has given to the seed which will make us the harvest. You have less to do with being successful than with being faithful. Your main comfort is that in your labor you are not alone, for God, the Eternal One, who guides the marches of the stars, is with you.—Spurgeon.

The Want Met by Christ.

Strauss neglected in his work the point which should have been most essential—the origin of Christianity, the supreme and critical epoch in which the doctrine arose. Liberty and the republic had died in Rome. The philosophers of Greece had been converted, with the Stoics, into practical moralists. Jerusalem, which always endeavored to preserve its God apart from the world, experienced the desire of the Sadducees to give him in communion to all nations and make him known to all the world. The deserts were filled with saints, with ascetics and hermits, who clamorously demanded the dew of heaven for their desolate, thirsting souls. In Egypt, wherever there passed a conqueror, a tribune, or a poet, the people asked if this was he they hoped for. Alexandria brought together the ideas of the East and West, as if to form a new dogma. The Ebionites Essenes were scattered about Jerusalem, making public profession of poverty, with the presentiment of the rich renovation of the spirit. The Gnostics brought in vague echoes of the Oriental religions, reflections of the early twilight of the religious conscience. And all this crisis was collected and personified in a youth of the most benighted region, the most oppressed people, the divine Youth who annihilated religious caste and gave his life for the two grandest ideas of future civilization, for the moral liberty of souls and religious equality before God for all men.—Emilio Castelar, in Harpers' Magazine for May.

Dry Goods Christians.

There seems to be in the churches a great strife raging. It is an Austrelitz of ribbons. The carnage of color is seen all over our religious assemblages. Along on the outskirts of the Sabbath audiences you see, here and there, a picket of fashion. But down in the middle of the church are the solid columns, blazing away all through the service. Five hundred "broken and contrite hearts" covered up in rainbows and spangles. Followers of the "meek and lowly Nazarene" all a-jingle and a-flash. Ten cents for the missionary cause and two hundred and fifty dollars for trappings. Church of God hung by the neck with gold chains, and diamond-locketed. Unsophisticated person traveling on two yards of silk, dragged by the lady going up the aisle in front of him. Diamonds enough to give all India the Gospel. The item of dress among Christian people on the Sabbath day is an outrage on the Christian religion.

For graceful and beautiful apparel we have admiration. But the strife in Christian circles as to who shall excel in costly millinery, and who shall dash up to the church door in goyest turnout, and who shall make the most embarassment of wardrobe, is one of the great hindrances to religious advancement. Our ladies' hats and shawls are so fine that on rainy days we are afraid to go to church lest we get a drop on them. Our head gear is worth more than our souls. We teeter and swagger up the aisle, to the disgust of good men and the grief of angels. Enough money is expended by Christians of our city, in excess of the requisite outlay for dress, to relieve all the poverty, and educate all the ignorance, and balk all the crime. Much of piety of our churches is being smothered under shirred basques and jabot ruffles and toulsines. Some of our Christian gentlemen have boots so tight they can hardly walk in paths of righteousness, and they feel in church more like swearing than praying, because their corns hurt; and our Christian women shut out the Sun of righteousness by twenty-dollar parasols, lace trimmed, silk lined, silver mounted. The poor are kept out of the church because their plain apparel looks so bad in contrast.

Righteousness.

It was the incorruptible integrity of Job, and, in a higher sense, of the redeemer himself, that saved them from the temptations of the devil. And it is as true now, that no one can successfully meet the power of temptation unless he is righteous, as that a soldier could not defend himself against a foe without such a coat of mail.

A want of integrity will leave a man exposed to the assaults of the enemy, just as a man would be whose coat of mail was defective, or some part of which was wanting.

The king of Israel was smitten by an arrow sent from a bow drawn at a venture, "between the joints of the harness;" and many a man who thinks he has on the Christian armor is smitten in the same manner. There is some defect of character; some want of incorruptible integrity; some point that is unguarded, that will be sure to be the point of attack by the foe. So David was tempted to commit the enormous crimes that stained his memory, and Peter to deny his Lord. So Judas was assailed, for the want of the armor of righteousness, through his avarice; and so by some want of incorruptible integrity in a single point, many a minister of the gospel has been assailed and has fallen. It may be added here that we need a righteousness which God alone can give—the righteousness of God our Savior—to make us perfectly invulnerable to all the arrows of the foe.—Dr. Albert Barnes.

A goodly number of brethren and friends from Goodland, Rensselaer and Salem were in attendance, and did much to help forward the work which we believe has commenced in earnest in many honest hearts. May God bless the people with the ancient gospel, and lead them to life and immortality.

Catholic Power and Numbers in the United States.

In "Harper's Weekly" of July 3d is the first of two communications entitled, "Mitred Tyrants," from a Roman Catholic clergyman. The entire article is too lengthy for THE RESTITUTION, and we therefore must content ourselves with some extracts. The object of making these, is to show our readers the enormous force, in these United States, which is perfectly, blindly, and unresistingly, at the disposal of a foreign potentate, who is a most deadly enemy to our most cherished institutions. We propose to lay before our readers the rise, progress, and present status of Romanism in this country from, Catholic authority. The clergyman situated to gives these facts and figures from the "Catholic World." He says:

"It may surprise many persons to learn that the Catholic population of the United States was probably 8,200,000 in 1850. This does not appear from the census returns, but it is nevertheless true. The census of religious bodies is, at most, an approximation; the returns are usually made up according to church accommodations or sittings. But while this rule may give us approximately the numbers of Protest denominations, because there is only one congregation to every Protestant church,—it is quite misleading when applied to Catholics. In the larger cities and towns Catholic churches are crowded every Sunday by two, three, four, or five distinct congregations; , and therefore the church sittings furnish no accurate account of the Catholic population. To get at the real numbers the sittings should be twice or three times multiplied. We Catholics have a ready way of fixing the amount of our population, which experience proves to be in the main correct. We allow an average of 2,000 people for each priest; and as we know the number of priests almost to a man, we have only to multiply the number by 2,000. There are, at least, 4,500 priests in the United States. These figures, multiplied by 2,000, give us a population of 9,000,000. Some put the estimate higher, and say 10,000,000 to 12,000,000. I will say 8,500,000 to be below the mark; and though statistics are dry reading, I will take a brief retrospect of the growth by which the church has attained these grand proportions.

The roots of the Catholic church reach away back to the beginnings of American history. Bancroft tells us: "The first permanent efforts of French enterprise in colonizing America preceded any permanent English settlement north of the Potomac. Years before the Pilgrims anchored within Cape Cod, the Roman Catholic church had been planted by the missionaries from France in the eastern moiety of Maine. But it was the colony of Maryland, founded by Lord Baltimore in 1634, that became the nucleus of Catholic development. At the date of Independence, Catholics numbered about 25,000. In 1785 they were 30,000, in a total population of 3,000,000, or one one-hundredth of the whole. It was in 1789 that the church was regularly established on American soil by the erection of a bishopric at Baltimore. The work done up to that time was in the nature of missionary enterprise. In 1808 Catholics were 100,000, in a total population of 6,500,000, or one sixty-fifth of the whole; in 1830 they were 450,000, in a total of 13,000,000, or one twenty-ninth of the whole; in 1840 they were 800,000, in a total of 17,070,000, or one-eighteenth of the whole; in 1850 they were 1,400,000, in a total of 21,000,000, or one-seventh of the whole; in 1860 they were 3,500,000, in a total of about 30,000,000, or more than one-fifth of the whole.

Thus has the Catholic church grown by colossal strides in the United States. For a period of forty years—1810 to 1850—Catholics more than doubled their number from census to census; that is to say, the church received a decennial increase of more than one hundred per cent., while the general population increased in the ratio of about thirty-five per cent. Wonderful as the fact seems, it is easily accounted for when we recollect the swarms of people that immigration brought to our shores. From 1820 to 1850 over 2,000,000 Irish emigrants came to the the United States, not to mention German and other nationalities, and of these the great majority professed the Catholic faith. Other causes likewise might be recited. But it is enough for my purpose to show the present numerical strength of the church in America.

Of course bishops and priests increased in a manner corresponding to the increase of the people. The first bishop was appointed for Baltimore in 1780. In 1808 there was one at New Orleans, one at Louisville, one at Boston, one at New York. In 1830 there were eleven bishops; in 1840, sixteen; in 1850, thirty-three; in 1860, forty-three; in 1870, sixty. The whole establishment now consists of one cardinal, seven archbishops, fifty-seven bishops, 4,500 priests, and 8,500,000 people.

How are the Catholics of America governed? The fact is, the Catholics of America—more than one-fifth of the population—are governed by absolute, irresponsible power, centered in the class of bishops, and wielded by them without regard to any law, civil or ecclesiastical. And so supreme is the arbitrary will of every individual bishop within his diocese that there is no appeal from his fiat."

We have given the above that our readers may know, from trust-worthy sources, the numbers, and strength, of that power that is in conflict with true religion, and modern civilization. The first point of attack is the American school system. If the school system could be completely subverted, civil liberty, religious toleration, and human rights generally, as defined in the Magna Charta of American Independence, would not escape the attacks of the Jesuitized church, whose policy of conquest is thus significantly stated in Papal terms: "In the struggle against the enemies of the church, no victory is so felicitous as that in which there are no more combats to succeed the triumphs." That is, Rome wages a war of extermination. To fully know what is under the law of Rome, we will close with some extracts from an encyclical letter published by Pope Leo XII., bearing date May 5th, 1824. "There is a sect which cannot be unknown to you, injuriously arrogating to itself the name of philosophy, that has resuscitated from their ashes the scattered pl maxes of every species of error. This sect, outwardly presenting the flattering appearance of piety and liberality, professes toleration, thus it is named, or rather indifference; and extends not only to civil affairs, of which we do not speak, but even to those of religion, in teaching that God has given to man perfect liberty; in such wise that each one may, without endangering his salvation, embrace and adopt any sect or opinion as best pleases himself, according to his private judgement. What shall I say more? The iniquity of our enemies has augmented so much, that besides the deluge of pernicious books, opposed to the faith, they have attained the point of wresting the Holy Scriptures, to the detriment of religion, which were given from on high for general edification.

You are aware, venerable brethren, that a society, vulgarly called BIBLE SOCIETY, audaciously spreads itself over all the land, and that in contempt of the traditions of the holy fathers, and against the celebrated decree of the Council of Trent, they aim, with all their strength, and by every means to translate, or rather to corrupt, the Holy Scriptures in the vulgar tongue of every nation, and which give a just cause of fear that it may happen with every other translation, as it has with those already known, mainly, that it is therein found, by a foul interpolation, instead of the Gospel of Christ, they give the Gospel of men, or rather of devils' * *

Thus our paper not only gives the numerical strength of Romanism in these United States, but from these extracts from Leo's Encyclical, its character, and disposition toward civil and religious freedom, are freely and fully set forth. Bible Societies are particularly hateful to Rome. With us the Bible alone is authoritative in matters of faith and practice,—and—"GOD ALONE IS LORD OF THE CONSCIENCE."

The Signs of the Times.

So many times for the coming of Christ have been set, followed by failures and disappointments, that it is high time that expositors of prophecy should look well to the foundation of their hope. And while some are readjusting their chronology, others are examining the character and applications of the signs of the times. The signs of Christ's coming and kingdom, foretold by our Lord in Matt. xxiv., Mark xiii. and xxi., are passing through the ordeal of criticism. And while some are investigating the character of these signs, we propose to criticise the views held by some relative to the class whose deliverance is portended by these signs. It is believed by most Adventists, that Christians have been the subjects of the great tribulation, and will be the subjects of the deliverance foretold. To this view we demur, and now we propose to give a few reasons. We believe that the nation of Jews were to be the subjects, of both the tribulation and the deliverance so graphically described by our Lord. The three witnesses above referred to are in perfect accord in reference to the time, place, and subjects of both the tribulation and the deliverance therefrom. This tribulation was to commence at Jerusalem, not Rome. It was to commence when Jerusalem should be encompassed with armies, not when the Pope of Rome should inaugurate the great persecution against the church, more than five centuries after Jerusalem should be destroyed. The subjects of this unprecedented tribulation were to be Jews, and not Gentile Christians. According to Matthew, Christ says, "When ye, therefore, shall see the abomination of desolation, spoken of by Daniel the prophet, stand in the holy place, (who so readeth, let him understand). Then let them which be in Judea flee unto the mountains: let him which is on the house top not come down to take anything out of his house: Neither let him which is in the field return back to take his clothes. And woe unto them that are with child and to them that give suck in those days. But pray ye that your flight be not in the winter, neither on the Sabbath day. For then shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time; no, nor never shall be. And except those days should be shortened, there should no flesh be saved; but for the elect's sake those days shall be shortened. Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the powers of the heavens shall be shaken." Matt. xxiv. 15, 29, 20.

Mark represents Christ as saying, "But when you shall see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing where it ought not, (let him that readeth understand), then let them that be in Judea flee to the mountain. And let him that is on the house top not go down into the house, neither enter therein to take anything out of his house. And let him that is in the field not turn back again to take up his garment. But woe to them that are with child, and to them that give suck in those days. And pray ye that your flight be not in the winter. For in those days shall be affliction such as was not since the beginning of the creation, which God created, unto this time, neither shall be. And except that the Lord had shortened those days, no flesh should be saved; but for the elect's sake, whom he hath chosen, he hath shortened the days. But in those days, after that tribulation, the sun shall be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars of heaven shall fall, and the powers that are in heaven shall be shaken." Mark xiii. 14, 20, 24.

As recorded by Luke we read, "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains; and let them which are in the midst of it depart out; and let not them that are in the countries enter thereinto. For these be days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled. But woe unto them that are with child, and unto them that give suck, in those days; for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations; and Jerusalem shall be trodden down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled. And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars, and upon the earth distress of nations with perplexity, the sea and the winds roaring; men's hearts failing them for fear, and for looking after those things which are coming on the earth; for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Luke xxi. 20–26.

1. The most casual reader cannot fail to see that the three foregoing witnesses refer to the same series of events. According to their concurrent testimony, the great tribulation was to commence at Jerusalem and Judea, and to fall upon the Jews. According to their united testimony, the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, and the Roman army are one and the same power. In reference to the place and time of this tribulation, according to Matthew, this affliction, according to Mark, and these days of vengeance, according to Luke, were to commence at Jerusalem, not Rome; and when Jerusalem was compassed with armies, and not more than five hundred years subsequently when the emperor of Rome should invest the pope with power to persecute Gentile Christians. Then (not five hundred years subsequently) were in Judea, (not Italy, France, Spain and Germany,) were to flee to the mountains. Then was to be great distress in the land of Judea, and wrath upon this people (the Jews), and they were to be led away captive into all nations. Never was a prophecy more literally fulfilled than was this remarkable prophecy in relation to Jerusalem, Judea and the Jews. And never was a prophecy more perverted in all its essential parts than has been this prophecy, by the theory which has applied it to Rome, the popes and Christians. But it may be claimed that there cannot be two unprecedented tribulations, and that the Papal tribulation having been much greater than the Jewish tribulation, it must be the one foretold by our Lord. To which we would reply (1) that it is not true either in respect to the duration or the rigor of this tribulation, that the latter of the two fell upon the church. Let any unprejudiced person read the history of the persecution, by all the nations of the earth, of the Jews for eighteen centuries, or the predictions concerning them, and he will never again make this assevernation.

2. It is true that there cannot be two unprecedented tribulations upon the same people, but there may be upon two distinct classes of people. The Jews were to be the subjects of such tribulation as never had been inflicted upon them and as never shall be again. They will have had their unprecedented tribulation antecedently to Christ's coming; and the Gentiles will have theirs when Michael, (Israel's Prince, shall stand up for their deliverance. Hers will be subsequently to the coming of Christ. Dan. xii. 1. The former has been inflicted by the Gentiles, but the latter will be inflicted by God. It is further objected to the application of this prophecy to the Jews from the fact that the subjects of the great tribulation are called the elect. Paul, speaking of his brethren and kinsmen, according the flesh, whose condition during this dispensation is so hopeless that he would die the accursed death of the cross for their salvation, calls them the "election beloved." Rom. ix. 2: xi. 28. He also affirms that the "adoption, and the glory, and the covenants, and the promises" belong to the natural branches. Rom. ix. 4. God commanded the prophet Ezekiel to say to the children of Israel, while in bondage in the enemies land, "But I have pity for my holy name, which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went. And I will sanctify Israel, and they shall be my people." Ezek. xxxvi. 21; xxxvii. 27, 28. God calls "Israel his people." Ezek. xxxiv. 30. He also calls Israel his "holy flock." Ezek. xxxvii. 28. Whether among the nations or in their own land; whether loyal or disloyal, they are of God's chosen, or elect people.

"The Two Advents of Christ."

Every one who receives the testimony of the Scriptures believes that "Jesus Christ hath come in the flesh," 1 John, iv. 2, and also that he "is coming in the flesh," 2 John 7. There are two advents; the first is past, the second is future. At his first advent he appeared to the Jewish people as a root out of a dry ground—the despised representative of a line that had long sunk into obscurity, having no form nor comeliness to make him desirable—the powerless heir of a fallen throne. At his second advent, he will far transcend in the glory of his condition and the greatness of his power all that they had conceived respecting him. Amidst the obscurity and meanness of his surroundings at his first advent there were not wanting indications of his real estate as the Son of God. The angelic announcement—the appearance of the angels to the shepherds of Bethlehem—the star which led the wise men to the place of his birth—his converse with the doctors—the dove-like symbol and the heavenly voice at his baptism—the transfiguration on Mount Tabor, and the wonderful miracles he wrought, bespoke him more than man, proclaimed him Son of God. He also frequently referred, in his teachings, to a glory he had previously sustained, and spoke of his coming again in that glory. After telling his disciples of the sufferings he should endure in accomplishing the object of his first advent, and that they would also be called to suffer for his name's sake; he depicted to their minds the glory of his second manifestation, and promised them a share in that exalted condition. He said "The Son of Man shall come in the glory of his Father, with his angels; and then he shall reward every man according to his works.

He came the first time, in accordance with the purpose of God to put away sin by the sacrifice of himself. He will come the second time, according to the same purpose, to complete the work of redemption, to save and glorify his elect church, and subdue and reconcile all things to God under his government. There is abundant evidence in the Old Testament Scriptures that Christ must come twice to fulfil the purpose of God. Take the first declaration of redemption made to fallen man, in the doom pronounced upon the serpent, the devil, who beguiled Eve. "I will put enmity between thee and the woman and between thy seed and her seed. He shall bruise thy head, and thou shalt bruise his heel." Christ is the woman's seed, and the bruising of his heel indicates a condition of suffering, to be succeeded by a triumph in bruising the serpent's head. The first advent fulfilled the predicted sufferings; the second shall fulfill the predicted triumph. Isaiah contemplates the Messiah in two different conditions. In one he is a plant out of a dry ground, destitute of worldly rank and power; of sorrowful mien and compassionate heart, enjoying the sufferings and healing the sicknesses of mankind and by his stripes giving health and cure to the fallen and depraved. In the other he is a glorious prince, distinguished by the most exalted titles, sitting upon the throne of David and reigning over the house of Jacob. It is evident that these two conditions cannot be predicted of the same person at the same time; and since they both belong to Christ they belong to different manifestations, and require two advents for their accomplishment. These two conditions are seen in all the prophets and the Psalms, showing that Christ must first suffer and afterwards enter into his glory. The first class of these predictions has been literally accomplished in the first advent of the Son of God; and the second class will also be most completely and literally fulfilled in its season. The advent of humiliation and suffering was the most improbable of the two; and yet strange and incongruous as it was that the Son of God should take the form of a servant in the likeness of sinful flesh and suffer the death of the cross, it was exactly fulfilled; and shall not the advent of power and glory which is consonant with his nature and relations be also literally fulfilled? Surely he who came forth out of Bethlehem as the seed of the woman in the incarnation, will come again in the clouds of heaven, as the Ancient of days, in glorified humanity, in that very body with which he ascended into heaven. For the angels of the ascension testified to the gazing disciples, saying, "Ye men of Galilee, why stand ye gazing up into heaven? This same Jesus which is taken up from you into heaven, shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go into heaven."—J. H. W., in Prophetic Times.

Modern Witch Hunting.

SUPERSTITION IN WESTERN KENTUCKY.

The Columbus (Ky.) "Messenger" says: There came up in Clinton county last week a very peculiar trial for this enlightened age and this land of boasted Christianity, bringing vividly to mind the narrow-minded superstitions of the Puritans and the days of Cotton Mather. There lived a few miles from Clinton, in this county, a well-known and respected family by the name of Berry, the eldest of which had been married, and lived in the edge of Ballard county. This daughter has poor health, and it seems must be at least partly deranged. This daughter told the family that a man by the name of McDonald had died near Charleston, Mo., and that he had since appeared to her in the form of an angel, and made various revelations to her; that he had told her the nature of her disease, and what to do to effect a cure; and that she had followed the directions given and been relieved, thus proving the reliability of the spiritual communication. She also told them that on another occasion this spirit had informed her that certain neighboring ladies were witches, and that they would come to the house in the form of cats and do them some great injury.

The family were believers in the power of spirits to communicate with physical beings, and their minds were so wrought upon that they fully believed the insane story of their daughter. The Holy Scriptures were searched for confirmatory proofs in prophecies and in parallel cases of history, as well as for authority as to what should be done with the witches. Here they convinced themselves that "witches" should be put to death.

In the meantime the ladies who had been accused of witchcraft were apprised of the state of mind existing in the Berry family, and became alarmed beyond endurance. Finally one day while the two boys in the family were out getting wood, a couple of cats came running and caterwauling near by. The boys, to use their own words, "thought the witches had them," and scampered into the house. The elder boys, aged probably 16 or 18 years, took a gun and went out to shoot the cats, or whatever they might be; but, failing to find them, he began making threats against the ladies, whom he supposed were identified with the cats, for he firmly believed that these ladies could transform themselves into cats, and again resume their human forms at will. Some reports say he actually went to their homes in search of them, making threats by the way.

Having gone thus far, other neighbors interfered and caused the arrest of the family, consisting of Mr. John Berry, his wife, and two sons. Being themselves put under oath, they testified that they solemnly believed these stories of witch-craft, and that in justice and obedience to the Scriptures, these witches should be killed.

One or two attorneys and some other citizens told them that such belief was insanity, and if they persisted in it they would have to be sent to the insane asylum. After considerable reasoning they admitted that they might be mistaken, and they were released on giving bond in the sum of $500 for good behavior.

Watchwords of Life.

Hope,
While there is a hand to strike!
Date,
While there's a young heart brave!
Veil,
While there's a lock unwrought!
Trust,
While there's a God to save!
Learn,
That there's a work for each!
Feel,
That there's a strength in God!
Know,
That there's a crown reserved!
Wait,
Though heads cloud and rod!
Love,
When there's a foe that wrongs!
Help,
When there's a brother's need!
Watch,
When there's a tempter near!
Pray,
Both in word and deed!

The Cosmogony of Moses.

The Mosaic account of Creation has by some been treated as a myth, in which there may be some faint allusion to geological periods, embracing the formation of thousands of years; by others it has been discarded altogether as a false theory, the fabrication of ignorance and deceit. These conclusions are based upon the hypothesis that Moses relates the production of matter and the original formation of the universe; and, not being in accord with the deductions of science, his account must be rejected or understood in a tropical sense. A third class, with commendable zeal for the honor of God's word, though mistaken in regard to its teachings, maintain that the Mosaic narrative must be received as the only veritable account of the original production of matter and formation of the universe despite of all geological and astronomical theories. The result is that a conflict has been inaugurated between science and revelation, which engages fearfully on the latter. This is deplorable, as there is no occasion whatever for any such conflict, inasmuch as the Cosmogony of Moses does not relate to the origin of matter and its primitive formations, but to a reconstruction of what is termed the heavens and the earth, or the conditions of this globe and its atmospheric surroundings, with new orders of plants and trees, new kinds of animals and a new race of intellectual beings.

The production of matter and primitive formation of the universe may be put as far back as scientists claim, and allowance be made for the many changes which have doubtless taken place, as indicated by the footprints of time, without affecting the verity of the Mosaic record. The strata of our earth indicate not only their gradual formation through many ages, but also their disturbance, at long intervals, by violent convulsions, through the action of fire and water, whereby the surface of the globe was greatly changed and at times, submerged with water. Now, in all probability, such a convulsion of the earth had happened not long previous to the date of the Mosaic account as is indicated by Gen. i. 2, "And the earth was without form and void, and darkness was upon the face of the deep," for these words describe the condition of the earth before the six days creation began, before God called forth the light which was the operation of the first day. The earth was covered with water and the atmosphere was incapable of supporting life or transmitting light. And all the pre-Adamic inhabitants had perished. All was in darkness and death when the six days work of reconstruction began.

Gen. i. 1 and ii. 1 relate to the same organization; the former being the presential statement of what is particularly described in chap. i. 3-31, and the latter the summing up of the same. The terms "heavens and earth" are not used in these passages for the substance of the universe, but for the condition of our globe and its surrounding and with special reference to this globe, and its inhabitants. The substance of the universe is eternal, the condition of its various parts is changeable. The "heavens and earth" of Gen. i. 1, and ii. 1, are the same as the "heavens" and "earth" of 2 Pet. iii. 5, which passed away when God destroyed the world by a flood, and gave place to the "heavens and earth which are now," ver. 7; and which also must pass away to give place to the "new heavens and new earth" which we look for, ver. 13. Now these "new heavens and new earth" which we look for according to his promise, Isa. lxv. 16-25, is there described as a creation by the same word used in Gen. i. 1, which shows that to create does not signify to produce the substance of things, but to reconstruct their condition. And the Cosmogony of Moses simply narrates one of these reconstructions of the condition of the globe and its surroundings to prepare it as a habitation for man. This leaves to scientists as many millions of years previous as they can demonstrate were required to effect the changes and formations indicated in the several strata of our globe. Nor is there the least ground for the conflict which on this subject has been waged between theologians and scientists. There is no difficulty reconciling the teachings of the Scriptures with the legitimate deductions of science. The Bible is not responsible for either the mistakes of its advocates or the misconceptions of its opponents. It stands, in all the sublimity of revelation, unimpeachable.—J. W. W. in Prophetic Times.

The Personality of Man.

ITS ELEVATION.

We are now prepared to set our hope before us in a light that must be specially welcome to all whose sympathetic sigh over a groaning creation is prolonged and deepened by a sense of personal frailty that slumbers seldom and never sleeps. We hope to be other men than we yet are, and much nobler men. Extensive as our hope is—ramified through the circle of our heirship of all things, it is intensive to a degree fully corresponding. We are to be made capable of sustaining such an amazing weight of glory. Our destination is to be uplifted in the scale of being. Our hearts are to be made pure, and our characters to be perfected. But high as is such an expectation, it is not all that we are warranted to look for. No! our characters are to be raised and made secure upon a far higher pedestal. In a word, our personality is to be remoulded and ennobled. It is to be reframed after a new type.

The proof of this lies concentrated in that wonderful paragraph in 1 Cor. xv. 42-49. It is all there; and we cease to wonder how it has come to pass that we should not sooner discover it, only when we reflect on the blinding effect of an ineffective and discontented translation. When we grasp the force of the contrast between Adam and Christ, as the first and second Adams, as that contrast is set forth by the two pairs of terms psychē, psychikon, and pneuma, pneumatikon,—only then, depend upon it, do we seize the full power of the Apostle's great argument. If men will have the vilifying term "natural," let them be consistent and carry forward the apostle's statement by further rendering: "And so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living natural!" By what right can we snap in twain the connected contrast of Paul's statement, and turn his "no" into a "not so!" Better far go the whole length of barbarism, and render the first half of the contrast: "There is an animal body, ... and so it is written, The first man Adam was made a living animal!" At all events the noun and the adjective must be made to answer to each other; or, let men talk about inelegance as they will, the mere English reader is hopelessly cheated. If we must be elegant, let us rather transfer the Greek words, and say:

1. "There is a psychical body,

2. "And there is a pneumatical body;

"And so it is written—

3. "The first man Adam was made a living psyche,

4. "The last Adam was made a life-giving pneuma."

Then, indeed, though it be through a tantalising veil of pedantry, the face of truth could be seen. Had we not better show a little strong common sense, that fears not to be laughed at, even though with a little awkwardness the bucket should be let down? Down let it go, for we are not very thirsty?

1. "There is a soulish body,

2. "And there is a spiritual body;

"And so it is written,—

3. "The first man Adam was made a living soul,

4. "The last man Adam was made a life-giving spirit.

Only let the correspondence between links (1) and (3), and (2) and (4) be firmly grasped, and we may go on our way, rejoicing with our prize.

The apostle's teaching is:—

a. That there are two archetypal men, Adam the first, and Adam the second;

b. That the second Adam has a higher personality than the first had; and

c. That, as we are created in the image of the first adam, so are we to be redeemed into the image of the second Adam.

Thus is our very personality to be elevated. For, consider, it is the person, not the character or work of the second Adam, that is here set forth as the higher. The first Adam was, the second Adam is; what the first Adam was, that are we already; and what the second Adam is, that are we to be by-and-bye.

The personality of Adam is divinely described, when he is called "a living soul;" and the personality of Christ (we assume, the risen Christ) is with equal precision described when He is called "a life-giving spirit."

The conclusion is, that we too are to become life-giving spirits.

In order to even a feeble realization of the greatness of the change, let us reflect: The first Adam, being characteristically "a living soul," had a soulish body, possessing no immediate kinship with spirit. Its was of the earth earthy. Its foundation was the dust. Though it was not dust only, or dead dust, still it was dust. Gen. iii. 19. And this was an infirmity which God knew and remembered in his considerate pity. Psa. ciii. 14. Adam was not, like the risen Savior, characteristically spirit. He had a spirit; but spirit had not penetrated and moulded him into a spiritual man. Flesh—the lobbed contrast to spirit—preponderated in him, probably before the fall, certainly after. And these radical defects have been inherited by us. Our bodies are developed in advance of our minds. We are creatures of appetite and passion. Soul in scripture is the seat of lust. True, God's Spirit, speaking in and through ours, strives with us, pleads in us. But it is a prolonged and desperate warfare.

Redeeming love designs for us a higher state—even a reconstructed and elevated personality.

Our God—our new and mighty kinsman—has the work in hand. He, for Himself, has already won the prize. Startling as it may seem, He must once have been a soulish man, or He could not have been "made like unto his brethren." "The Word was made (became) flesh." But He conquered at every point. He received without stint the everlasting Spirit of God, Luke iii. 22; iv. 1; John iii. 34; Heb. ix. 14, and in his strength He prevailed. His victory was perfected on the cross; and so ended "the days of his flesh." Heb. v. 7. Thereupon He was made alive in spirit. 1 Peter iii. 18. His soul was not abandoned to hades, nor his body to the grave. Acts ii. 31. He arose a reconstituted man. His humanity was elevated. He had still a body and a soul as before; but these were henceforth in closest sympathy with his spirit; aye! and unquestionably became the prompt and potent organism of the spirit dwelling in Him. His person, through and through, was penetrated by his spirit; so that He should both have life in Himself, and have within Him the inherent capacity to bestow life on others. John v. 26, 27. He has now dwelling in Him, as a personal prerogative, the power to subdue all things unto Himself. Phil. iii. 21. And the time is coming when, with this life, He will fill all things. Eph. i. 23; iv. 10.

And we are to be made like Him, in the range of our being we are to be raised nearer to God. The divinest element in our personality is to assume the dominion. We are to become spiritual men. Our bodies are to be spiritual bodies. Inherent power and manifest glory are to be their normal condition. We are, in a word, to bear the image of the Heavenly Adam. Amazing prospect! we too are to become life-giving spirits. We are not only to have life for ourselves, in plenitude of power and glory, but we are to diffuse and sustain it beyond ourselves. We are to become the organism through which our Head will fill all things. Eph. i. 23. The prospect becomes dark through excess of light."

Let us, however, lay one thing well to heart; the process of transformation begins now. Our resurrection will be only the fitting crown to our regeneration. "That which is born of the Spirit is spirit." John iii. 6. "The Spirit itself bears witness with our spirits that we are the children of God." Rom. viii. 16. "He that is joined to the Lord is one spirit." 1 Cor. vi. 17. Even now the spirit within us craves for its destined dominion, and thereby counteracts the craving of the flesh. Gal. v. 17. Let us, then, by all means, press forward in pursuit of sanctification; let us strive after perfection of character; but let us do this in the quickening faith that we are thereby ensuring the ultimate, permanent, and glorious elevation of our very personality.—J. B. Rotherham, in Our Hope.

The Bible.

O friends! if there is one great thing in this world, it is the Bible of God; great in origin, great in thought, great in promise, great in beauty, great in purpose, great in power, great in its result! It hangs us by a golden cord from the throne of the Highest, and all heaven's light, life, love, and sweetness come down into it for us. It hangs there like a celestial harp. The daughters of sorrow tune it and awake a strain of consolation. The hand of joy strikes it, and it feels a divine note of gladness. The sinner comes to it, and it discourses to him of repentance and salvation. The saint bends an ear to it, and then it talks to him of an intercessor and an immortal kingdom. The dying man places his trembling hand on it, and there steal thence into his soul these words, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world." When thou passest through the waters, they shall not overflow thee; and through the fire, thou shalt not be burned." "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world!" "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." "This mortal shall put on immortality, and this corruptible shall put on incorruption, and death shall be swallowed up in victory." Where is promise, where is philosophy, where is song like this? Magnify the word of God!—Bible Banner.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Annual Conference of the State of Indiana will convene at Bear Creek, Jay county, Thursday, August 12, 1875.

A family tent is to be used by the brethren of the valley with the view of the Conference to be held in Bear Creek so that the people may attend the yearly convention.

The object for which this Conference has convened from year to year, is not only to confer together, but to co-operate, or work together, all being mutually interested in the great cause of Divine truth, and each equally responsible (according to ability) for the promulgation of that truth, which promulgation, like every other enterprise committed to the hands of mortal men for prosecution, requires, and absolutely must have, money or fail of successful accomplishment.

Thus far in the history of the past, we have done comparatively but little, almost a failure. For the last two years we have done much more than formerly, still it comes far short of what it should be, or would be were it some enterprise simply for our temporal welfare. Now brethren, this ought not to be so, and need not be. Why is it? Is it because the sin of covetousness is so generally prevalent? or is it for want of interest in the cause? These reasons might fully solve the query so far as some few individuals are concerned, but to be forced to believe that this is a fair solution of the trouble so far as the great body is concerned would be painful indeed.

From year to year as we come together, there are many noble souls, with hearts filled with the love of truth, come forward and do the extent of their ability, and many of them more that after all they are comparatively few) the mass of the brotherhood remain at home,—the Conference is over—those that were there as individuals did all they could, and thus the matter rests (with little exception) to be repeated again another year.

Some congregations have always been noble exceptions to this, but this has been the general rule, hence there is no co-operation.

Now let me suggest to each and every congregation in Indiana, that a practical way to bring about co-operation and a sure way, would be to call a meeting of your congregation at once—confer together—say how much you are willing to do, $50, $100, $200, $300, $400, as the case may be, select some one to represent you at the Conference,—thus all will be represented, and no longer will it be true that the few with comparatively little means, are bearing the great burden of the battle, while the more able are looking after their hundreds of acres, their stock, their dividends, etc. etc. Thus furnishing the means you will be represented in the field of labor at large in the State, by a more efficient worker or workers. The cause will prosper, God will bless us, we will take courage and rejoice together. God help us to be faithful and share in the great reward.

D. T. HALSTEAD.

There will be a Conference Meeting of the people of the Church of God, four miles south-west of the Osage Mission, in Neosho county, Kansas, at the South Liberty school house. Meeting to begin saturday before the first Sunday in August, 1875. A general invitation is given to all, and special invitation to those of the surrounding brethren, Kinney Cleary, Dingus, Orear, Perrett, Hyde, Wilkins, and all others not named in this. And we want a delegate from each church in the south-west. W. N. Smith and Isaac Black will be expected. Come one, come all; let us have a good time together, before the general ingathering of the great harvest. Brethren, there is no money here for you, to pay your traveling expenses, but we will try to have something to eat for you. Kansas is easily destitute of preachers. There appears not to be enough among here, to rivet one splint of the old scripture shackle, and get on the whole armor of God, be ready for the north-east. So Brother Myers, Sanford, and Hickerson etc. And we cannot hardly blame them, as there is no bug or grass-hopper of something else to destroy everything. As some of our dear brethren will have to leave here on the account of the pests, we want one more good time with some of them on this age, before we part, perhaps to meet with them no more, until we meet them in the kingdom of God. Let there be a general rally for the truth contending for the faith; for Jesus and the kingdom. JOHN FOUKE.

PREACHING NOTICE.

I am ready and willing to go anywhere in "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and hear me "at the time appointed."

Having to travel by private conveyance, my appointees will have to be left from some other source. Let the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, and all accessible points in Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, who desire a course of Biblical Lectures, address me early, at Alton, Union county, Ill.

MARRIED.

DUGGER—MILLER—June 24, 1875, in Iowa, at the residence of Capt. N. Miller, by Elder D. P. Amos, Elder A. F. Dugger to Miss V. M. Miller.

We congratulate Brother Dugger upon his new departure, and extend our cordial greeting to his wife and bride. May they both, with all the believers in Christ, be present at the marriage of the Lamb, and may each of us have on the wedding garment, which alone will fit us for that eternal and shared union.

EDITOR.

DIED

Departed this life on the 15th of June, 1875, Brother Francis Dickinson, aged 48 years. He leaves a wife and four children, brothers and sisters to mourn his loss; but we mourn not as those that have no hope. He was a firm believer in the Kingdom of God at the Coming of Jesus Christ. As many of the readers of the INSTITUTION know, he has been afflicted for several years; but he suffers no more, but sleeps the sleep of death. We would say, sleep on, dear brother, Jesus is coming to raise the dead and change the living from mortality to immortality. I conversed with him in reference to death. He said that he was ready and willing to die.

We shall sleep, but not forever,
In the cold and silent grave,
We shall be the Lord that raiseth,
Blessed be the Lord that gave.

For that bright eternal city,
Death shall never more come,
In his own good time he'll call us,
From our rest to Home, sweet Home.

JESSE DICKENSON.

LOUISBURG, Ken., July 5, 1875.

Died at the residence of his father, at Eureka, Wilmington county, John J. Jacoby, after a very long illness. He was 31 years, 7 months and 5 days old. He leaves a wife and three children and other numerous relatives and friends to mourn his loss. Brother Jaeger embraced the faith of the soon coming kingdom, and was immersed into the Anointed, about 12 years ago, and has endeavored to conduct himself in a christianlike manner ever since. We endeavored to obtain the services of Brother Stephenson to preach the funeral sermon; but upon inquiry, ascertained that he was somewhere in Michigan, and could not be reached in time, so a chapter was read by Brother Jo. Ault, when he was carried to his resting place to await the coming of our Lord and Master.

POST OFFICE ADDRESS.

John T. Ongley, Lincolnville, Crawford county, Ky.

Luther Jacob chafer, Kewanna, Fulton county, Ind.

APPOINTMENTS.

We are requested to state that Brother J. F. Wilcox will preach in the third Sunday in this month, at Lanark, Ills.

The Lord willing, I will be at the following places: The third Sunday in July, in Sweetzer county, at Brother Howard near Appolot. Meeting to commence Friday night before. The fourth Sunday, in Warren county, at the brethren my appoint, on Friday night before. The first Sunday in August, at Brother Henry Meadamore's, seven ten miles south of Warren. Meeting on Friday night before. The second Sunday, in Brother Curtis's neighborhood, where may appoint. Friday night before.

J. H. HATCH.

A SERIES OF MEETINGS.

Brethren A. F. Dugger and H. G. Bricker will hold a protracted meeting at the Center school house, in brother David Wirk's neighborhood, four miles south from Sheridan City, near Medora, in the south-western part of Mercer county, Mo., beginning on the Saturday night before the first Sunday in August. Meeting for Lord's Day morning and 2nd and 3rd place. At the close of this meeting, they will come to Ravanna, Mercer county, Mo., and begin a meeting on the Friday night following, and continue several days. Brother Dugger will make his home, Mo., his head quarters for at least two months from the first of August. During his stay here he will visit any place in Putnam and Harrison counties, Mo., and Wayne and Decatur counties, Iowa, as the brethren in those counties may arrange. You may address him on and after August 1, at Ravanna, Mercer county, Mo. Will brother Dugger please write me as soon as he sees this notice.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

1.—All communications for the INSTITUTION should be written in a plain, legible hand; and, before sent, carefully revised and corrected.

2.—Business and all communications, if on the same sheet, should be written so that they can be taken apart, without dividing the communication. If necessary, a separate slip may be enclosed in the same envelope.

3.—When you send names of new subscribers, let these be marked as such.

4.—Be careful to write all names of persons and places plainly and distinctly.

5.—In all cases give the name of the post-office, county, and state. When a town or city is called by one name, and the post-office by another, be sure to give the name of the post-office.

6.—When the direction of a paper is to be changed, do not forget to name the office to which it has been sent. Unless this is done, it is out of our power to make the change.

7.—When subscribers remove, let us know immediately. Otherwise, their papers will continue to be sent, and to their charge, until such notice is given.

8.—When subscribers wish to discontinue, let them remember that all arrearages must first be paid.

9.—Persons ordering MSS. returned, must prepay the postage; otherwise they will remain in the office.

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God." Heb. iv. 9. "Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest." Heb. iv. 3, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in a clear manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To interpret Bible testimony as to the nature, location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Prince and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible is doing concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Life, Being, Existence.

7. The need of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish the Kingdom of righteousness and reign on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of OUR REST." It requires but few readers to pay sinister or not to constitute it a success in the circulation of it be desires the institution we shall give, it is by really necessary to be popular, we shall gladly refer to those who need it, but upon receipt of the subscription price.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

WHOLE NO. 585. Read, PLYMOUTH, INDIANA, JULY 21, 1875. VOL. XXIII, NO. 29.

THE RESTITUTION
IS ISSUED
EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON
By the Christian Publishing Association
H. V. REED, Editor.
S. A. CHAPLIN,
J. M. STEPHENSON,
THOMAS WILSON,

TERMS: $2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three months or less at the same rate.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.
All business letters, or communications, must be addressed as follows:—
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.
Letters for the Editor should be sent to his name also.

TO CO-RESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and its immediate admission into fellowship with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the final annihilation of the rebellious, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrine on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of refusing those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Justice in Relation to Sin.

To make an example of an evil doer, is so to punish him as that others may fear, and be deterred from committing a similar crime. Thus a child at school is sometimes made an example of; at least, such used to be the case in my school days, and it had a wholesome effect. But what would be thought of a master who, having administered an ordinary dozen to some culprit "for an example," should torture the next offender somewhat after the most approved style of the Inquisition? Would any body call the one punishment an example of the other? And if the master had intended to torture future offenders in a diabolical manner, ought he not, in "making an example" of the first boy, to have shown the school an example of the punishment all such culprits should receive?

A magistrate "makes an example" of some one by giving him 30 days' imprisonment; but if a subsequent similar offender was given 90 days forment, who but would be astounded at the judge's idea of "making an example?" Again, the would-be murderer has a wholesome dread of the gallows, or of the death punishment in any form. He has seen, or read of examples of men suffering the extreme penalty of the law. Undeterred by these, however, he becomes a murderer, is tried and convicted. The judge sentences him to suffer not only what the law demands, and what other murderers under the same law had suffered, but something illegal and unprecedented, compared with which the hanging, or other legal penalty, is as nothing! Who would say the judge did right? or that former murderers had been made examples of?

Now, I know the Judge of all the earth does right, and cannot lie, and will not mislead; and all who know him are persuaded that in the matter of punishment for sin, he will not go beyond what his law plainly threatens offenders with; and if God's Word declares that certain persons who have suffered certain things are examples to others, we may rely on that Word, whatever men may say to the contrary. Well, then, God's Word testifies that the destruction of the world of the ungodly by the flood, and the destruction, or "overthrow as a moment" by "everlasting fire" of Sodom and Gomorrah, are God's own examples of his righteous judgments upon pre-eminently wicked men. From the time of their occurrence onwards, "the old world," and the Sodomites were "set forth" for examples, being frequently in the Scriptures referred to as such. But, if any subsequent transgressors are to be tormented for ever in "regions of everlasting woe," as described by Bunyan, Spurgeon, and others, who profess to know God, what becomes of God's examples? Can the brief sufferings of the antediluvians, or of the Sodomites, be compared to the eternal sufferings of the damned in hell-fire, that kind-hearted gentleman tell of from their pulpits? If not, how could Peter and Jude, and our Lord, refer to these old earthly judgments as examples of judgments to come? Examples! Why would the sodomites endured a less fearful degree of torment if their punishment had been but a few years of everlasting fire," as Jude testifies they did, was nothing when compared with what those of Matt. xxv. 46 are to suffer throughout eternity? If the orthodox exposition of that text can be believed.

Greater and surer punishments than Solon's have been, and will be, inflicted on more privileged offenders; but one and all of God's judgments close with the death and destruction of transgressors; and the earth is the arena of them all, future as well as past; in which respect, therefore, the flood and Sodom are examples. The evidence of this is found everywhere in Moses and the Prophets; and in the New Testament, when understood in the light of the Old, as it only can be. The New Testament doctrine of rewards and punishments must be Bible-like than a reproduction of the old doctrine; for what the prophets of old time had prophesied, the apostles preached, and they must harmonize.

"Behold the righteous shall be recompensed in the earth, much more the wicked and the sinner." This is not generally believed, because few understand that such has been God's purpose from the beginning. The earth, not heaven, is the place where the righteous shall be recompensed. The earth, not a hell in some other part of the universe, is the arena of the punishment of sin. Else who can explain the above Scripture? And what mean these Scriptures?—"The meek shall inherit the earth," (Matt. v. 5.) "Evildoers shall be cut off. But those that wait upon the Lord, they shall inherit the earth." "Such as be blessed of him shall inherit the earth; and they that be cursed of him shall be cut off." "The wicked shall perish, and the enemies of the Lord shall be as the fat of lambs; they shall consume; into smoke shall they consume away." "The upright shall dwell in the land, and the perfect shall remain in it; but the wicked shall be cut off from the earth, and the transgressors shall be rooted out of it." These and many similar testimonies, and the general teaching of the Bible, have satisfied my mind that this very earth on which we dwell, and which has witnessed all God's judgments upon wicked men in the past, will witness all divine judgments in the future. As far as we can learn from the Scriptures, sin and sinners, and physical evils—such as sickness, pain, headaches, heartaches, sorrow, sighing, tears, and death,—are found only on this earth. If sinners and evils exist elsewhere in God's universe, the Bible tells us nothing of them. But it clearly reveals, as we see, a time when sinners shall be consumed out of the earth, cut off from it, rooted out of it, perish, and be no more! Then it shall be the inheritance of the meek and righteous, and God's will shall be done on earth, as it is in heaven. Thenceforth, there shall not be a school, or gehenna, on earth or elsewhere, for man, at least. When the sin of the world shall be taken away, "there shall be no more death, neither sorrow, nor sighing, nor pain," in the earth, yea, we may believe, in the universe of God; and the tabernacle of God shall be with men, and he will dwell with them, and they shall be his people, and God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes; God shall be "all in all" of earth's inheritors, in those happy ages of ages for the earth and man, of which the Bible speaks. The "world to come" is not heaven, but the earth in an age to come. That age to which our Lord refers when he says, "they who are counted worthy to obtain that age and world, and the resurrection from the dead, neither marry nor are given in marriage, but are equal unto the angels, and are the children of God, being the children of the resurrection."

Eternal misery! What an extraordinary delusion! A thousand millions of years of misery, for each second of the sinner's life-time! And even that would be far from filling up the measure of his sufferings. Think of it, ye who preach it; and ask yourselves, "do we really believe what we preach?" What lamentable ignorance of the God with whom we have to do, does the profession of such a faith display. How strange it seems to me that intelligent people, having facilities for becoming acquainted with the Bible, should accept such a new idea, and never half a thought as to what the teaching involved, or whether it could be made to agree with any of the Scriptures concerning the end of the ungodly. If they did, they would find that every one who is desirous of knowing the truth would gain a clear insight of the subject of Revelation, and learn from Moses and all the prophets" why God has said about the punishment of sin, and ponder well the examples of his making use therein recorded as a warning to future generations. It appears to me it would be difficult for an honest man to do this, and not be convinced that extinction of being is the end of all the unsaved, whatever may be the use to that end. The Cross, rightly so which attention has been directed—the destruction of the ungodly by the flood, and fire from heaven—are surely strong evidence that not everlasting misery, but "everlasting destruction," is the punishment of all who "know not God." And such, sad to say, are the "many" of our sinful race, of whom God by his son Jesus says:—"Wide is the gate and broad is the way that leadeth to destruction, and many there be that go in thereat; because strait is the gate, and narrow is the way, which leadeth unto life, and few there be that find it." Understand by "destruction" in this text, judgment terminating in eternal death, or extinction of life forever, as it's teaching is credible, and is in harmony with God's Word spoken of old by his prophets; but, understand from it that the "many" of mankind go to hell and burn for ever, and you may cease to wonder there are Universalists and unbelievers!

Before proceeding to consider further Scripture evidence as to the nature and duration of divine punishments, let us see what the texts referred to have taught us.

1. We have learned that the earth is the place of man's punishment—all Scripture agreeing with Prov. xi. 31.

2. That the "everlasting fire," the Scriptures speak of, comes down from heaven to the earth: which confirms lesson No. 1.

3. That this everlasting fire "destroys," overthrows as in a moment," the ungodly who "suffer its vengeance." Compare Jude 7; Lam. iv. 6; Luke xvii. 29.

4. That the flood and the overthrow of Sodom, are examples of divine judgments upon very grievous sinners.

If, now, we have learned these four truths, we have probably unlearned those three fables:—

1. That a region of everlasting woe, away from the earth, where, no one knows, is the place of man's punishment.

2. That the "everlasting fire," the Scriptures speak of, has been for ages doing its work in the region aforesaid.

3. That this everlasting fire does not destroy the ungodly, but preserves them for ever in misery.

My object in writing on the God with whom we have to do, more particularly on his judgments, is to illustrate his attributes and harmonize his Word, by quoting, comparing, and reasoning therefrom. "The Lord is gracious, and full of compassion; slow to anger, and of great mercy." The Lord is good to all; kind even to the unthankful and the evil; and his tender mercies are over all his works. His sun rises on the evil, and his rain comes down upon the unjust. In his all-pervading spirit, all men live, and move, and have their being. Thus, he "is the Savior of all men, especially of believers;" but "all the wicked will he destroy." God is love. God is no respecter of persons, but only of character. He will have all men to be saved. He sent his Son to be the Savior of the world. He gave him up to death, even the death of the cross, that there might be redemption through his blood, even the forgiveness of sins; and that those who believe and obey him should not perish (die for ever), but have everlasting life, God's gracious gift through Jesus Christ. Yet men whose will is not to be saved, shall not. Men who will not come unto Christ, that they may live for ever in the ages to come, shall not see life, but the wrath of God—which returns man to the dust—abides on them. As Moses proclaimed, and Peter preached, "every soul which will not hear Christ, shall be destroyed from among the people." Paul declared of some in the church at Philippi, whose walk made them "enemies of the cross of Christ," that their end would be destruction. The burden of all these Scriptures is preserved by understanding destroy, perish, destruction, in the light of the examples already given of the perdition of ungodly men; but, understand by these expressions, that "all the wicked will God torment for ever;" and that "all who do not believe in his Son, will be eternally in misery;" and what becomes of God's "great mercy" and the "sounding of his bowels?" and his reference to "the waters of Noah?" Why set forth the godless as "examples" of men "suffering the vengeance of eternal fire," if future transgressors were to suffer an infinitely greater punishment? Let us cease then to read God's Word with our understanding darkened by popular fables and superstitions, which pass current for Bible doctrine. Let us cease to read it through the glasses of a false theology, or in the dim religious twilight of this or that creed, or as interpreted in the huge quarto of some favorite divine. Whosoever now-a-days when there are no living Apostles or Prophets, or inspired men to teach us, would know any divine doctrine, must search the Scriptures diligently as for hid treasure, and seek to grasp their teaching as a whole, comparing Scripture with Scripture, and making the Bible its own dictionary. In so doing, the entrance of God's word gives light; God becomes your teacher; you have him speaking to you, as it were, face to face, telling you of his doings in the past, and of his purposes to be accomplished in the future. You thus become acquainted with the God of the Bible, who, I am free to say, is not the God of popular Christianity.

In writing on divine punishments, I regret to have to use so often that profane, ungodly word hell, for which there is, as it is now understood, no equivalent in the Hebrew Scriptures; but I do so as forced on me in contending the fables connected with it, and with which the peoples' minds have been indoctrinated. So general is the belief in a "region of everlasting woe," that it is almost useless to state simply the truth as to the place and nature of divine punishments and judgments, without at the same time referring to the myths which have supplanted it; as Paul foretold would be the case. Before a man can heartily believe, for example, that the wicked shall be recompensed in the earth, he must disbelieve that they shall be recompensed in a place that is remote from, or at least not in, the earth. Hence, as my object is to open peoples' eyes to the truth, regardless of consequences which deter some from speaking out, I see the need of going to the root of the matter, and of showing what the hell of the Bible really is.—Rainbow.

The Two Witnesses: Are they Moses and Elias?—No. 2.

Pursuing the enquiry suggested in my first number in THE RESTITUTION of May —, it seems necessary to enquire, Is there any sound foundation for the interpretation generally received, that these witnesses have been continuously in the world and on earth bearing their testimony, from the period of our Lord's ascension to his return from the Father's right hand? Is it not taken for granted, and not proven, that in person, or in spirit, or in their prophetic testimony, they have been giving witness for Jesus and his truth, during all this long interval?

It is difficult to discern any sufficient foundation for this general assumption. It seems clear, on the contrary, that they are yet to appear, perhaps to re-appear, and "finish their testimony" as witnesses, and that the time of the extraordinary events which attend the delivery of their testimony is yet future. Even so careful a modern writer as J. J. Andrew, of London, falls into the error of supposing the Jansenists of the 17th century, who gave so much trouble to the Romish church by their testimony against their abominations were "a part of the two witnesses."

Now when we turn to Rev. xi. 2, 3, we see that the witnesses do not receive power to prophesy until the forty-two months of the times of the gentiles, in which we are now living. This fact, if true, effectually overturns all existing interpretations, and obliges us to take a new point of observation and departure in our investigations.

Again. It is important to observe that the witnesses were not only to bear testimony but also to prophesy—to foretell coming events.

And it is further manifest that they appear on the stage of action in the interval between the sounding of the sixth angel, the 2300 days, and the sounding of the seventh angel, (Rev. xi. 15,) and as the latter event is immediately followed by the establishment of the kingdom, and the personal and glorious reign of the great King of Israel and of the saints, we see in this a further proof that the career of these witnesses belongs not to the past, or even present time, but exclusively to the future.

* * * *

I had written thus far when I saw in THE RESTITUTION of June 9th, the queries propounded and the apparently forcible objections to the positions suggested in my first number, by our intelligent brother, N. B. Allerton, of Wisconsin. I comply most readily with his suggestion and offer my reply, and as kindly and courteous criticism enables me to consider the points he makes while pursuing the general argument and collating the testimony bearing on the subject, I shall attempt to meet his objections as they are presented, now and here, and in the order in which they come.

Meanwhile, however, and that we may remove obstacles from the path of the investigation to be pursued, let us enquire whether the assumption of our brother, in common with the orthodox and generally received exposition of prophetic times is safe and sound in this instance, viz., that the "days" of Rev. xi. 3, represent "years," and not literal days. If indeed they be the latter, then so much of his interpretation as may be based on the opposite interpretation would seem to be erroneous. This definition of days as years is based on Ezek. iv. 6: "I have appointed each day for a year." I venture to suggest that there seems to be no reason to adopt this rule except as to the prophetic periods of the Old Testament, to which it may properly apply. I do not remember, nor can I find on examination, any instance in which the day for a year theory of interpretation is used in the New Testament or is applied to the Gentile times. It seems to have been applied by the prophets of the Jewish age, and I am not aware of any of these who so used it but Ezekiel and Daniel. If there are others of the Old Testament prophets who have so used it in the computation of prophetic time, I should be glad to be corrected. If the rule does not apply, then, to the New Testament prophecies, we are furnished with an easy answer to our brother's first objection, that the two witnesses cannot be Moses and Elias because "they were to prophesy twelve hundred and sixty years, clothed in sackcloth and ashes, which is too long to answer to the one thousand years." My brother will pardon me for citing him to the passage in question. Rev. xi. 3, to correct his transcription of the text. It is twelve hundred and sixty days, not years, and our witnesses are not said to be clothed with ashes. Now suppose we take the days to be, as it simply affirms, twelve hundred and sixty literal days. We then have the time of their prophesying to be just three years and six months, and, as we have seen, in a period yet future. Does not this effectually remove that objection?

The second objection, that the witnesses "can be hurt," seems to be answered by the text itself (5th verse.) It reads: "If any man will hurt them, (i. e. wishes to hurt them,) fire proceeds out of their mouth, and kills and devours their enemies." Just as Peter slew Ananias and Sapphira, and Paul blinded Elymas, the sorcerer, by the destroying word from the mouth of the apostles, the effect being produced in each case by the fire of God's anger communicated through them. These witnesses, we thus learn, possessed in the power given them of God the means of preserving their own lives in spite of the evil machinations of their enemies, until they had delivered their prophetic testimony and fulfilled their mission.

The third objection is, that "after the twelve hundred and sixty years of prophesying, the beast is to kill them by making war against them, which is incompatible with their nature, i. e., the nature of Moses and Elias, after being changed—v. 7.

Again, we shall perhaps gain a clear insight of the subject by turning to that infallible source of divine knowledge, the law and the testimony. Does not the argument assume what is to be proved? It is argued that because in verse seven it is said that the witnesses shall be overcome and killed by their enemies, "after they shall have finished their testimony," they cannot be Moses and Elias because death would be "quite incompatible with their nature after being changed." But let us ask, in reply, Where is it written that Moses and Elias have been "changed in their nature?" Of Moses it is simply recorded that he died and that the Lord buried him. Nothing is added as to any change in him as yet, and may we not add that no such change is to be expected until his resurrection, which is yet future? His appearance in vision on the Mount of Transfiguration, does not prove anything as to his change, and as Jude tells us afterward that his body was in the especial custody of the arch-angel Michael, we may readily suppose it is so preserved for a purpose. Why may not that purpose be to produce him in this very scene of the two witnesses when the time shall come? It is obvious that the career and the destiny, so far as we know as yet, of both Moses and Elias is exceptional, and not like that of other and ordinary men, and must not be judged by common rules.

As to Elias, where is the proof that he is changed in his nature and cannot suffer death? On the contrary, let me suggest that as he did not die on the earth, but was transported to heaven in his mortal body, and it is hardly credible that he has died there, what stands opposed to the conclusion that he is still alive in the flesh, and that in the purpose of God he shall yet suffer death by martyrdom, and, like Peter, thereby "glorify God." John xxi. 19.

If it is objected that as Moses did actually die, the theory of his appearance as one of the witnesses necessitates his dying twice. Granted. Did not Lazarus and others raised from the dead by Elijah, our Lord and the apostles, die a second time? Such a thing, then, has already happened, and as Moses died in the friendship and peace of God, on Pisgah, and the Lord took his body afterward into special custody, may he not be yet reserved, and to be restored again to mortal life, that he may "finish his testimony" and glorify God by a willing martyrdom to the truth in the end of this Gentile age, and just preparatory to the sounding of the seventh angel and the glorious coming and reign of the Blessed Master?

As to the fourth and last objection of Bro. Allerton, that "the dead bodies" of these martyr-witnesses are to lie in the streets of the great city, "for three and a half days," in the sight of the peoples, tongues and nations who are then in the great city referred to. The objection urged is that this cannot be applicable to Moses and Elias. But, I ask, why not? If we admit that that great city is Jerusalem, (verse 8 declares it was "where our Lord was crucified,") which at that time was and is still under Gentile occupation and rule, and if the representatives of all modern Gentile nations shall be then and there, what hinders the conclusion that these slain witnesses may be Moses and Elias, whose enemies will not even accord to them the rights of sepulture for the space of three days and a half, after which the Lord miraculously restores them to life and takes them back to Heaven in the very sight of their enemies, who then are visited by the terrible wrath of an angry God? (13th verse.)

But the testimony to be offered yet will need another number.

ALLAN B. MACQUEEN.
BALTIMORE, MD.

Suppose the poor men who spend much of their money for strong drink and tobacco, and other needless and more or less injurious indulgences, spent the same for the necessaries and comforts of life, and suppose that all who are ill clad, and addicted to the same indulgences, saved the money thus spent to pay the interest on their borrowed money, or to liquidate the principal, would there not be less complaint about hard times? The unproductive capital used in the vices of the people is far more injurious to their prosperity than the extortion or oppression of capital held by the rich. The monopoly of vice is far more burdensome than the monopoly of capital.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....July 21, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ We are to spend next Sunday, July 25, with the society in Plymouth.

☞ We hope our brethren throughout the state will arrange to attend the annual meeting at Hensselaer, August 12. We want a general representation of the brotherhood, so don't fail to come.

☞ We welcome to our columns an article from the pen of Bro. J. B. Cook, who has written many blessed thoughts on the subject of Israel and the nations under the reign of Christ. We hope Bro. Cook may find it in his heart to write again. We have always enjoyed reading articles from his able pen.

☞ Our meetings at Goodland, on Sunday, were well attended, and a strong sentiment prevails in many minds in favor of the truth. The people of Goodland are liberal in their views, and seem willing to hear for themselves. This is most commendable. The prospects are favorable for a number of additions to the society soon.

☞ Brother G. M. Myers, from Kansas, arrived in Plymouth last Saturday. We are glad to welcome him into our midst, and hope that he may find an agreeable home among the brethren in Indiana. Brother M. is a practical printer as well as preacher, and we hope he may find it pleasant to remain with us. His Post Office address for the present is Plymouth, Ind.

☞ We are in receipt of a letter dated July 1, from brother E. M. Adams, of Moberly, Mo., who is desirous that some good speaker, who is able to set forth the things pertaining to the kingdom, and the nature of man, as taught in the Bible, should visit them, and hold a meeting. Brother Adams represents that many are in sympathy. Brother J. C. Kinsey, of Kansas, visited Moberly last winter and sowed much good seed, and it now remains for some one to reap the harvest. Will some one respond? If so, correspond with brother Adams preparatory to a meeting. Moberly is becoming to some extent a railroad center, a town of several thousand inhabitants and an important point, and we hope that some of our preaching brethren will respond to the call.

Where are the Dead?

Much depends upon a Scriptural answer to this question. Job asks, "man giveth up the ghost and where is he?" Not where is the ghost, but where is he, the man? Are our dead in heaven? If so, the Bible should be very explicit leaving no room for doubt. A doctrine fraught with so much importance should be uttered in language so plain that none could misunderstand it. But instead of this we have the plainest testimony that the dead are not in heaven. Let us here introduce a few witnesses bearing directly upon this point.

Says Job, "Oh that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me secret, until thy wrath be past, that thou wouldst appoint a set time and remember me." Job. xiv. 13. The same point is brought out by David in Psalms vi. 4, 5, "Return, O Lord, deliver my soul; oh save me for thy mercies' sake. For in death there is no remembrance of thee; in the grave, who shall give thee thanks?" Job expected to be kept secret until the appointed time when God should send his Son, who was to stand upon the earth in the latter day, and David says, "I shall be satisfied when I AWAKE with thy (the Lord's) likeness."

That the dead are not in heaven, but in their graves, is further evident from the language of Peter in Acts ii. 29-34. "Men and brethren, let me freely speak unto you of the patriarch David, that he is both dead and buried, and his sepulchre is with us unto this day. * * * For David is not ascended into the heavens; but he saith himself. The Lord said unto my Lord, sit thou on my right hand until I make thy foes thy footstool." No language can be more explicit than this. It not only declares that David is in his grave, but that he has not gone into the heavens. This should settle the question in any candid mind. But there are many other proofs bearing directly upon this point. Solomon says, "Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with all thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest." Eccl. ix. 10. Here it is shown that men not only go to the grave, but that there is no knowledge nor wisdom in that place where the dead are. The word here rendered grave, is sheol in the Hebrew, and means, the world of the dead. We might go on and show from many texts in other parts of the Word, proving the above positions; the above, however, is sufficient for our purpose. The dead then are not in heaven, they are not in some halfway place awaiting judgment, but unconsciously in their graves awaiting the trump of God, which shall call them from the dust of death at the resurrection. Christ is to judge the dead at his appearing, and not before. In the light of these testimonies we can see much importance in a resurrection, and also in the blessed promise of our Lord that he is coming to raise his people from the grave, and give them life and immortality, then will come the shout: "Oh death, where is thy sting? Oh grave, where is thy victory?" May we, dear reader, be ready for that resurrection and the victory.

Part of a Letter to a Conference on Definite Time Errors.

Ever since the origin of what is often denominated "the Advent movement," there has been a more or less frequent and powerful tendency to a designation of some set and special period, when the Second Advent not merely might but must occur. It may be very truly said that this peculiarity was simply the evolution and expression of honest and dominating conviction,—that it was the issue of a course of reasoning, that it was the fruit of study and investigation. But the event has never yet in any instance verified the calculation. The whole series of prediction has been constantly marked by failure in this particular. And hence, in the retrospect, it is that pain and sorrow are engendered, when the aggregate of disappointments and disasters is surveyed, or the picture glides in panoramic vividness of miscalculations and miscarriages before the mind. How can it happen otherwise than that a sentiment of levity and contempt should be encouraged and strengthened among the ungodly, or that ridicule and reproach should find a powerful incentive, if not an actual justification, among those who love not the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ? Should not the ears of those who love that appearing, but who grieve at the dogmatic and erratic protestations of the special time-statistics tingle with the blood of intermingled sorrow and shame? The correction of tables and amendment of reckonings is a feature so familiar, that the merest allusion to it is sufficient. Will it be maintained that God ordained these errors of computation for some unseen or unknown good,—or even to verify the prediction of that scoffing which should be characteristic and perhaps diagnostic of the last times? He does indeed permit these errors to occur, but is his permission to be construed as an authorization? It seems to me an interpreter, balked in his schemes and defeated in his arithmetical and prophetic enterprise, however truly it might have been to him a labor of honor, or conscience, honesty and charity, would scarcely venture to allege the Divine endorsement of his action, with the instance or instances of his shortcoming vivid and afflicting in the view of himself and his brethren.

The fact is, it is one of the most singular features of this history, that any man, once involved in any such arithmetical and prophetic error of time, should ever allow himself to run the hazard of another discomfiture, by embarking in a new enterprise of interpretation of like character. One capital defeat, the natural result of defect in human knowledge and finite capacity, should seem properly to serve as an actual restraint against indulgence in the same or similar ventures of prediction. One failure in this field of experiment, if such it should be called, would seem to include or entail a remedy against its occurrence. But if not, is there not some just occasion for lookers-on to stigmatize the apparent dogmatism in vicissitudes of time as a species of mania? But there is that singular fact or feature in this matter,—call it a fascination or a fatality—enterprise or infatuation—a heavenly ardor or intellectual restlessness—enthusiasm or conceit—holy-hoping and high-born faith, and possible ambition of knowledge or position not absolutely pure,—there is this feature, that the error repeats itself in spite of all the lessons and admonitions of past discomfiture. What is this peculiar trait of the human mind? How shall we attach to a fervent and noble longing for the appearing of Jesus, infallibility of knowledge in assigning the date for its achievement? Does not the lesson of past inability discourage the repetition, and disprove the propriety of this positiveness? Look at the wreck of hopes—see the shattered fragments of expectation, which have marked the past. Far be it from me to speak otherwise than kindly or courteously, since I myself am so intensely conscious of fallibility and dependence.

There is, in all our inquiries and considerations on this subject, one evident fact worthy of attention; that there is this peculiar weakness and ever-recurring temptation of some minds, to suppose themselves specially favored and illuminated with Divine light. This is an infirmity of human nature, which God is able and I doubt not willing to forgive, when it is detected and repented of; but that it exists and is frequently developed, seems a fact indisputable in the sphere of observation. And when this idea or conceit becomes firmly rooted in the mind, it often proves difficult and nearly impossible of eradication. It is this imagination of what might be called favoritism with God, which constitutes the foundation for the supposed title to leadership in a new campaign of Advent horology. It is this, along with the honest belief in the necessary correctness of a course of careful reasoning and the value of thorough study, which again and again leads to a new embarkation of hope and fortune, interest, welfare, life, and everything, in a career of special preparation and special expectation in reference to a particular year, month, week, day, or even perhaps hour, for Messiah to come and claim his favorites thus seasonably warned and intensely looking for his coming. We do not overlook for one moment the pure desire, the ardent longing, the entire consecration and devotion, of many at least who have thus unreservedly enlisted all in a scheme and campaign where specific time was the basis and inspiration, the life and strength, the origen and terminus of all their action or conduct. There may be not only an appearance, but an element of something like moral grandeur in the earnestness of believers in some instances, but there was after all, in every case heretofore, the harrowing if not heart-breaking feature of failure, and therefore necessarily incorrectness. The conclusion failed, therefore the reasoning was erroneous, in the particular respect (of course, we mean) of specific time.

Why, then, should this policy be still so pertinaciously pursued? Why should the venture be again and again renewed? Why should hopes be again and again raised, to be again and again disappointed and shattered? Why should men rise up and claim to be leaders and teachers, with authority of inspiration, or intellectual acumen, or scriptural research, sufficient to justify a new claim to a new following, in a new career, whereof positive and particular time is the glory and power, the foundation and strength, the beginning and fruition? Is it not most painfully evident that this more or less constantly recurring question is a fruitful agent of disastrous divisions, an element of discord, a prolific source of weakness, and, I might say, reproach? Is it not a cause of profound discouragement to very many brethren who cannot embark in these repeatedly recurring campaigns, inaugurated by men, if honest, yet fallible? Is it of no consequence that churches are divided and broken? Is it a small matter that small societies once flourishing and united have become reduced in numbers, weakened in resources, and almost paralyzed in action? Is it possible to see glory and beauty in the process of division and disintegration, or to suppose a special store of credit or honor in reserve for the dividers? Has not division proceeded hitherto sufficiently far, and reduction advanced, until at last it has threatened almost to culminate in something like reductio ad absurdum? What a spectacle of denominational separatism throughout all nominal Christendom; and when a body, weak and few at the best, is still further and further reduced and divided, is it any wonder that hope and courage and enthusiasm should be put to their tension among those who love the Lord and his appearing?

And again, when some new failure of some new proposition or prophecy of the Advent has led some estimable brethren into some peculiar and unscriptural entanglement, some hypothesis of a resurrection already past,—for example, like that which the apostle himself lamented and reproved in his day—how can it be otherwise than that there should be superinduced both astonishment and regret at this expedient seized for escape from a dilemma, or refuge sought as a balm for a spirit wounded or sore from unrealized hope.

Brethren, let us beware of all the dangers of the way. They are many, and it may be, increasing. We need to be as gus-eyed and hundred-handed, clothed and armed, watchful and wise. How great a virtue is discretion! If we ourselves err, some of us can say, no doubt—O, how true and profound is our sorrow and pain, to have erred in one least degree, or in one smallest particular, misled one another! Who cannot point to some folly or some vagary,—some error, which perhaps in almost an excess of self-reproach he imagines to have bordered on madness; not necessarily in the prophetic or interpretative field, but in a hundred or a thousand incidents and experiences of common life?

And in this view, the greater appears the marvel of that singular obliviousness, by which any person once overtaken in an interpretative mistake, should almost straightway rush into the same arena, and grapple anew with the hitherto insoluble problem of positive and definite time, to renew the exhibition of human infirmity, and, might I even venture to say, presumption? We should naturally look for that noble and becoming modesty that should restrain the explorer in this field from sudden declarations of achievement and correctness, when he is just fresh from an experiment of disaster and discomfiture. Modesty is then and there a most amiable and proper quality. He who, penetrated and prostrated with a sense of his error, regains his feet to walk more cautiously, may be no less beloved than if he had never mistaken; but he who learns no lesson of care from previous misadventure, but confidently renews his declaration of conquest over all difficulty, and presses on in imminent hazard of another disaster, undertakes more than the established dictates of prudence could be construed to justify.

But time fails, and I must pause. The letter, such as it is, I send, hoping that it may serve some possible good, though written with some haste, and no particular preparation. Very truly yours, C. COLEGROVE.

SCHENECTADY, N. Y., June 19, 1875.

Restoration of the Kingdom.

"When they, therefore, were come together, they asked of him saying, Lord, will thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel."—Acts i. 6.

Now, as I proceed in the investigation of the above text, the first question of importance that seems to arise in the mind is, What do the apostles mean by the word 'restore?'

The very next word explains what they mean. "Again the kingdom to Israel," shows that the apostles understood the kingdom of Israel had once been in an organized state, with a king over them. But, at the time they were in a disorganized state. And they expected that the Messiah, the Anointed of God, with whom they were then talking, was the personage to bring about this great work. That was what drew out the question, 'Will you restore it now?' Now, if Christ had not been the personage they believed him to be, it would have been a good time to relieve them of their mistaken view of the subject. But, instead of doing so, he said, "It is not for you to know the times or the seasons, which the Father hath put in his own power."

Now the next question that presents itself to mind is, What Israel is it, that is to have the kingdom restored to them? Is it the different sects of the day, made up of Gentile believers, all claiming to be 'Israelites indeed?' Now, I ask in all candor, Are these churches the Israel refered to in the text? Were they ever organized into a kingdom with an earthly monarch to rule over them? I trow not.

But, say you, if that is not the Israel refered to, what Israel is it? That is a very important question, and I will try to answer it.

Turn with me to Gen. xv. 13, if you please. "And he said unto Abraham, Know of a surety that thy seed shall be a stranger in a land that is not theirs, and shall serve them; and they shall afflict them four hundred years." Read Exodus xii. 14, 10, 40, 51, and we shall not fail to see that the going down of Jacob into Egypt with his children, answers to what God says to Abraham in the above.

Now, turn to Acts vii. 6. Read the whole chapter, and we shall see at once that the family of Jacob, that left the land of Canaan to go into Egypt to get corn, was the very people alluded to in the 6th verse. In this chapter we learn who it was that God raised up to lead his people Israel out of the land of Egypt, back into the land that God had promised to give to Abraham and his seed, for an everlasting inheritance. That Moses was the man, there can be no doubt. Deut. xxix. 5. And he led them 40 years in the wilderness, and after telling them that the Lord would raise up a prophet from the midst of them like unto himself, he delivered them into the hands of Joshua, and then died. And after his death, the Lord spake unto Joshua, saying, "Moses, my servant is dead; now, therefore, arise, go over this Jordan, thou and all this people unto the land which I do give to them, even to the children of Israel." Josh. i. 2. In the 6th verse, God tells Joshua to be strong, and divide the land which he 'swore unto their fathers to give them.' Josh. iii. 11, 12, shows that Joshua obeyed God. 17th shows they all got safe over Jordan. Josh. xxi. 43, 44, 45,—And the Lord gave unto Israel all the land which he sware to give unto their fathers; and they possessed it, and dwelt therein." Acts xiii. 19. "And when he had destroyed seven nations in the land of Canaan, he divided their land to them by lot. And after that he gave unto them judges by about the space of four hundred and fifty years, until Samuel the prophet. And afterward they desired a king: and God gave them Saul the Son of Cis, a man of the tribe of Benjamin, by the space of forty years." Now, who did Saul reign over 40 years? That very race of people that Moses led out of the land of Egypt, to go into the land of Canaan.

Now, in view of the above testimony, we see Israel organized into a kingdom with an earthly king over them. But, for disobedience, God saw fit to remove him, and placed David, the son of Jesse, over them. Psa. lxxix. 20. "I have found David my servant; with my holy oil I have anointed him." Read on to the 37th verse. All goes to show the establishment of the kingdom, with the oath of God, as long as the Sun and Moon endure.

How long did David reign over Israel?

2 Sam. v. 5. "In Hebron he reigned over Judah seven years and six months; and in Jerusalem he reigned thirty and three years over all Israel and Judah."

Who ruled over that same people, next after David?

1 Kings i. 32, 33, 34. "And King David said, Call me Zadok the priest, and Nathan the prophet, and Benaiah the Son of Jehoiada. And they came before the king. The king also said unto them, Take with you the servants of your Lord, and cause Solomon my Son to ride upon my own mule, and bring him down to Gihon; and let Zadok the priest and Nathan the prophet anoint him there king over Israel; and blow ye the trumpet, and say, God save King Solomon." Now, dear reader, I think we have found the family with whom God has promised to set up and establish the throne and kingdom of Israel forever.

Now, that this people, from the days of Solomon to the days of Zedekiah king of Israel, had many kings that ruled over them, of which Zedekiah was the last, there can be no doubt. But they rebelled against "the Holy One of Israel." And notwithstanding God raised Jeremiah to plead with them, and to warn them of the danger to which they were exposing themselves, even the danger of being left of God in the hands of their enemies, to be carried away captive into Babylon. But they would not hear; so God left them, as he declared he would, in the hands of the king of Babylon. See Jer. xxxix. 1-9. Here we learn that the kingdom of Israel was overthrown in the 8th year of the reign of Zedekiah.

Now, we have shown conclusively, that when Israel organized themselves into a kingdom, Saul was their first king, and Zedekiah was their last. The question now is,—

Will it ever be restored again? And if so, by whom?

Ezek. xi. 25, 26, 27. Here God declares, by the mouth of the prophet, that he "will overturn, and overturn it, [the kingdom of Israel,] until he come" that it belongs to, and he, God, "will give it to him."

The next question that seems to arise in the mind is,—

Who is to sit next on David's throne, the throne of Israel?

Luke i. 31-33. "And behold thou shalt conceive in thy womb, and bring forth a son, and shalt call his name Jesus. He shall be great, and shall be called the Son of the Highest; and the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of his father David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end." Matt. ii. 1-6. What question did the wise men that came from the East to Jerusalem ask? 2d verse. "Where is he that is born King of the Jews?" What had they seen? "For we have seen his star in the east, and are come to worship him." How did this effect Herod? "He was troubled, and all Jerusalem with him." Why was he troubled? Because he knew if the king of the Jews was born, his reign in the land of Judea would soon come to an end; or at least, he expected that would be the result. What did Herod say this king's name was? "He demanded of them where Christ should be born." Where did they tell him? "In Bethlehem of Judea; for thus it is written by the prophet, and thou Bethlehem, in the land of Judah, art not the least among the princes of Judah; for out of thee shall come a governor, that shall rule my people Israel."

Now, dear reader, in view of the above testimony in favor of the restoration of the kingdom to Israel, let us see to it that we make our "calling and election sure." If we do this, we shall have an abundant entrance ministered unto us into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord.—Hope of Israel.

From Brother Mallory.

BROTHER READ:—

As I have saw nothing from the debate held at this place between brother Stephenson and Elder Scott, I thought I would say it passed off to the entire satisfaction of the brethren, and the truth in this place stands vindicated. Brother S. put forth the truth so able and forcible that those who heard it, will have, in the judgment, no cloke for their sins. They cannot say "I never heard the Gospel," this debate has sealed hundreds for either life or death. There are hundreds by means of this debate heard the Gospel who would not have heard only in this way, this much good was done by the debate, and I am glad to say a few intelligent persons are believers by it, and would obey if they had an opportunity.

The debate has had another effect,—it has raised the hostilities of our opponents to a degree never seen before. it has even affected trade. There are many who would not buy goods of what they call an "Advent" under any consideration, and unless the brethren to a man, and those of the faith, stand by, and patronize our merchants, they will go under; and I am sorry to say some of the brethren have failed to do their duty in this respect. But I for one will be content to suffer for truth's sake, if I never see another dollar's worth of goods. Whether the time has come or not, Rev. xiii. 17, seems to be fulfilled in this place to the letter, and also the "division" that Christ spoke of has occurred.

I suppose the cause of this ill feeling is that elder Scott is the oracle of the Baptist church in this place, and elsewhere, and to see their champion handled so easy, and with so much ability, by what they call an "Advent," is too much to endure. This ill feeling has even got in school. As for instance a Baptist's child says "Yes, you will go to that old 'Advent' and buy goods!"

Now, it is bad to see such a state of affairs, but we have made up our minds to suffer all things for the truth and leave the result with the Lord. We must suffer with Christ if we would reign with Him, and if we are ashamed of his truth here, He will be ashamed of us before his Father.

Before the debate, we had the promise of the Baptist house for brother S. to preach in once a month during the year, but since then they have gone back on their promise, and say we can't have it. Well, thank God they cannot shut up the "groves," "highways and hedges." We need a house of our own and must have it if possible. We are talking the matter up, and I hope we will succeed in the work. I pray that God may put it in the hearts of the people to help us in the good work to build Him a house. Amen.

Superiority of the Bible.

What other works of human genius will bear such minute study, verse by verse, as the Scriptures? Will the Iliad or the Divine Comedy, or Hamlet, or Paradise Lost? Why does this great superiority belong to a collection of Hebrew books? The question suggests the answer. God is in them, in manner and degree, as in no others. Holy men of old wrote as they were moved by the Holy Ghost. The history was written, as it was enacted, "in the light of God." Always and everywhere human nature is essentially the same. The story of Israel told in history, song and prophecy, will not lose its value while God, according to unchanging principles, governs nations and individuals and laws. Be it Judaism or Christianity, the great principles and methods of the Divine government are the same. By natural and enforced similitudes recognized by the plainest and most prosaic minds, the historic facts of the first covenant are types of realities of the second. Thus, each in its own way, the Old Testament and the New are profitable for instruction, reproof, and discipline in Christian living. Manifold in form and method, the Scriptures are one in essence, and one in their central theme—Christ, and the life in him the light of men. In varied forms suited to varying conditions, we may find in the Scriptures teaching, warning, consolation or encouragement, according to our need.—Advance.

—If we look for great things in the next world, we should be content with mean things in this.

—If others will not do their duty to us, we may have the comfort of having done ours to them.

—If you gain wisdom by and experience, improve it.

The Victor's Song.

I fear thee not, O Death,
For though this fleeting breath
At thy approach must cease, and this cold clay
Low in the silent tomb be laid away,
Yet our victorious King
Has taught His saints to sing,
"O grave where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?"

He conquered thee, O death,
When He rifled His breast,
And in the sepulchre of Joseph slept;
While, lone and sad, His stricken followers wept.
Thy bond, O Death, He breaks!
The wounds, O Grave, forsakes!
"O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?"

"He's risen—He's not here!"
O word, of glorious cheer!
Christ, the first has risen from the dead,
And we are one with our exalted Head.
Faith writes upon our prison,
"Not here, not here, but risen."
"O grave, where is thy victory?
O death, where is thy sting?"

We fear thee not, O death!
Come, stop this panting breath,
The better life in Christ thou touchest not.
And e'en this body, raised without a spot,
Shall at His coming shine,
Where no rude touch of thine
Can to the grave consign.
Then, where's thy victory, O grave?
And where, O death, thy sting?

Report of Conference held near Alden, Iowa.

Per agreement conference convened on Friday, June 25th, at 10 o'clock a. m. There being no special business before the conference, a sermon was delivered by Brother J. M. Stephenson, on Gal. iii. 7-9 verses inclusive, embracing faith in God and obedience to Him; whereupon conference adjourned till three o'clock p. m.

Per agreement conference convened about 3 o'clock. Being nothing before the conference at present, a sermon was delivered by Brother Stepenson on Matt. vi., on the subject of prayer. Whereupon conference adjourned till Saturday 10 o'clock a. m. On Saturday conference assembled per agreement, Brother Elmy arose and moved that Brother A. Hipsher act as committee of arrangements; whereupon Brother Hipsher arose and stated that he did not like the idea that "Brother Hipsher" should be "little pope." Brother Stephenson then arose and suggested that a committee of three be appointed, which resulted in the appointment of Brother Jos. Furry, Brother A. Hipsher and another brother, whose name I neglected to take down, and which I do not remember. After consultation the committee came in with the following arrangements for Saturday: Brethren J. Prime and Brinton were to preach in the forenoon, and Brethren R. J. Hill and J. M. Stephenson to occupy the afternoon. After some reflection, Brother J. T. Prime arose in his usual humility and timidity, and offered his objection to the arrangement of the committee, as they put him in the front rank. The committee then gave him the right, if he declined to speak, to appoint a substitute, which resulted in the appointment of Brother Stephenson; after an introductory song, Brother Stephenson gave an able discourse on the authenticity of the Bible, bringing up and harmonizing those texts which Infidels allege contradict each other—such expressions as the following: "God rested and was refreshed," "God faileth not, neither is weary." "Moses talked with God face to face;" "No man can see God and live, whom no man can see," &c., &c. Brother Stephenson argued, and that very ably, that these statements are made concerning two distinct and separate beings called God, while one, infinite in power, in wisdom and in whom there is no variableness nor shadow of turning, the other is finite in power and in wisdom, and in whom there is variableness and shadow of turning, or in other words, Brother Stephenson argued that there are two Gods spoken of in the Bible; one term being applied to a race of beings called gods (elohim—angels). The other being applied to the great God who is infinite in power and wisdom, who changeth not, and in whom there is no variableness nor shadow of turning, who is a unit being. This we concede to be the true exposition of those seem-to-be conflicting passages and write from the Infidel world, their petty hobbies and source of support. Brother Stephenson was followed by Brother Brinton, on the importance of earnestly contending for the faith, and to have our daily walk to correspond with our faith. There being no further business, conference adjourned till half past 2 p. m.

Per agreement conference convened at half past two. A sermon was delivered by Brother R. J. Hill, on Rom. xv. 4, and was followed by Brother *Stephenson. After further arrange*ments conference adjourned till Sunday half past 9 o'clock. On Sunday conference convened per agreement. Brother J. T. Prime was called upon to give a statement of the money that he had received and spent. (I will state here that I intended to copy his statement from his book, but it slipped my memory, hence I cannot give his statement.) Conference next took up the Mr. Wing claim. It seems that some forty odd dollars were due Mr. Wing when he changed cars from the faith to Sabbatarianism; but the conference held that the forty odd dollars claimed by Mr. Wing, was made during his transition, therefore, did not feel disposed to pay the man's fare, hence ruled it out of conference. It was moved by Brother Hill that the next conference be held near Pleasantville, Marion County, Iowa, beginning Thursday evening before the second Sunday in September, carried. There being no further business before the conference, the committee read the ar*rangements of the day*, which was as follows: Two discourses to be delivered in the forenoon and two in the afternoon. Two of which to be delivered by Brother J. M. Stephenson, and two by T. W. Woodrow.

JOHN R. WOODROW,
Sec. Pro Tempore.

ATTOONA, Iowa, July 31, 1873.

The Penitent Thief.

AMOS SANFORD.

In the March number of the "Bible Banner," in an article entitled, "Water and Spirit Births," by Chas. L. Ives, M. D., I find this statement: "Born of water certainly does not refer to baptism, else our Lord denies admission to the penitent thief and other unbaptized believers; 'they cannot enter into the kingdom;' * * The reference must be simply to the first birth; our mode of entrance into the present life."

I do not design to reply to the learned professor's able argument to sustain his position that water birth is the natural birth, but simply to call attention to two points which I think are not well taken.

First: Baptism "for [or "in order to"] the remission of sins," was not instituted or commanded until after the resurrection, and therefore our Lord will not deny "admission to the penitent thief" simply for not being baptized with a baptism which at the time of the supposed promise of the Savior to the thief, had no existence. How was it possible for the penitent thief, or any other unbaptized believer, to be "baptized into his death," (Rom. vi. 3;) before the death of our Lord. It is possible that the thief was baptized with John's baptism, which was "with water unto repentance," (Matt. iii. 11,) for there "went out to him Jerusalem, and all Judea, and all the region round about Jordan, confessing their sins." (Verses 5 and 7.) The word "all" does not include every individual inhabitant of the places mentioned, but was used in a general sense to represent the masses of the people. Luke vii. 30, shows that some were "not baptized of him." The thief may, or may not, have been immersed by John. The Scriptures being silent upon that point, I will not indulge in speculation. But if he was, I contend that he was not required to be baptized again, before the commission (Mark xvi. 16.) was given, while it is a matter of record (Acts xix. 1-7.) that twelve Baptists of the regular "John the Baptist order, who were also called "disciples," (being followers of Jesus in the best light they had), were "baptized (re-immersed) into the name of the Lord Jesus." They were then "born of the water', the second time, but the first baptism was then (i. e. after the resurrection of Jesus,) invalid, for under the Christian dispensation there is but one baptism, (Eph. iv. 5.) which must in every case be preceded by the "one faith" in the "one Lord," in order to a participation in the "one hope," and admission into the "one body," "the church of God."

Second: But why use the phrase, "penitent thief?" Is there any evidence to prove that the thief repented of his sins? If so, let us have book, chapter and verse. There is evidence clearly proving that one poor sinner "repented himself, * * saying, I have sinned in that I have betrayed the innocent blood." (Matt. xxvii. 3-4.) Poor Judas! He not only repented, but his sorrow was of such depth that he "went and hanged himself," and yet orthodoxy consigns him to endless hell torments, while Adventists—more merciful, thank God—teach his destruction or annihilation in "the lake of fire." But again I ask for proof. Verily I say unto you, all sins shall be forgiven unto the sons of men, * * but he that shall blaspheme against the Holy Ghost hath never forgiveness," (Mark iii. 28, 29.) and I ask, may not penitent Judas "enter into the kingdom of God" in "the ages to come?" I am not asserting that he will, but I do assert that there is more scripture to sustain the proposition than that the thief went to heaven or will be remembered when the Lord comes into his kingdom. The proof is demanded of those who assert that he will not. If the record is silent as to the final salvation or condemnation of Judas, then we should be. The same rule applies to the celebrated "thief on the cross." If it is true, as Methodism says, that he went to heaven on the day of the crucifixion, let us have the proof, and not rest the case solely upon mere assumption. If it is true, as Adventism asserts, that he will enter "into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Savior Jesus Christ;" when the Son of Man shall come in his glory, and all the holy angels with him," I, for one, am very willing to believe it, but not without evidence. The as*sumptions of Adventism are no better* than the assumptions of Methodism. "Those things which are revealed belong unto us and to our children." But "the secret things belong unto the Lord our God." It seems to me that the final destiny of the impenitent thief and penitent Judas is not among those things which are revealed, and were it not for the groundless assumptions in favor of the one and against the other, it would be unnecessary to again call attention to this subject. But since I have written thus much, I feel constrained to follow it up with another article, and in the meantime submit to Prof. Ives, and others, this question: "Is Luke xxiii. 43, of undoubted genuineness in the original Greek manuscripts?" I would like to see more light brought out upon this question than I have yet been able to see. What I want is what I suppose we all want —the truth.

ANNA ILL.

Rev. 22 10.

"Then saith he unto me, See thou do it not; for I am thy fellow-servant, and of thy brethren the prophets, and of them which keep the sayings of this book: worship God."

This passage of sacred scripture is often erroneously used in two cases:

1. As being an evidence that the spirits of human beings can and do return and communicate with persons in the "earth life." And why? Because when the angel says: "I am * * of thy brethren the prophets," they understand the angel to mean that he was one of the old prophets who once lived on earth. And then, if the angel was once a prophet, the above passage is a proof of spirit communications.

2. As being an evidence that the spirits of men become angels after they leave this world. But let us examine it. I believe it is correctly translated; but I think the translation would be plainer, though not as smooth, to give every word in full which is understood. For instance, the word "sundoulos," fellow-servant, is understood twice, being followed by two genitives to which it belongs. It would then read thus: "And he saith to me, See (that thou worship me) not; for I am a fellow-servant of thee, and a fellow-servant of the brethren of thee, the prophets, and a fellow-servant of them who keep the sayings of this book: worship God." Here we learn that the angel, instead of being the spirit of one of the prophets, was only a servant, i. of John the Revelator; 2, of the brethren of John, the prophets; 3, of them which keep the sayings of this book; that is, the angel was sent by the lord God of the holy prophets to show (see verse 6) to them the things which must shortly be done. Such was the employment of angels. The Bible is full of it. But there is not an instance from Genesis down to Revelation where a "departed spirit" was ever employed as a servant. "They rest from their labors," said the Revelator. They rest. Their work is done. What a thought, that when a man lays down his work he may never resume it again. There is no work, no device, no knowledge, no remembrance, no praise, no prayers, no pardon passed in the silence of Sheol.

Such was once the employment of angels. They were sent with messages to the prophets and apostles when God was handing down his revelation to man. But that time has gone by, and we may never expect another message or even an utterance from heaven again. And be assured that those who will not accept the present message, and will not hear Moses and the prophets, and Christ and the apostles, would not be persuaded though one rose from the dead.—I. H. Lord.

Old Reading.

The following free rendering of Rev. i. 9-10, is from an old translation, shown us by Brother Peter Hough, of Cascade, Iowa. The title page was gone, and the corners of the book was so rounded off with use, as to measure about two inches on a circle. We think the book was studied more faithfully than most people read their Bibles at the present day. It was brought from Germany. The passage read as follows:

"I, John, your fellow-christian, fellow-sufferer, and fellow-expectant, of the future glorious kingdom of Jesus Christ, being in the island Patmos—an exile there for my attachment to the revelation of God, and for my profession of the Gospel of Jesus Christ, was on that day in which our Lord rose from the dead, endowed with the allatus of the Spirit."—Ex.

The Dead Unconscious.

"For if the dead rise not, then is Christ not raised; and if Christ be not raised, your faith is vain; ye are yet in your sins. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. If in this life only we have hope in Christ, we are of all men most miserable." 1 Cor. xv. 16-19.

This text teaches that a future life to the Christian is wholly dependent upon the resurrection of the dead. That if the resurrection should not take place, there is no hope for the Christian after he is fallen asleep, but he is perished. He is forever cut off from life and hope. If the dead rise not, he has hope in Christ "in this life only."

If the soul were immortal, this testimony could not be true. If the dead in Christ are in a state of conscious happiness, should there be no resurrection, they are not perished. If the soul, the real man, is independent of the body for its existence, and is destina*ted to endure to eternity, it is a thing of* very little importance whether the body is ever raised. But Paul makes the hope of the Gospel as nothing and worse than nothing, provided the resurrection should fail to be realized.

It is of no avail to quibble around this text by saying that the resurrection of Christ was a leading fact in the Gospel, and if that is not sustained, the Gospel would prove a lie, and consequently those who had died in the faith of Christ are condemned to eternal misery without a resurrection. The apostle is arguing the future resurrection of the dead, because some among the Corinthians had said that "there is no resurrection of the dead." He refers them to the resurrection of Christ as an established fact, and assures them that the resurrection of the dead is rendered sure by this fact—that the resurrection of Christ is a pledge of the resurrection of the saints —consequently, to deny the future resurrection of the dead, was to deny the established fact that Christ was raised from the dead. This, he argues, would be a legitimate conclusion from the promise assumed that the dead rise not. And another conclusion would be equally sure, namely, "Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished," and that the Gospel hope is limited to this present life, and that a future life is altogether dependent, not on the immortality of the soul, but on the resurrection of the dead.

This is still further confirmed by verse 32. "If after the manner of men I have fought with beasts at Ephesus, what advantageth me, if the dead rise not? let us eat and drink; for to-morrow we die." Death would be the final end of man's existence, if the dead rise not."—Ex.

From Brother Lewis.

BROTHER REED:—

The RESTITUTION is indeed a welcome visitor every week, and I should hardly know how to get along without it. The prophet Malachi says "They that feared the Lord spake often one to another, and the Lord hearkened and heard them and a book of remembrance was written for them that feared the Lord and that thought on his name." A promise is also in reserve for all such, that they shall be his, in the day when the jewels are made up. But it seems to be a pertinent question to ask, Can this be done by us who profess the "one faith," situated as we (or at least the greater part of us) are, isolated from each other without a written correspondence either with each other, individually or through the medium of the RESTITUTION, or other periodicals? It is refreshing for me to hear from the brethren and sisters, either in their essays, or what are termed the gleanings; in either case the correspondence is generally replete with instruction.

It is very pleasant to hear oral testimony, and greet each other face to face, with shaking of hands, but this cannot always be done, and the next best thing is to resort to the pen or the press, and I feel truly thankful that we can avail ourselves of these facilities. It becomes us, as students of prophecy, to keep an eye on the passing events which are ominous of the near approach of that day, for which all other days were made.

The great central thought with us is the coming of Christ and the establishment of the kingdom.

Yours for the truth as it is in Jesus.

CONFERENCE NOTICE.

The Annual Conference of the State of Indiana will convene at Remedeer, Jasper county, Thursday, August 14, 1873.

A hearty welcome is extended by the brethren of Remedeer with whom the Conference is to be held, to all who desire to be present at this yearly convocation.

JOHN L. WISER, Secretary.

There will be a Conference Meeting of the people of the Church of God, for miles southeast of the Osage Mission, in Neosho county, Kansas, at the South Liberty school house. Meeting to begin Saturday before the first Sunday in August, 1873. A general invitation is given to all, and special invitation to those of the preaching brethren, Kinsey Howe, Bingo, Otoe, Pickett, Hedges, Wilkins, and all others not named in this. And we want a delegate from each church in the southwest. W. N. Smith and Hope Black will be expected. Come one, come all; let us have a good time together, before the general ingathering of the great harvest. Brethren, there is no money here for you, to pay your traveling expenses, but we will try to have something to eat for you. Kansas is surely destined for preachers. There are yet not be enough saving here, as has one gets at the old sectarian shackles, and gets on the whole armor of God, he starts for the northwest, as Brother Myers, Branford and Hicklet did. And we cannot kindly blame them, as there is a big up grasshopper or something else to destroy everything. As some of our dear brethren will have to leave here on the account of the locusts, we want one more good time with some of them in this age, before we part, perhaps to meet with them no more, until we may meet in the kingdom of God. Let it be a general rally for the truth pertaining to the faith; for Jesus and the kingdom.

JOHN TOMBS.

PREACHING NOTICE.

I am ready and willing to go any where in "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and have me. I am "in the line appointed."

Having no means of my own, my traveling expenses will have to be met from some other source. As the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, no it is impossible for me to locate in Southern Illinois, and not travel, also desire a course of Biblical lectures, address me and I will go.

ALVIN SANFORD.

APPOINTMENTS.

We are requested to state that Brother J. F. Wilcox is to preach the third Sunday in this month, at Lanark, Ills.

The Lord willing, I will be at the following places: The third Sunday in July, in Fountain county, at Brother Durnal Ivey appoint. Meeting to commence Friday night before. The fourth Sunday, in Warren county, at the brethren may appoint, on Friday night before. The first Sunday in August, at Brother Henry Beatmore's, some ten miles south of Warsaw. Meeting on Friday night before. The second Sunday, in Brother Dunn's neighborhood, as he may appoint. Friday night before.

J. S. HAZEN.

A SERIES OF MEETINGS.

Brethren A. F. Dugger and B. C. Robison will hold a protracted meeting at the Center school house, in Bentley Grove, Liberty Neighborhood, four miles south from Goshen City, near Modena, in the southwestern part of Mercer county, Mo., beginning on the Saturday night before the first Sunday in August. Depetts for Hamel Bank. Remember time and place. At the close of this meeting, they will come to Savanna, Mercer county, Mo., and begin a meeting on the Friday night following, and continue several days. Brother Dugger will make Savanna, Mo., his head quarters for at least two months from the first of August. Inviting his many friends will visit any place in Putnam and Harrison counties, Mo., and Wayne and Decatur counties, Iowa, as the brethren in those counties may arrange. You may address him or any other Saint in Savanna, Mercer county, Mo. Will Brother Dugger please write me at once as he can see this notice.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND E. V. REED

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God. * * Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv, 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object in view, it shall endeavor to establish

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the Bible to be a revelation of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish the Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "Our Rest." If it remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently assist in its circulation. If he desires the instruction we shall give, or if he wants cash in its stead, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

God's Beautiful City.

Far, far away, and realms of light,
Hid deep in the azure beyond our sight,
Stands a beautiful city, so high and so bright,
Where is known no sorrow, nor death, nor night.
Beautiful city!
O blest abode! O, home of the!
Whose streets by the feet of the shiner are trod

They roam through the gardens of endless spring,
They crowd all the portals on rushing wing;
While the echoing domes of the jasper ring
With the hymn of the angels that flout and sing.
Beautiful city!
Hark! hark, again! the seraphic strain,
As gleams through the crystal that burnished pane

There the lifeless lie down and burn and roll
Over diamonds that sparkle, o'er sands of gold
Where to breathe the sweet air yields a soul unfold,
And the dwellers immortal shall never grow old.
Beautiful city!
We pine for the skies with longing eyes,
And yearn to be, by the golden gates.

It is said that the King, in his power sublime,
When the last sands drop from the glass of time,
And our world shall be moved in her Eden prime,
Will bring down that city to gladden earth's climes.
Beautiful city!
Bright capital where saints will dwell,
And reign on the throne with Immanuel.

As jewels flash on the breast of a queen,
As the jasper and ruby in rapture are seen,
God's city, wrapped in its silver sheen,
Will be set like a gem in the new earth's green.
Beautiful city!
City of flowers and beaming bowers!
Calm down and illumine this dark world of ours.

I have heard it: the city they wait for me;
That its gates stand open and ne'er to be
That the ransomed the King in his beauty may see,
And live in his presence eternally.
Beautiful city!
In resplendent bliss I mansions will fill,
And beckon on through the pearly gate.

I shall go where the summers will always bloom;
I shall wait no more sighs and sorrow;
I shall bid farewell to the wakefully tombs;
I shall deck my brow with the conqueror's plumes.
Beautiful city!
Let me enter in a crown to win!
Our words but half tell of the glory within.

Israel; The Teacher's Danger.

"Study to shew thyself approved unto God, a workman that needeth not to be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth. But shun profane and vain babblings."—2 Tim. ii. 15, 16.

Here all teachers are bound to confine their testimony to the sphere of the word of God. Nay, they are bound to divide it "rightly," or be "ashamed," and not "approved unto God." They must speak as the oracles of God, or be made ashamed.

All human teachings in contrast are accounted as profane and vain babblings that increase unto more ungodliness. They are ruled out of court.

By this standard we may estimate ourselves and others, and conclude so far, as did St. Paul, whether we shall be approved or ashamed, or be as workmen wholly disowned."

I. By this rule we must discriminate between the patriarchal, Mosaic, Christian and judgment ages. We must rightly divide the word of promise, to the patriarchs, "from the shadow of good things to come," by Moses; and the personal revelation of Christ—his death, resurrection, and gospel of the kingdom from his second coming, and "the restitution of all things spoken."

Then we shall see and say that Zion desolated can not be the site of the throne and kingdom, till the times of the gentiles are fulfilled. Luke xxi. 24; Rom. xi. 24-29; Dan. ix. 27; Ps. cii. 13-22; "His times follow." 1 Tim. vi. 15.

Then further, we cannot confound "fleshly Israel" with "Israel restored;" nor yea, yea, with nay, nay.

II. By "rightly dividing the word," we see that the "kingdom to come" can not come except as revealed, in the world to come!" Its chronology must be future, as certainly as its geography is Jerusalem and Judea, for Rome rules till then. Dan vii.

III. By "rightly dividing the word" we shall not deny Christ's coming "to salvation, restitution and regeneration." For he has so joined these ideas and terms together that "no one can put them asunder." Heb. ix. 28; Acts iii. 19-21; Matt. xix. 28. These and kindred terms embrace Israel, Zion, the throne of David; posterity of three generations in one text. And thence on through that age (forever). Ezek. xxxvii. 25-28; Zech xiv. 11-19; Ps. lxxii. 16. Nay, all these and a hundred fold more express but the yet forthcoming purpose of God to "bless and save the world." Gen. xxii. 17-18; John i. 29; xii. 47; 1 John, iv. 14.

IV. In "rightly dividing the word" we shall not deny the seed, (Christ and all in Christ,) their reign with Christ. Rev. xx. 5—7.

This "seed" shall possess the gate (the seat of government), and bless the world to the full measure of expressed new covenant favor. "In thee and in thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed." Israel, as distinct from the church or bride of Christ, is often specially named, in these abounding blessings.

V. The honors of the "first-born" were taken from Israel and are to be given to the "holy nation—the royal priesthood—the many brethren" of him who is "the first-born." (Matt. xxi. 43; 1 Pet. ii. 9; Rom. viii. 29; Jas. i. 18) Christ and his saints.

But all who "rightly divide the word of truth" must confess that the first-born of Israel did not take Israel's place. They did not supercede or set aside that nation. No, no, the distinctive honors and heirship of the first-born were proportioned to the population, the wealth and wisdom of the nation. If the nation as such had not been honorable, neither would the first-born have been.

The terms are altogether corrective. Heresy now can "rightly divide the word" who presume to isolate the church of the first-born from its official position as sons, and heirs, and princes, priests, and kings. Nor can these official titles be other than idle and empty terms, "profane and vain babblings,"—except as Israel is to be restored, and the twelve tribes, with the nations, exist, to be the basis of these official honors; for no titled class can constitute the kingdom.

Not to insist on the kingdom of God under David and Solomon, in type, with their subject kings and peoples. (2 Chron. ii. 17; ix. 23-28;) I need only refer to the kingdom seen in the mount; Luke ix 27-33; here were the king in glory, Moses and Elijah, who appeared in glory; and Peter, James, and John, not glorified, who found it good to be there. Here is the remnant.

But all this goes for nothing to the profane and vain talker that rejects all the gospel of the kingdom, except what is inferred from the gospel ministry of this age. This class presumes to circumscribe the plan of salvation, or "restitution of all things spoken by the prophets," to their erring apprehension of it, as it appears in this cross-bearing, martyr age! As if "their unbelief could make the faith of God of no effect!" Rom. iii. 3.

VI. How profane and vain must be the conceit that makes it too much for God's grace to purge Jerusalem, cleanse the sanctuary, and regather that downtrodden people according to promise, and let "the nations know that I, the Lord, do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore;" Ezek. xxxvii, 28; Dan. viii. 11-19; Isa. iv. 2-6; while yet it owns that "the whole creation shall be delivered from the bondage of corruption into the liberty of the glory of the sons of God." Rom. viii. Is this "rightly dividing the word," to make that part a greater difficulty to God than the whole?—Indeed greater than the globe?

Let such teachers be consistent, and make man's failure final all through, as they do that of the Jews. Then the loss of Eden would forbid that Paradise should be restored. And the Christian church, having made "the man of sin" the chief of Christendom, (or the like), should be abandoned! But no; the failure of Adam, and Israel, and the church, to "continue in God's goodness" has been the occasion, each time, for God's special intervention, in grace. So that while "sin has abounded (at each stage), grace hath much more abounded." Rom. v. 20. Nay, more, God hath demonstrated his ability to raise the dead and overrule evil for good; and in the end root it out, and bring and bind all in the bands of universal and eternal love. 1 John ii. 2; 1 Cor. xv. 24-27; Rev. xxi. 1-5.

The grandest truth taught by all of these failures is that of divine independence and creature dependence. The creature cannot go alone, except to hell; but must repent and own his dependence on the Creator, to enjoy the highest good. Hence, "faith is approved of God, and he that believeth shall not be ashamed." But all argument against Israel's place in prophecy in the age to come, under Christ and his saints, is idle and empty, "profane and vain," like all objections to the fulfillment of God's promise.

To men of no faith, all the promises are alike invalid; "but with God all things (revealed) are possible;" yea, necessary to his plan.

To conclude: The zealots against Israel's promise make God's word secondary and subordinate to their vain objections.

Their zeal has no parallel save that of the Jews 1800 years ago, against the gospel to the gentiles. 1 Thess. ii. 14-16. But, by how much it is indulged against greater light, by so much is it more "profane." The apostolic alarm applies to you, brethren, who indulge it. "Behold, ye despisers, and wonder and perish; for I work a work in your days which ye will in no wise believe, though a man declare it unto you." Acts xiii. 40-41.

What is this wondrous work? He has sustained that people, notwithstanding their sin, dispersion, and national degradation and death, through 2300 years. Dan viii. 11-19; Ezekiel xxxvii. 1-28.) And is he now to be cruel out of the crowning glory of all such prophecy? "Behold, ye despisers!" this alarm sounds for you!

Note: If "the Redeemer come (not) to Zion to turn away ungodliness from Jacob," you perjure Paul and Isaiah. Rom. xi. 26; Isa. lix. 19.

Note again: There is not one ancient prophecy of the gospel age so palpably plain as are scores like these to Israel. They are interwoven with the name and work of Christ, and with the name, and oath, and life of God; Hence your zeal must end in dishonor, like all else that is in "vain" opposition to Him.

J. B. Cook.

[NOTE.—The general subject of "Israel" is reserved here, as in most of Paul's epistles. No one Judaizer who writes or speaks as did the apostle in the light of both Testaments; but those who accept and indulge their ingenuity to oppose their work, stand opposed. The question should be one of fact. Does the apostle, after exalting Israel as God's national people through the gospel age, name them in connection with the Redeemer's coming to Zion?" Rom. xi. 12-15 25-29; See also Matt. xxiii. 37-39; Luke i. 31-33, 68-74; ii. 32; xxii. 30; xxiv. 21; Heb. viii 8-12. Rev. vii. 1-4.

We should work as did Jesus and his apostles. Then would we keep the wheat and let the chaff go. J. B. C.]

The Scriptures as a Rule of Faith.

It is not enough to say, that we take the Scriptures as our only rule of faith and practice, for all who claim to believe the Scriptures, say the same thing. This very saying comes from all the sects, however much they may differ. To say that we take the Scriptures for our rule does not prove that we do take them; neither does it indicate what our faith is, so that it is not enough, for we always have to explain what we understand them to teach. To say that we have no written creed does not prove that we have no creed. We all have a creed. It is quite amusing sometimes to see how anxious those are, who claim to take the Bible alone for their faith, to explain what the Bible means. This shows that there is a necessity for a statement of their faith. They never can satisfy anyone what their faith is by reading the Bible alone.

The Scriptures require that we strive together for the faith of the gospel. But they do not tell us in detail just how we must do this.

The do require us to do that which cannot be done without money. But they do not, in detail, tell How to get the money. They do require us to give as the Lord has prospered us; to give so that one be not eased and another burthened, but by equality. But they do tell us how to come at that equality. They do require us not to forsake the assembling of ourselves together. But they do not tell us how to manage to carry out this exhortation.

They do require us to be workers together with God. But they do not tell us just in what way to work with God. They do, however, tell in a general way, how to do all these things. They say that, as we have yielded ourselves to sin, even so we should yield ourselves to God. We know how to yield ourselves to other objects; in the same way we are to yield ourselves to God; exercising the same judgment, the same wisdom, the same discretion, and the same tact, that we have been accustomed to exercise in other matters.

Thus, in a general way, we are instructed how to behave ourselves, under all the circumstances in which we may be placed, how to yield obedience to all the requirements of God.

The Scriptures are indeed able to make us wise unto salvation, and they contain all the doctrine, and all the reproof, and all the correction, and all the instruction in righteousness, that is necessary to make the man of God perfect, and thoroughly furnished unto all good works.

But they need to be studied, in order to be understood, and rightly divided, and rightly applied.

Watch, Wait and Be Ready.

"While the bridegroom tarried, they all slumbered and slept."—Matt. xxiv. 5.

There is nothing that tests character more than time; and many persons who can behave brilliantly on a crisis, break down completely when required to show constancy and perseverance. There are few things like delay to try the sterling character of either faith or watchfulness. So it was proved with Abraham. He could believe the promise of a son, though all expectation of a family had been long since abandoned. He could in after life bind that son on the altar in the full hope of a resurrection; and in both of those great crises he was "strong in faith, giving glory to God;" but when tested by delay he broke down; and giving up hope of a seed by Sarah, he offered the unbelieving wish, "Oh, that Ishmael might live before thee!"

And as it tests faith, so does time try watchfulness. A watchful spirit is kept alive by expectation; and if hope is long deferred, the heart becomes sick and the eye begins to slumber. It needs much oil to make the lamp burn brightly during the long nights of winter, and we require much of the unction of the Holy Ghost to keep the soul in a bright, wakeful and watchful spirit, while we tarry long for the return of our Lord. It is just this which often makes the parent's prayers grow languid while pleading faithfully, but pleading long, for the change of heart of some wayward child. It is this that sometimes seems to exhaust the zeal of ministers. They commence their work full of hope and energy, attempting great things, and expecting great results from God; but years roll on, and they find the stubborn heart stubborn still, and the unconverted man still unchanged by the grace of God. Then comes the testing time for the minister. Then he must watch well against the apathy of discouragement. Then he needs the prayers of his people that his own lamp may be kept burning. Then he needs to be much before God, lest, under the deadening influence of long delay, he should gradually begin to slumber, and at length be found sleeping at his post. Just so it is with the coming of our Lord. If we contrast the strong and lively expectation described in the epistles, with the present amount of life in the church of Christ, it is impossible not to perceive that a vast amount of unbelief and languor has crept over the great body of his professed disciples. It is but a little flock who are really looking for their Lord, and there are multitudes even of those who are not scoffers, who are ready to say, "Where is the promise of his coming?" For 1800 years the bride has been waiting, but the Bridegroom is not yet come. The students of prophecy have pointed out the signs of his appearing, and the observers of history have thought that they have seen these signs in various stages of the world's course. But the calculations have failed, the earthquakes have passed away, the storms have settled into calms, and the world has pursued its wonted course, till at length the scoffers begin to doubt the whole matter, and even the children of God begin to lose the vividness of their hope, to grow languid in their expectation, and to be in great danger of being caught as slumberers when the cry is made, "Behold the Bridegroom cometh." But such slumbering is not from faith but nature. The return is promised, though the time is not revealed; and the man of God must not allow his faith in the known promise to be shaken by the disappointments of those who have formed an opinion as to the unknown time. Man's misapplication of prophecy can never affect the certain truth of God's promise, and on that truth we lean. We know His word is truth. We believe God, that it shall be as it is told unto us. We know, therefore, that "He that shall come, will come," and we desire to be found in the earnest, watchful, and believing attitude of the Psalmist: "I wait for the Lord, my soul doth wait; and in his word do I hope."—Sel.

From Sister Bradley.

Dear Restitution:

In looking over your columns, I often see letters from brethren and sisters of different localities, which I think is such a pleasant way of introducing one another. There I became acquainted with Brothers Stevenson and Nelson, Brother and Sister Reed, and a host of others, from whom I have recieved many lessons of instruction. All are very dear to me. How eagerly I look forward to the time when we shall meet face to face, if never in mortality, soon in the "sweet by and by" we shall "meet ne'er more to sever." It has been one year since any of the preaching brethren have visited this place. Two years ago Brother Foore established a little church here. Some have moved to different localities. One dear sister has fallen asleep, and now only six remain. Father is quite feeble, suffering from a severe stroke of palsy, and he is aged as well as feeble; he knows that if the Master tarries long, that he must soon be brought to the tomb. And oh, how it would cheer him for some of the brethren to visit this place and proclaim the word. Now Brethren Foore and Kinsey, cannot one or both of you come to this place. We will meet you at the nearest railway station, which is Coffeyville. We are very weak financially; we cannot promise you great recompense, but the Master says you shall be recompensed. Now dear Restitution, if you deem your fifteen years old correspondents article worthy a place among the gems that cluster among your pages, you will oblige your well-wisher and devoted reader. Tom Paine on the Spirit-Life.

What a wonderful age we live in! A constant succession of physical, intellectual, and moral miracles follow each other with such bewildering rapidity that humanity of the common hum-drum sort can do little else than stand with open mouth and projecting eyes wondering "what next!" The Arabian Nights are only worthy of contempt, as insipid tales beside the greater wonders of the actual facts now setting the word agog.

The steam engine, electricity, the printing press, George Francis Train and the Beecher scandal, though all miracles in their way are chased into contempt and forgetfulness by the greater wonders of Mrs. Colby, Tom Paine and the Chicago "Times." What can the world now do without this sublime Trinity. Tom Paine the great apostle of reason; the sublime hero who first introduced a priest-ridden Bible-cursed world to an "Age of Reason;" who rid the world of the superstition of religion, and filled the hearts of his joyful disciples with the sublime hope of nihilism; whose gorgeous telaptic now rears its majestic front in classic Boston, resplendent with the gold and silver of his self-sacrificing followers, a fit abode for the spirit of the great emancipator, deified at last by the tardy justice of human reason; whose wisdom and virtue American clergymen are persuaded at last to recognize and eulogize; Thomas Paine; after an unexcusable silence of nearly a century has at last spoken. His epitaph said to have been written by himself is no longer true.

"Poor Tom Paine; here he lies,
Nobody laughs, and nobody cries;
Where he's gone, or how he fares,
Nobody knows, and nobody cares."

Thomas has unsealed his lips, broken the spell and "expressed himself." The long agony is over; the mystery solved—Thomas Paine is "safe in the promised land." But of what avail would it have been for Thomas to agonize, if Mrs. Colby had not appeared. Doubtless he has long desired to respond to the frantic cries of his worshippers. He has not been ungrateful, has not been "on a journey, nor asleep." It would be an everlasting, burning disgrace to the deified spirit of St. Thomas were he unmoved by the sacrifices incident to the erection of such a temple for his worship as the "Paine Testimonial Building" in our modern Athens; the blame lies on other shoulders; the law of spirit communication has been so confoundedly rigorous, and like the Potter Law, so difficult to comply with, that's what's the matter. In the the good old days of New England witchcraft, ghosts could come and go and snap their fingers at law, spiritual or mundane, but "times ain't as they once was." From some unexplained reason "conditions" have multiplied, laws in "spirit land" like Wisconsin laws have undergone a change, and Thomas must comply.

But Mrs. Colby came and Thomas came with her, and through her happy organs "expresses himself." But of what avail would he Thomas, burning to speak, and Mrs. Colby like "Barkis" "willin," if it were not for a Chicago audience? And what would an insignificant Chicago audience amount to among the millions of anxious disciples longing to know, if it was not for a "Times" reporter and a "Times" newspaper? But with the aid of the reporter and printer the generous "Times" completes the worshipful Trinity and the world is at peace.

Mrs. Colby opens her mouth and St. Thomas incidentally remarks that "The Bible, to him, was a very incorrect book when taken as the priesthood demanded it should be taken. To read it as he would a history satisfied him well enough; but to take it as a God-given book was impossible." Now, as coming from Thomas, the world sees nothing remarkable in this. It has long been satisfied "them's his sentiments;" but it cannot help remarking that, although the "spirit land is a progressive country, none of its inhabitants ever progress beyond a disbelief of the Bible. But, well-known and trite as the information is, it yet must be immensely consoling to his worshippers to know that Tom hasn't changed a jot. It sometimes requires immense resolution to keep the eyes closed and ignore the flood of light modern research is pouring upon the subject of Biblical antiquities and resist the evidences of its truth now pouring in from every quarter; and to know at last that the deified Thomas hasn't changed an atom is better than whistling to keep up one's courage.

But, St. Thomas tells us further that "He had known of crime and intemperance, and sin, and adultery, and licentiousness, from the experience he had had in earth life." Of this fact the world at large outside his worshippers never had a doubt, but what will they say now that Thomas is in the confessional. Hadn't they better make way with this wretched Mrs. Colby, lest she make yet more damaging revelation. Hustle her out. But Thomas will continue to talk. "He had passed into the home of spirits" (Thomas is said to have been fond of spirits), "and he wished to investigate those things then." Yes, that's like him; Thomas had an enquiring mind. The subjects were appropriate too, a new proof of the noble doctrine of affinities. But, as might have been expected, "The result had been startling. He had never passed a day from that time to this without investigating these conditions." No doubt the information thus vouchsafed, is very startling if any one has been expecting anything different from the sainted Tom. But you know that

"Vice is a monster of such frightful mein,
That to be hated needs but to be seen;
But seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then—investigate."

But Tom's "investigations" compelled him to declare that "He had never seen anything that compared with it. There was nothing in earth-life anywhere that could give any idea of the crime that began in licentiousness, that began in intemperance, that began in evils of various kinds to be found in the spirit land. He could see it all about him, and read their natures." O, Tom, Tom, Thomas! what part of the "Happy land of Canaan" did you immigrate to? Is it possible! O horrible! dreadful! Thomas; did you, could you, have you, (what's happened to my grammar) gone to tother place! But "just like him." Tom is a "reformer" still. That is some relief. "It was his work to help bring them up out of the blackness and darkness and ignorance into which they were plunged." There is hope yet. He hasn't gone to "tother place" quite. Tom was never an extremist. He didn't go quite to blank atheism, he was prudent enough to stop at deism. And so "just like him," he has stopped off at another station, the "half-way house" of some of our unpledged divinity doctors. So let the trustees of the "memorial fund" continue their benevolent work and pass around the hat again, for the relief of Thomas Paine. And as the temple is erected for his worship, now that communication is at last opened, let Mrs. Colby be at once installed as the priestess of the new religion. Let her take up her abode at once in the temple, let a "Times" reporter be detailed for the service and be constantly on hand, and let the world congratulate itself that through the efforts of those who, living or dead, are the sworn enemies of the Bible they have at last an undeniably divine revelation; always open for communication, ready and anxious to answer questions, and solve all mysteries, from the authorship of the Bible to that of Mother Goose' Melodies, from the age of the world to that of your grandmother. Twenty-five cents admission; children half price.

"In every place 'tis good to pray,
At rising morn or close of day;
For God is present everywhere,
And in all places answers prayer.

When sorrows and afflictions roll,
And like a flood o'erwhelms our soul,
How sweet to know that even there
The Lord will hear and answer prayer.

When friends desert and foes assail,
Our comfort and our courage fail;
And we are almost in despair,
'Tis good to bow to God in prayer."
—Golden Rule.

Correction.

Brother Reed:

In my article in the Restitution, "The Two Witnesses—Israel and the Church"—the last sentence in paragraph third, should read "light bearers to the nations," instead of "light heatens," etc. Also in the sixth line of paragraph tenth, it should read "the fulfilled," instead of "the glorified," etc., as "heavens" in the former, and "glorified" in the latter, were "mistakes in the printer." Midway, Ark.

—There are a hundred successful men where there is one contented man. I can find a score of handsome faces where I can find one happy face—happy in all weathers, and radiant with the sunshine of the heart. I can even find a score of working, zealous christians where I can encounter a single christian, who, under the o'erbrooding love of God, sits as a robin does on its bough, singing and swinging, without one trouble in its heart, or one discord in its minstrelsy. A down-right contented christian is rare, and all the more attractive for his rarity. What did Paul mean when he said, "I have learned in whatever state I am, therewith to be content?" He meant that he was perfectly willing to be where God had placed him, and to do what God told him, and to suffer what God laid on him, and to work, through manifold pains and persecutions, his mighty mission to his race. He was not content without work, but content with work.—Sel.

—Christians should be ashamed to to faint under less trials, when they see others bear up under greater ones.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.
All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana
Letters for the Editor should be sent to the same place.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.
THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the eternal overthrow of the devil; the transformation of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential to final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those correspondents which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

From England to America.

Thank God for a life immortal promised to believers. The excitement of the scene attending the landing on the Scythia brought to mind the love of excitement when a youth. To be in the midst of bustle and business was formerly my element; and fain would I now have been youthful. But the fact could not be altered. The prime of manhood, youth and beauty were before me, and I, was infirm, though strength for the occasion was graciously afforded me. Yet what an ingrate should I have been had I murmured. Oh! what blessedness flows from affliction! Feeling my own infirmities so that when viewing the noble forms of men and women a sense of abasement came on me; and were this life all, what a poor soul was I in this world! My mind then turned to the Man of Sorrows. How would He have been viewed among this company? He suffered: He was scorned, despised. Civilization, strength, politeness, refinement, and a scene of feminine beauty indeed remarkable—Columbia might have challenged Europe, and vice versa; all this was present, and, how long? If for a thousand years such beauty, such strength, could be possessed and enjoyed by persons now having them, it would seem wise to "live while we live," according to the epicurean motto. Strong is the spell of a few fleeting years; overwhelming would be the idea of a Millenary, speaking naturally, when thinking of the pilgrim's journey. But this blooming company is of mortal flesh; and though its presence is potent, or would be so were the things unseen absent from the thoughts; the fact is so. Years, disease, death, are long change the aspect and the circumstances. Yet among the possessors of worldly riches there is here and there one whose mind is not so occupied with things seen, that reflection shining not. A conversation with an American lady the first day of our voyage proved this. She was the wife of an Episcopalian clergyman, and was expecting the Advent. Her husband in New York held forth the doctrine of Christ's coming, and his coming so near he thought it doubtful if his wife would return to him ere the Lord had called for his saints. So there may be faith in things unseen where all seems engrossment in the present world. Our second day on the Scythia was Sunday. Another Sunday like it I wish not. While I look not on the day as once I did, I see the business going on not with pleasure. A boon has a day of rest out of seven been to Britain and America; and be the day itself holier than others, or not, it has been a preservative of society, and though a day of self-indulgence to many, it has been the especial time of Christian assemblage, the time for the presentation of truth to mankind.

Think of British and American liberty compared even with intellectual Germany, saying not a word about her less exalted neighbors. Here in Queenstown harbor, passengers are taken on board from Ireland. The mail is waited for, the tow-boat is plying, and there is but little seen to distinguish this from another day. The mail comes, and the piles of bags may afford some comprehensive idea of the intercourse and commerce between Europe and America—John Bull having the lion's share of the trade.

As we proceed on our voyage, men, women and children are sick, but many (our company is large) are strong. I am myself sick, and how some men can devour dish after dish of soup, fish, flesh, pastry, dainties &c., is a wonder before my eyes. I have to leave the table and go to bed. I suffer more than on any previous voyage. After awhile I take my seat at the table again; but my carefulness about what little I eat is amusing to three men opposite me, who actually devour more at dinner than would suffice myself and wife for three days. And the titanic eaters have also breakfast, lunch and supper. Verily, facts are stubborn things.

Saturday, June 12.

Up to now the wind has been against us nearly all the way, yet our boat makes good headway. Though not so well to-day, having been troubled with sleeplessness, I realize a certain improvement in health. At no time in seven years do I think I felt so well as I did yesterday. This is a blessing I know how to value. What I have left of mortal life must be the Lord's. May my every step be divinely directed.

We have many cabin passengers,—mostly Americans,—and of these there are some who evidently consider themselves of the elite. To be silent about the gospel hope would be condemning to me. So I have conversed with several, and have lent tracts and papers. I am thought rather a strange man. But I told a Chicagoan I was veteranized, and but little moved by peoples' opinions, and I must give my opinion at proper times, so as to enjoy a conscience void of offense. An invalid gentleman is interested in my conversation. He has looked into the subject of the advent, and being acquainted with some "Plymouth Brethren," has learned their sentiments, and seems inclined to agree with them.

Should any one reading this communication think to cross the Atlantic by a Cunarder, I would advice him to see his luggage safe in his state-room. On the day (Sunday) after our start I was in a fix I had not calculated on. On previous voyages, having had free access to all my luggage, I had no thought of aught otherwise on a Cunard boat. But to my mortification my trunks had been packed in the hold, to remain there until we reached New York. I had been perspiring, was uncomfortable and unwell. I told my complaint before the purser and others, and was greatly favored by orders being given to open the hold—which was a job indeed—and after a laborious search my trunks were found and raised to the floor; so I took a bath, and enjoyed the luxury of a change.

The cost of a cabin passage I did not like, but to risk the steerage would have been folly. I need the conveniences and comforts I have, though were I strong, the steerage would do for a short voyage.

On Sunday forenoon, passengers were notified that service was to be held. The captain read the prayers, portions of scripture, &c., as arranged in the prayer-book. The scene was interesting. The gay and thoughtless, as well as the staid and aged, attended, though here and there was form, power being but little thought of. I did in my mind contrast the outward respect yet paid to nominal religion by many Americans and British, with the more open irreligion of France and Germany. Had the vessel belonged to either of these nations, card-playing and gambling would have gone on this day as on other days, perhaps more ardently. The captain showed good taste when an Episcopalian clergyman, 24 years since, showed bad taste. When I came to the United States the first time it was in an American Packet ship. The clergyman, a native of Canada, was invited to conduct the service, Capt. W. being the clerk. When the clergyman came to the prayer for the rulers he read, "our most gracious Queen Victoria," ignoring another personage. Another Sunday came, and over. The custom house officers take the American captain declined being clerk. Our English captain of the Scythia becomingly included the president of the United States. He duly considered his American company. I felt a desire to present a portion of the gospel to the poor on the steerage, some of whom would have been interested in hearing it. One of the crew thought the captain would not object; but he said I must not preach, as by the Company's rules but one service was allowed on the day; so I dealt out some reading, and was thanked.

Probably the amount received by the company from cabin passengers exceeds $15,000. This sum affords abundant supplies. Viands of luxury, dainties in profusion, are before us. However, my breakfasts have been toasty of oatmeal porridge, and my plan of two meals a day appears best for me, removed by the jokes of those who eat four or five times a day.

Home, sweet, home! On my steerage passage the cleanliness and other comforts of home were missed, though in in this splendid saloon there is about everything provided to please the eye and gratify the appetite. Some in the vigor of manhood skze the gratification before them; but the weakly and the aged realize that this is not a place desirable for a long stay. Nothing can match a quiet home, though it be an humble cot.

A pleasing trait in our humanity I will here mention. An employee has taken a little English orphan. The contented appearance of the child has attracted notice. She is beloved; and an American gentleman has contributed something himself and induced others to contribute, so that the child has twenty pounds to be placed to her credit.

The waste of food is sad to think of. I venture to say that if the money cost of all the waste from the several Atlantic steamboat companies were saved, it would be enough to free some whole counties in England from poor rates. The fishes and the gulls have many a nice treat.

The mingling of people of several nations is always a matter of interest to me. Spanish, Russian, German, Swiss, Scotch, Swede, Irish, Welsh, English, American—here are they. A little Russian girl—not a word can I understand from her, and she not a word from me—has been my pet. She shows much fondness. The children of a Spanish family do not exhibit liveliness as our young Russians. The last evening was one of merriment, fun and jesting, young and old alike. This voyage will be remembered by many as the good voyage. I hope thankfulness to the Supreme is in some hearts, though there is but little expression of it.

The pilot brought New York papers with some unwelcome news. Passengers' baggage is to be searched more particularly than ever. A heavy sum will doubtless be collected by the custom house officers. Should any be caught cheating, they may have to smart for it.

The case of a poor German emigrant with a wife and two children has come to the knowledge of some cabin passengers. The unsophisticated laborer was robbed of his money by another German in Liverpool. A little has been done for him, and but little, because an influential party on board did not do as he promised; men's promises are often worthless.

Profanity among officers and crew is but little heard on these steamers. On American vessels the case is sadly otherwise. In justice to England I will say that her people are not as profane as Americans. Nine-tenths of the males here are swearers. I think I may say that of Britons not one-half are profane.

Extensive tours have been taken by most of the Americans on board. They can afford the custom duties, vexed as they are about them. All are caught, and jokes about imprisonment pass freely.

On Tuesday afternoon, June 15, we arrived at dock, having left Liverpool on Saturday, June 5th. Had it not been for a long detention at Queenstown and Quarantine, our passage would have been shorter by nearly twelve hours. Not an accident worth mentioning has occurred. Thank God for his goodness and care.

There was hurry and excitement enough as our baggage was hauled over. The custom house officers take some "compliments" coolly. But civility was a duty there as elsewhere, and I was politely treated, though I squirmed at a demand I had to meet. I think the Scythia, on her late visit, enriched Uncle Sam.

I was surprised at the general prosperity I saw in England. Affliction at our old homestead, and my feeble state while there, prevented any long journey; but what I did see in Lancashire and Cheshire, convinced me that there was more comfort among the people than exists in society here. Were it not for intemperance it seemed that almost every family might have enough and to spare. And such families! Our English mothers are noble. They bear children bravely, and the deadly crime of foeticide is unthought of by them, if this villainy is practiced, it is in very, very few cases. True as a God of justice lives, will American society be scourged for its fiendish iniquity.

Long ago I purposed, if I saw my native land again, to see the spot where my parents lie, and where my first wife rests. I could not realize the flight of years. Nearly half a century had gone since I was in the churchyard where my parents are; and 35 years since I saw the resting place of my devoted Alice. She and myself were bathed in affliction; our child was born in trouble, and in eighteen months after we were united, my dead wife was conveyed to the church where so short a while before we had pledged for better or for worse. Her memory is dear; amiable she was born—amiable she lived; her dust is with the Creator. My daughter is living and married. After nearly 34 years' absence I saw her. Meeting my only child was an occurrence in life which parents long absent from children may conceive of in realization of interest; none but parents can.

I must not speak favorably of the moral condition of my countrymen. While Britain has within her the best of mankind, skepticism and immorality (absent) Methodism, which once was potent, seems to have lost its power. And no wonder, when glaring inconsistencies are so manifest. I will not dwell on this fact, though fact it is, and though I might say much in proof.

It was gratifying to see a little interest, though but little, about the things of the kingdom. The gospel, faithfully presented, is a sweet savor to God. Our duty must be done; and if the Word is rejected, the fault is not ours. Failures in "reform" schemes are evident. I met a person from a colliery district, where I was acquainted long ago. Perhaps teetotalism had nowhere more influence according to population than there. I asked about the place, and one piece of information was, drunkenness worse than ever. In the pugilistic village where my early days were spent, the same characteristic was manifest that existed as long back as I can remember, though Methodism here had put forth its zeal, and had the religious hold of the neighborhood. Brandy is everywhere; but this is less heinous than another crime on this side of the ocean. While I might, had I sufficient time and health, extend observations, I will close my communication. Britain, the favorer of all nations, has abounding wealth and also abounding evils; and what I said to individuals there, I here repeat; the only hope for mankind is Christ's personal advent.

H. HEYES.

HARTFORD, CT., July, 1875.

The Trinity.

The word trinity is defined, by Webster, as follows: "(L. trinitas, tres and unus, unitas, one, unity.) In theology, the union of three persons in one Godhead, the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit." This is the only definition and I quote it literally. It will be readily seen that the author does not give the definition upon his own authority. It originated "in theology"—so-called—and has no meaning outside of the Catholic and Protestant churches. Its Latin derivation shows that it was first used in the Latin Church, and has been handed down to the "harlots," by "the mother,"—"the great harlot that sits on many waters, with whom the kings of the earth have practiced lewdness, and with the wine of whose lewdness the inhabitants of the earth have been made drunk." (Rev. xvii. Anderson's Translation.) In further proof of this, I now quote from "The Little Catechism" of the "mother" (Catholic) church:

"Q. What is God?

A. God is the Supreme, and infinitely perfect being.

Q. Has God a body?

A. No; God has no body, He is a pure Spirit.

Q. Is there more than one God?

A. No; there is only one God.

Q. Is God only one person?

A. There are three persons in God, but only one essence.

Q. How do we call these three Divine persons?

A. They are named: 1. The Father; 2. The Son; 3. The Holy Ghost. [NOTE:—"They," i. e. all three," are named" "Father," all three. "Son" and the same "They" the "Holy Spirit." What nonsense!] The Father is of Himself; the Son is begotten of the Father; the Holy Ghost is not begotten, but proceeds equally from the Father and Son. (How could the Holy Ghost proceed from the Son before He was begotten of the Father?) All three are alike uncreated and eternal. (Then the Son is just as old as the Father and infinitely older than his mother. Incredible!)

Q. You say there is only one God in three persons; what must we understand by this?

A. We must understand that, although, in some manner, we can distinguish in our thoughts and in our prayers between the Father, and the Son, and the Holy Ghost, yet it is necessary to believe that these three are only one and the same divine being, having only one mind, and one will. This is a great mystery, but God has not yet revealed Himself to us more clearly than this."

Please notice the word "mystery" in the last sentence and then read what John says: (Rev. xvii. 3-5.) "I saw a woman sit upon a scarlet colored beast, full of names of blasphemy * * * and upon her forehead was a name written, MYSTERY, BABYLON THE GREAT." *

Comment is unnecessary.

Protestantism endorses all the teachings of Catholicism in the questions and answers I have already quoted. Why not confess it likewise?

"Q. How do we confess the Holy Trinity?

A. We confess our belief in the Holy Trinity every time we bless ourselves with the sign of the cross, by touching our forehead, our breast, and our shoulders, and saying: 'In the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, Amen.'" ("Little Catechism," pp. 292-269). The "Reformed Church" in her Catechism says, "The God-head is incomprehensible."

"Incomprehensible," is that which "cannot be comprehended or understood; beyond the reach of human intellect; inconceivable." The doctrine of the Trinity, as taught by the Reformed Church, is exactly like that of the Catholic church, and I am sure I cannot comprehend or understand that which is "inconceivable" and "beyond the reach of human intellect."

But I take up the discipline of the M. E. Church, and I find this trinitarian "mystery" upon the "forehead" of Methodism.

In her "Articles of Religion" the very first sub-division is "of faith in the Holy Trinity," and reads as follows:

"There is but one living and true God, everlasting, without body or parts, (Just what "mother" says, "God has no body." It necessarily follows that a God "without body" who has "no body," is nobody), of infinite power, wisdom and goodness. (This is true of the "true God," but the Catholic and Methodist God is nobody, and is of no "power.") The maker and preserver of all things, visible and invisible. And in unity of this God-head there are three persons, of one substance, power, and eternity, the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost."

"The Son * * the very and eternal God * * very God and very man. The Holy Ghost * * very and eternal God."

"Incomprehensible!" Yet it is necessary to believe." No wonder infidels are gaining ground. No wonder Catholics and Methodists close their doors against heretics. No wonder that thinking men, like Thomas Paine, become deists.

Paine declared his belief thus: "I believe in one God and no more," and then tells why he believes it. Hear him: "Everything we behold carries in itself the internal evidence that it did not make itself. Every man is an evidence to himself, that he did not make himself; neither could his father make himself, nor his grandfather, nor any of his race; neither could any tree, plant, or animal, make itself; and it is the conviction arising from this evidence, that carries us on, as it were, by necessity, to the belief of a first cause eternally existing, of a nature totally different to any material existence we know of, and by the power of which all things exist: and this first cause man calls God." Pretty good reasoning, for an infidel! I commend it to the careful consideration of Col. R. G. Ingersoll, and his infidel followers, with the hope that they may cease to deny the existence of the Great First Cause who made them, for certainly it is true that even the Colonel "did not make himself." Thomas Paine says so, and no true infidel will dispute him. They ought to have inscribed upon the Paine hall, in Boston, the doctrine of Paine, in the golden words of Paul, "PAINE IS ONE GOD." But, Ingersoll-infidels are as far from this sublime truth, proclaimed in Revelation and supported by reason, as are the unreasonable and unscriptural creeds and catechisms of Protestants and Catholics. Read the Bible Union, version of 1 John v. 7, 8, and learn that the mother and daughters have interpolated into the Rheims and English versions, the statement concerning the heavenly witnesses, for the manifest purpose of sustaining their ridiculous dogma. I quote Anderson, vs. 6-8, "This is he that came by water and by blood, Jesus the Christ; not by water only, but by water and by blood; and it is the Spirit that testifies, because the Spirit is truth. For there are three that testify, the Spirit, and the water, and the blood; and the three agree in one." There is nothing in this to sustain the trinitarian view, but "much every way" to disprove it. Now read the reasonable statement of Paul: 1 Tim. ii. 5. "There is one God, and one mediator between God and men, the man (not God) Christ Jesus." And "when he shall appear, we shall be like him." "Blessed hope," precious promise, to "be like him" whose name (in fulfillment of the prophecy of Isaiah ix. 6), is "called * * the mighty God, the everlasting Father."

ANNA, ILL. AMOS SANFORD.

Truth.

Radiant truth, by its mild and heavenly influence will light man's steps through the benighted paths of error, to the luster of unclouded days. Truth is that grand virtue which deals plainly and honestly in all actions without disguise, without falsehood and without hypocrisy. It comprehends all that is wise and good, it is the vital spirit among men where the name of God is sanctified, where his ordinances are duly attended, where good laws are enacted against immorality, and these laws diligently executed; in short, where that celebrated rule is the standard of dealing, that every man do to others as he would they should do to him. These may be said to execute judgment and seek after the truth. The man that does good and speaks truth resembles the deity whose essential properties are goodness and truth. Truth presents us with a rule to ascertain what virtue is, and guides us into its personal possessions. Truth inspires its unclouded perception of duty, with the sympathizing voice of love. It is the greatest law of their being, and the main-spring of their action. Its robe is the spotless vestment of sincerity, snow-white and lustrious. It is an attribute of deity, and has been made attainable to man, that his race might be blessed and improved. Truth rises like a day-god upon the scene, and every object is flooded with beauty and loveliness; and a blessed influence is breathed through every portion of society.

Divine wisdom teaches us to love truth; to write it on the tables of our hearts so that we may find favor and good understanding in the sight of God and man. Life's journey is indeed eventful; it is full of difficulties; we must beware how we proceed in it; we must take the true path as pointed out by our guide; strait is the way and narrow is the gate that leadeth to life; yet comparatively few travel that way; but along the broad path that leadeth to destruction what multitudes rush. Yet throughout and at the end of one are peace, truth and pleasure, while in the other, beautiful it may seem to the eye, are turmoil, sorrow, and death. Death in its most frightful shape—not physical, but moral death—lurks constantly by the wayside, and the fiends of darkness skulk at every turn to lead and drag their victims down to ruin and dispair. Follow thine honest guide, TRUTH, and when thou art done with the cares of this world, you will be crowned with everlasting life.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.,.....July 23, 1874.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ Our meeting at Plymouth last Sunday was attended with good results. The audiences were large and seemed deeply interested in the Word spoken. One was added to the society.

☞ The outlook for the RESTITUTION continues to be encouraging. We have of late added quite a number of new names to our list. We hope every brother will make an extra effort to increase our list during the coming fall.

☞ We hope our friends throughout the State will attend the Conference at Rensselaer, commencing August 12, and holding over the following Sunday. The brethren at Rensselaer are prepared, and will be glad to accommodate all who may desire to attend. In view of the fact that much important business, in behalf of the cause will come before the meeting, it is earnestly desired that all who can will attend the Conference.

☞ By request we publish this week a history of a trip from England to America, by brother Heyes. It is quite a lengthy article, but contains many points of interest, which we commend to our readers.

Military Christians.

The Christian church has all varieties of men. In it we find poets, who are carried away by the lofty descriptions of Isaiah. We have also logicians, who glory in Paul and read his brave words with supreme delight. Others are held by the sweet spirit and simple story of the beloved John. Another class, with varied temperament, build on Peter, and claim to use his keys in unlocking the door of salvation to sinners. Men with vivid imaginations become enraptured by the visions of Daniel and John, and fly away, by the aid of prophetic scenes, to the grand re-union of heaven and earth.

But there is still another class of Christians, who take a military type, and read with perfect zest the wars and victories of Israel. They live in camp, they have on the armor, use the sword, contend for the faith. They lift the battle-axe and cry "no quarter." If they sing, it is the good old hymn, "I have fought my way through." Indeed they are soldiers of the cross, and their whole life is a warfare. That the church needs these brave knights of the cross, is plain, but there is a proper time for battle. Men should not feel, that because they are the warriors, that, therefore, they must fight their friends as well as their enemies; neither should they turn a prayer meeting into a military drill. Our military brethren must remember that the martial trumpet is to be laid by and that swords are, some day, to be beaten into plow shares. The Bible proclaims peace on earth and good will to men. There is a point where hostilities cease and peace reigns in blessedness. Another very important point is, that the foes are not always without, they are also within. One poet has said:

> "That of all the foes we meet,
> None so apt to turn our feet,
> None betray us unto sin,
> Like the foes we have within."

This interior battle field is the most hazardous. Here the enemy gains his greatest victories, and here is where lies our greatest danger.

In contending for the faith, we must not forget that doublings, temptations, trials, and pride, may be sweeping us away from our steadfastness in Christ. We believe in war on all the enemies of truth, we believe in war upon every passion and vicious habit in our own bosoms; but let us not destroy, in zeal for war, the lambs of the fold, or discourage the weary prodigal on his way back to the Father's house. Ever remember the Master's axiom: "I send you forth as sheep among wolves. Be ye therefore as wise as serpents, but as harmless as doves." With prayerful adherence to these blessed words, we shall gain the final victory and rest with Christ.

Hurt to Please.

There are people who seem to be unconscious of the fact that nobody nor anything can please them. They go to church and return home only to growl; they eat their meals with long faces and leave the table unsatisfied, they go to their business full of quirks and crochets and look as though they had lost every friend in the world. When children playfully greet them they cry out, "go away." They have no time to talk, are always busy and yet sit still and brood over total depravity and original sin. The are always expecting poor crops, and think "there's going to be a famine." They know the hearts of all men but their own. Twenty-five per cent. brings out an occasional grin, but they soon begin to mourn over the circumstances, and say, "it might have been more." The newspapers do not please them. The articles are too long or short, or the sentiments are wrong. The man who wrote the article has a handle on his name, and that ruins his chances for salvation. If a sinner is pricked to the heart and applies for admission into the church, he is suspicioned as having wicked designs on the elect fold. In short, everything goes wrong with these chronic fault finders. No one can please them, no one can live in peace with them. They live in the tombs of society and mourn over the follies and foibles of other men. We have always pitied these unfortunate beings and would be most happy to pour sunshine and peace into their sad aching hearts, but the avenues are all locked up and over the gateway to their sympathy is written, NO ADMITTANCE. People in this condition have religious dyspepsia and will die of melancholy. Life with them is a road of thorns, and they have ever walked in the shadows of the grave.

That there are times to weep, times when the heart should beat in sympathy with the suffering children of earth, we most fully believe, and we would not inflict one additional pang to the weary aching heart. But we cannot believe that the Christian life is a funeral procession. Neither do we believe that we should always be singing:

> "Hark from the tombs a doleful sound,
> My ear attends the cry."

There are bright spots in the desert of life, there are flowers as well as thorns, there are rejoicings as well as weepings. Israel shouted when the red sea was passed. Angels rejoice when sinners turn to God. The plains of a world made new will resound with tidings of great joy. Sorrow and sighing shall flee away, while shouts of victory will ring through the world from the palm-bearers beside the throne.

Did not Jesus say, "Be of good cheer, I have overcome the world?" And, again, "Rejoice and be exceeding glad?" When the prodigal returned from the wilderness of sin to the Father's house, was there not rejoicing and music? The future world is pictured to us in visions of beauty. At the right hand of the King there are "joys and pleasures forevermore." "Let not your hearts be troubled," says our absent Lord.

Life is an earnest field, and we must cheerfully and manfully fill our place and await the blessed morning of joy when the reapers shall bear the sheaves as wave offerings before the King in the golden harvests of crowns and immortality.

The Signs of the Times.

According to Luke, the great tribulation commenced with compassing of Jerusalem with armies, and for its subjects the Jews, and will continue until the times of the Gentiles shall be fulfilled. These facts are clearly stated by Luke. He says, "And when ye shall see Jerusalem compassed with armies, then know that the desolation is nigh. Then let them which are in Judea flee to the mountains * * * for these be the days of vengeance, that all things which are written may be fulfilled * * * for there shall be great distress in the land, and wrath upon this people. And they shall fall by the edge of the sword, and shall be led away captive into all nations, and Jerusalem shall be trodd down of the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled." Luke xxi. 20-24.

NOTE 1. This tribulation was to commence when Jerusalem should be invested by the Roman armies, A. D. 70.

2. There was to be great distress in the land of Judea, and wrath upon that people—the Jews. Or as Luke records it, "Great distress in the land, and wrath upon the people.

3. This great tribulation, or these days of vengeance, were to continue "until all the denunciations of the Scriptures (Campbell) should be fulfilled.

4. This, according to the foregoing, will span the times of the Gentiles, or what is called the Gentile dispensation. The position that the subjects of the predicted judgments, captivity, and deliverance, are the literal Jews, is too clear to need argument to sustain it. Who according to the immediate context, were to be in captivity, to need deliverance? Answer — the Jews. The captivity and deliverance, the judgments and mercy, all belong to the same people. If so, the signs which foretoken the deliverance, must also relate to the Jewish people. According to Matthew, the first of these signs will not be seen until after the tribulation of those days. He says, "Immediately after the tribulation of those days shall the sun be darkened, and the moon shall not give her light, and the stars shall fall from heaven, and the power of the heavens shall be shaken, and then shall appear the sign of the Son of man in heaven. Matt. xxiv. 29-30.

Thus, the sign of the Son of Man will not appear until after these days of tribulation. According to Luke "these days of vengeance," or the tribulation of those days, will continue until the times of the Gentiles are run out. Thus the signs of Christ's coming will not appear until after the times of the Gentiles; and of course the signs of his coming must precede his coming. Those who apply the darkening of the sun to A. D. 1793, are at least 82 years too soon. But few men, who were old enough to be warned by that event, are now living. Not only so, but the extent of the darkness did not meet the demands of the symbol.

The sun illuminates half the globe all the time. Darken the sun and the whole earth would be robed in Egyptian darkness. According to the same symbols in Revelations, one-third part of the sun, moon and stars represents one-third part of the organized world, with its emperor, cabinet, and subordinate rulers. Rev. viii. 12. If a third part of the sun, moon, and stars represents a third part of the world, then the whole sun, moon and stars would the whole world. Who would think, from reading o Saviors prediction, that forty years would intervene between the darkening of the sun and moon, and the falling of the stars? Why were the first and second of these signs synchonous, and the third so many years subsequently? Most of those who had witnessed the first two, would pass away before the third would occur. And, at the present time, there is probably not a man living who was old enough to be warned by it eighty-two years ago. The generation of people who shall see the first of these signs, are told to lift up their heads and rejoice, knowing that their deliverance is at hand. How many of the men now living who witnessed the dark day in 1793 may know that their deliverance is at hand?

The following is Luke's account of the signs of Christ's coming. He says, "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon the earth, the anguish of desponding nations; and the roarings in seas and floods; men expiring with fear, and apprehension of those things, which are coming upon the world; for the powers of the heavens shall be shaken. Then they shall see the Son of Man coming in a cloud, with great glory and power. Now when these things begin to be fulfilled, look up, and lift up your heads, because your deliverance approaches." Luke xxi. 25-28. Campbell.

1. Who is in slavery to know their deliverence was at hand? Answer—the Jews.

2. Could they know that their deliverence was at hand, or at the door, more than eighty years before their hopes would be realized? The ones who see the first of these signs may know with just as much certainty, that their deliverence is at hand, as we may know that summer is near when we behold trees in the spring putting forth their tender buds. We will now quote a predicted fulfillment of this sublime prophecy, which will occur at the right time and place, and relate to the right people. God says, "Behold in those days and in that time, when I shall bring again the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem. I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehosaphat, and will plead with them there for my people and for my heritage, Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted the Land." Joel iii. 1-2.

It was Judah, Jerusalem, and that people who were to be captured and trodden under foot until the the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled. When God brings back the captivity of Judah, the Jews, and Jerusalem, he will plead with judgment against the assembled Gentile nations. Then will be an unprecedented tribulation upon the Gentiles. The Jews have been trodden down and oppressed by all nations, and for this reason God will gather them together in the valley of Jehosaphat, and pour out his judgments upon them. All nations will be assembled against the Jews. Ezek. xxxviii. and xxxix.; Zech. xii. 7-9.

The overthrow of all nations will be a necessity, in order to Israel's deliverance. Their deliverence will be national; therefore the signs of their deliverence will be national also. Those expositors who teach that the sun, moon, and stars, and the powers of the heavens which shall be shaken, will be literal, are environed with insuperable difficulties. What analogy between the shaking of the powers of the heavens as the cause, and the anguish of desponding nations as the effect? But if the shaking of these great luminous bodies, and their being veiled in darkness, denote the overthrow of the emperors, queens, kings, and chieftains of the world, and blotting them from the constellations of the nations, then the analogy is perfect. That these heavenly bodies are used as symbols, to represent the rulers of the world, is further evident from the fact that the heavens and earth, including, of course, the sun, moon, and stars, are represented as passing away in contrast with God's word, which shall not pass away. If the literal heavens and earth do not pass literally away, then the sun and moon will not be rolled in literal darkness, and the literal stars will not fall. The heavens and earth include all things in them. If these pass literally away, there will be nothing left. That the passing away of heaven and earth, or the signs in the sun, moon, and stars are used as symbols to represent the overthrow of the assembled rulers and armies of earth, we will now proceed to prove. The prophet Joel continues, "Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up: Let the heathen be wakened, and come up to the valley of Jehosaphat; for there will I sit to judge all the heathen (Gentiles) round about. Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe; come get ye down; for the press is full, the vats overflow; for the wickedness is great. Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision; for the day of the Lord is near in the valley of decision. The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining. The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake; but the Lord will be the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel." Joel iii. 9-16.

When describing the same shaking of heaven and earth, and darkening the sun, moon, and stars, in the previous chapter, the prophet represents the Lord and his army as the grand cause of the same consternation and overthrow of the rulers and armies arrayed against Israel, which he so graphically describes in the foregoing quotation. He says, "The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble; the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining: And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army; for his camp is very great; for he is strong that executeth his word; for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible; and who can abide it." Joel ii. 10-11.

According to the foregoing, the sun, moon, and stars symbolize the word, represented in Palestine, by the assembled emperors, kings, and armies of earth. And the passing away of heaven and earth symbolize the overthrow of the assembled nations, with their royalty, before the Lord and his army. And the subjects of the deliverence foretold, are God's people, Israel, and the signs of their deliverence are the final overthrow or their enemies, in the last great battle of God Almighty. When Israel beholds the combined armies of earth, with the kings and chief captains of the world melting like mist before the rising sun, before the powers of King Jesus and his army, they may know that their deliverence is at hand, the same as the five millions of slaves knew that their freedom was at hand, when they saw Grant and his victorious armies pressing in on one side, while the heroic Sheridan was sweeping down the Shanandoah valley and the brave Sherman and his armies were pressing in from Raleigh.

The same symbolism is employed by our Savior to represent the kings and armies of earth, whose overthrow will be evidence to God's chosen people, that their final deliverence is at hand, is presented by his messenger in Revelations. He says, "And I beheld when he had opened the sixth seal, and, lo, there was a great earthquake; and the sun became black as sackcloth of hair, and the moon became as blood; and the stars of heaven fell unto the earth, even as a fig tree casteth her untimely figs, when she is shaken of a mighty wind. And the heavens departed as a scroll when it is rolled together; and every mountain and island were moved out of their places. And the kings of the earth, and the great men, and the rich men, and the chief captains, and the mighty men, and every bond man, and every free man, hid themselves in the dens and in the rocks of the mountains; and said to the mountains and rocks, fall on us, and hide us from the face of him that sitteth on the throne, and from the wrath of the Lamb: For the great day of his wrath is come; and who shall be able to stand. Rev. vi. 12-17.

According to the foregoing, the same symbols presented in Matt. xxiv; Mark xiii., and Luke xxi., are used to represent the "Throne and him that sitteth upon it—King Jesus—and the ushering in of the great day of his wrath. Thus, again the darkening of the sun and moon, and the falling of the stars, and the shaking of the powers of the heavens, or the rolling the heavens together as a scroll, represents the great white throne, and him that sitteth on it, before whose face heaven and earth shall flee away, (Rev. xx. 11) or the same effect produced by these signs in the sun, moon, and stars, and shaking the powers of the heavens, to-wit: The anguish of desponding nations, as fitly represented by the kings, chief captains and mighty men calling for the rocks and mountains to fall upon to screen them from the overwhelming wrath of the Lamb.

Lazarus and the Rich Man.

EDITOR RESTITUTION:

You don't seem to take the right view of "the rich man and Lazarus," taking the tract written by Wilson to be a standard of your people. I have endeavored to read up all the views of the societies taking a material view of the future life, in reference to this subject, and I have found few that have ever come near the true explanation of it in my estimation. But by taking portions of each writer's views, and the entire of none, with some additional ideas, I think the right idea can be found.

That it was to reprove the money-loving Pharisees as the writer (W.) suggests, I agree. And that it grew out of the last mentioned parable, i. e. the unjust steward, as he suggests, is undoubtedly true. But in his "definition and use of parables" there is, to my mind, something left out of view, and what that is I will endeavor to explain.

A part of Webster's definition of a parable is, "a fable or allegorical relation or representation of something real in life or nature, from which a moral is drawn for instruction." But in order to make it real in life or nature, the figure must be real or something which the parties addressed believe to be a reality. Consequently we are driven to an investigation as to how their belief agreed with the idea of futurity expressed in the parable. And in order to find their belief we are compelled to turn to Josephus, and there we can plainly see Abraham's bosom, and we can also see how Lazarus was carried by angels; we can see, too, how Dives could "lift up his eyes, being in torments;" we can see the impassable, the flame with which the rich man was tormented, and the need for cooling his tongue with water, he being dragged "into the neighborhood of hell itself."

Now a query might arise, Why not make the scene to occur after the resurrection, and thereby enforce the judgment? The answer is this: The Pharisees did not believe in a resurrection from hades of the unjust—I mean a resurrection into this world from hades, although, according to Josephus, some of them did believe in a resurrection of the unjust in some sense,—in the same sense as they did that of the righteous, thereby making the resurrection itself entirely separating forever any view or communication between the just and the unjust. And in order, that the scene represented in the parable should answer the purpose of a reproof, and at the same time agree with the Pharisaic belief, it was necessary that Abraham and Dives should be within speaking distance of each other. And it is an absolute fact conceded by all, that in order to effectuall enforce reproof, we must resort to what the party reproved takes as his standard of right and wrong, and his standard of belief as to the consequences resulting from his right or wrong actions.

And again, when the party first decides your own doctrine, in order to reprove them or enforce a reproof, the only wise thing you can do is to take them on their own ground.

And again, with regard to derision, if we cannot with one sweep completely overturn it, the only other best thing is not to pay any attention to it.

The conclusion, therefore, is, that he teaches no doctrine to his disciples, but uses the Pharisee's own doctrinal view to reprove them for covetousness. But on the other hand we hear him saying beware of the doctrine of the Pharisees. And our Savior is not responsible for the wrong view the people have taken of the parable. If so, he is responsible for the cheat of Rome's eating the literal flesh at communion. This I write to call out a correct view from able writers on this subject.

The Oneness of the Book of Prophecy.

That was a beautiful extract from the writings of Dr. Cumming in THE RESTITUTION for July 14. I want to copy the two last paragraphs, and make it an illustration of the oneness of the Book of Prophecy as a whole—the Old and the New Testaments, when patiently compared.

The figure which the Doctor uses is that so often used by Paul—the human anatomy—for illustrating the unity of believers in one body, and it is equally pertinent to the unity of all parts of prophecy in one harmonious whole. Here is the extract:

Let us take the portrait of our blessed Lord. Isaiah describes his sorrows; Malachi his triumphs; the dying Patriarch proclaims his empire, and the sweet Psalmist of Israel the extension of his kingdom; one prophet gives one feature, and one gives another; and looking at the parts in detail, irrespective of the original, and comparing one with the other, we should say that they are so contradictory that they can never belong to the same being. At last Bethlehem and Gethsemane rise above the horizon—Cavalry lifts its awful head—the Son of God appears upon the cross—when, at prophets said is compared with what Christ is, and lo! all the parts delineated by the pens of prophets in distinct and different centuries, and under different circumstances, at first apparently contradictory, come to be put together, and they constitute the "brightness of the Father's glory, and the express image of his person." By this alone it is proved that the prophets "wrote as they were moved and guided by the Holy Spirit," and that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah.

CLEAR WATER, MISS.

Report of Labor.

Dear Brethren:—

Since my last report, I have visited New Palestine again. Had a good meeting. Some of the sisters from Indianapolis were at my meeting, and the few at New Palestine were encouraged to go on the way rejoicing.

From there I went to Indianapolis, and held two meetings in the city park, at eleven and four. Had a small gathering in the forenoon. There were some three hundred or more at the meetings, and several were interested in the things spoken. I intend, (the Lord willing) to be there again the last of August. At the close of the meeting, one man presented himself for baptism, and he immersed by brother Cox soon. The Christadelphians are doing all they can to trouble the brethren and sisters with their doctrine, they say to them there is no Gospel for Gentiles, no law for Gentiles, and the whole Bible is fulfilled, from Genesis to Jude, and there is nothing for any of us, and they have succeeded in getting some to believe it. This is what we may expect in the last days. Some will depart from the faith, may God help us to stand firm; the time is short, let us be up and doing. Dear brethren and sisters, if there ever was a time that we should be firm it is now. There are a few in Indianapolis, thank God, who are determined to stand firm. May God help them so to do. Oh, may the King in his beauty soon come, and restore again the kingdom to Israel.

Lord may it soon come.

A Baked Bible.

There is a Bible in Lucas county, Ohio, which at one time contained some very warm Scriptural texts. It belongs to Mr. Scheboldt, a native of Bohemia. It was formerly the property of his grandmother, who was a very devout Protestant. During one of those unfortunate periods when religious persecutions were common in Austria, a law was passed at the instance of the Roman Catholics that every Bible in the hands of the people should be surrendered to the priests to be burned. Mrs. Scheboldt determined to save hers, and, when the party came to search her house, she had just prepared a huge batch of dough for the oven, and taking her precious Bible, she wrapped the yielding dough around it, and quickly deposited it in the oven. Here it was thoroughly baked, but was saved uninjured from the fiery furnace of the priests. It has passed through several generations as a memorial of the days when men were not allowed to worship God in accordance with the dictates of their own consciences.—Louisville Courier-Journal.

The Advance Guard.

The above is the title of a paper the prospectus of which we have received, to be published as a weekly journal at Indianapolis.

The prospectus reads "It is intended to be a five column quarto, having one department devoted to the Independent Order of Good Templars, one to the Womans Christian Temperance Union, another to political reform, and another to Religious and Literary Miscellany; each Department to be in charge of its respective editor, and the whole to be under the control of J. J. Talbot, Grand Worthy Chief Templar of Indiana."

Among the dozen and one or thirteen contributors mentioned, which are to contribute to its columns, appears the name of Hon. Schuyler Colfax. Terms $2.00 per year. Address

THE RESTITUTION.

Come, Labor On!

Come, labor on!
Who dare stand idle on the harvest plain,
While all around him waves the golden grain,
And to each servant does the Master say,
"Go, work to-day?"

Come, labor on!
Claim the high calling angels cannot share—
To young and old the Gospel gladness bear;
Redeem the time; its hours too swiftly fly.
The night draws nigh.

Come, labor on!
The harvest are few, the field is wide,
New stations must be filled, and blanks supplied;
From voices distant far, or near at home,
The call is "come!"

Come, labor on!
The enemy is watching, night and day,
To sow the tares, to snatch the seed away.
While we in sleep our duty have forgot,
He slumbered not.

Come, labor on!
Away with gloomy doubts and faithless fear!
No arm so weak but may do service here;
By feeblest agents can our God fulfill
His righteous will.

Come, labor on!
No time for rest, till glows the western sky,
While the long shadows o'er our pathway lie,
And a glad sound comes with the setting sun,—
"Servants, well done?"

Come, labor on!
The toil is pleasant, the reward is sure;
Blessed are those who to the end endure;—
How full their joy, how deep their rest shall be,
O Lord, with Thee!

A Major Proposition and its Results.

"Where no law is, there is no transgression."—Rom. iv. 15.

All arguments when stated in regular form, according to the the rules of logic, require three things, viz.: A major proposition, a minor proposition and a conclusion. As for instance, Major P. Everything that has life, sense and motion, is an animal.

Minor P. This fly has life, sense and motion.

Conclusion. Therefore this fly is an animal.

But very little of the argumentation, either in the Bible or out, is stated in this formal way. Paul was a master reasoner, and doubtless familiar with this syllogistic method of reasoning, as all his writings show; for he often comes as near this formal statement as the spirited character of his subject and the style of his composition will allow. For instance, in 1 Cor. xv., in his famous argument on the resurrection of the dead, he lays down this major proposition:

"If Christ be not raised,—they which have fallen asleep in Christ are perished." Then he follows with the minor proposition.

"But now is Christ risen from the dead." Then the conclusion. If stated formally, it would stand thus, "Therefore, they which have fallen asleep in Christ have not perished." But he pursues a more spirited and beautiful way, and gives us the conclusion with a shout, as it were.

"And become the first fruits of them that slept. For since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." He has by a clear statement of facts and arguments before proved both of his propositions to be true, and then most triumphantly draws his conclusion that they which fall asleep in Christ will be raised from the dead.

But Paul's arguments are not always so regularly drawn. Often a series of major propositions are laid down in quick succession each depending on the preceding one, the writer venturing out boldly on the intelligence of his readers to supply both the minor propositions, and to draw the right conclusions. Or, after supplying both, perhaps, either before or after, in another connection. Deep, rapid, reasoners like Paul, are much given to such bold strokes. They talk for granted that their readers and hearers can see the conclusion with the same clearness as themselves, and do not think it necessary to state every step in the argument in a formal manner. Some sublimely results from this bold, eager, way of reasoning, and I think that whatever uncertainty rests about Paul's meaning in any of his writings, (save that arising from the deep recondite character of his subjects often) comes from this source.

Now, my text is a major proposition and stands alone. Neither minor propositions nor conclusion are connected with it. We are left to supply both, and our conclusion will depend wholly on the character of the minor proposition which we supply. Very grave results indeed depend on that minor proposition; let us be very careful how we fix on one, and be very sure that we get the right one. Now, let us make the attempt.

Major P. "Where no law is there is no transgression."

Minor P. There is no law in heathen lands, or where there is no Bible.

Conclusion. Therefore, there is no transgression in heathen lands.

So we see that we have proved that where men are ignorant of the Bible or of God's revealed will, they are sinless. It follows that it is a great mercy to withhold the Bible. And further that the whole heathen world would stand in no need of a Savior, are quite independent of Christ, as he himself declares that "he came not to call the righteous but sinners." Their salvation is, therefore, secure beyond peradventure. And yet, further had Christ and the Bible been withheld from the whole race, all would have been equally sinless and equally safe. If it be argued that Adam had law and we share the penalty of his violation of it, and the death of Christ was necessary to remove the Adamic sin and its penalty; the answer is that the death of Christ does this work unconditionally, absolutely and universally. It is not affected by our faith or unbelief, by our knowledge or ignorance of its provisions. But our personal transgressions are entirely unbenefitted by it, except on the condition of faith. Now if knowledge of law by which men are made responsible is entirely dependant on the introduction of the Bible, it is manifest that if the Bible had been withheld, all would have been sinless, and being personally sinless they do not stand in need of faith. Hence, the best possible thing to be done is simply to withhold all knowledge of what the Bible teaches, for, in so doing, men are left in their sinless and safe condition. But this is what logicians call reductio ad absurdum. Nothing can be more absurd and contrary to fact, than the conclusion to which we arrive simply by supplying a false minor proposition. The whole scheme of christianity, the entire warp and woof of all the Bible has to reveal presupposes that man is a sinner before what the Bible has to say reaches him. It was for a world of sinners that Christ died; to a world of sinners that he is preached. The things revealed in God's redemptive plan, as historically laid down in the Holy Scriptures, are absolutely necessary to relieve man from not only the Adamic penalty, but also from the consequences of his own personal transgression. But our major proposition declares that "Where no law is there is no transgression."

Now, as we have proved that all men are sinners, and as the Scriptures is very clear and emphatic in its declarations to that effect, what are we to supply as the minor proposition? Most clearly that there is no place without law. The whole argument would then stand thus:

Major P. "Where no law is there is no transgression."

Minor P. But there is no place without law.

Conclusion. Therefore there is no place free from transgression.

But Paul has not left us to thus reason out the minor proposition and the correct conclusion, but he has previously laid them both before us and proved them in a most masterly manner. Indeed, the evident purpose of what the apostle has written in the first three chapters of Romans, is to reach in a fair and logical manner just the very conclusion to which we are forced by the syllogism as we have arranged it. Now let us see. It will not be denied that the law was given by Moses to the Jews alone.

Now says Paul, (Rom. ii. 14, 15), "When the Gentiles which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these, having not the law, are a law unto themselves; which show the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another. Now the whole race are either Jew or Gentiles; the Jews have a law written on stones and on parchment, the Gentiles one "written in their hearts." Both then have law, and of this law both are transgressors. In the first chapter Paul devotes much space to proving the Gentiles sinners. He declares that, "That which may be known of God is manifest in them, for God hath showed it unto them. For the invisible things of him from the creation of the world are clearly seen, being understood by the things that are made, even his eternal power and God-head; so that they are without excuse." Then he mentions the abominations of which they are guilty, devoting the remainder of the chapter to it; closing with the declaration, "Who knowing the judgment of God that they which commit such things are worthy of death, not only do the same, but have pleasure in them that do them." He proceeds in the second chapter to prove the Jews also sinners, and introduces more at length the fact that the Gentiles have law. In the third chapter he refers to his argument and sums it up with the following conclusion. (ii. 9): "What then? are we (Jews) better than they? (Gentiles). No, in no wise; for we have before proved both Jews and Gentiles that they are all under sin. As it is written: There is none righteous, no not one, no not one." The argument, therefore, must stand as we have arranged it in both propositions and in its conclusion.

Now very important consequences follow. But before attending to them it will be necessary to explain some things which Paul afterward said, so that a harmony may be apparent, and the consequences we refer to may be more clearly seen. In Rom. v. 13, Paul says, "For until the law sin was in the world, but sin is not imputed where there is no law."

At first sight there seems to be something in this statement contradictory to the conclusions we have before reached. For we have proved that there is no place "where there is no law," and yet the above implies that the world was without law till Moses. Let us then carefully analyze the text. "For until the law,—" said Paul. What law? evidently the Mosaic, the written, the revealed law; for the words refer to a specific time, "until," and therefore to a specific law; and none other can be meant, for none other was ever given. "The law was given by Moses;" "sin was in the world,"—continues Paul. But "where no law is there is no transgression," therefore, where there is sin there must be some law, and as sin was in the world from Adam to Moses, therefore, law of some kind was in the world from Adam to Moses. Now, what law was in the world from Adam to Moses? Paul has already informed us; "For when the Gentiles which have not the law do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law are a law unto themselves." "But," adds Paul, "Sin is not imputed when there is no law." Now, can we accept Paul's words here without any qualification whatever? Evidently not for it would make him contradict himself. What law does he now mean?

Manifestly that to which he referred before, viz.: The written law. Let us then add, as we are clearly entitled to, (indeed compelled to) the word written, or revealed; it will then stand thus: "But sin is not imputed when there is no written or revealed law."

We next enquire, what does the apostle mean by the word "imputed?" Are we to understand him to teach that from Adam till Moses men were innocent of all transgressions? Clearly not; for the second reads, "And God saw that the wickedness of man was great in the earth, and that every imagination of the thoughts of his heart was only evil continually." So great that the waters of Noah's flood could alone wipe out the stain. The world before the flood then, were sinners, great sinners, transgressors of law; "law written in their hearts" under sentence of death for their crimes, and the last generation of them executed before the natural close of their lives. The same may be said of Sodom and her sister cities. Clearly they were held responsible for their crimes in a sufficient degree to justify their condemnation to death. What then does the apostle mean by that word? A difference in responsibility is clearly indicated between those with, and those without, written or revealed law. That difference is indicated in the next succeeding verse. "Nevertheless death reigned from Adam to Moses, even over them that had not sinned after the similitude of Adam's transgression."

Here is the secret. They had sinned, but not against revealed law, as did Adam. God had expressly forbidden the act for which Adam was condemned. He did not expressly forbid anything from that time till Moses. The responsibility is, therefore, not the same, and the punishment must not be the same. Now, what is the difference in the after treatment? Let Paul himself answer. Rom. ii. 12. "For as many as have sinned without (written) law, shall also perish without law, and as many as have sinned in the law, shall be judged by the law (verse 16) in the day when God shall judge the secrets of men by Jesus Christ according to my Gospel."

The conclusion is, therefore, irresistable, that from Adam to Moses, from Moses to Christ and from Christ to the end of the world, those who have only the light of nature, as it is called, i. e. the whole antediluvian, patriarchal and heathen world who have not had God's revealed word, but who have, nevertheless "sinned without law," shall never be raised from the dead. They are not entitled to life, nor worthy of the second death. Hence, God does not hold them amenable to a future judgment, but "as natural brute beasts they utterly perish in their own corruption."

Now, if there is a flaw in this argument of the Apostle Paul, I am unable to find it, and I most earnestly invite all advocates of the popular Fair-Chance theory to give it their close attention, subject it to a fair and thorough criticism, and if there is a flaw in it, point it out at once and by so doing, greatly oblige

Yours for the Truth,
J. F. WILCOX.

What is Mind?

Brother Gelletly:—With much interest I have read your strictures on an article of mine, in a recent number of the RESTITUTION, and was pleased with the Christian courtesy exhibited. But I confess I do not see clearly the line of distinction between mind and soul, as qualitative agents. In the numerous texts of Scripture in which the word soul is found, it is something which is grieved, vexed, discouraged, abhors, hates, loves, praises, etc., and that every living thing possesses a soul. All there is in man, all but the passions of the mind.

It is, therefore, a very nice point to distinguish between soul and mind, and very doubtful whether it can be done without finer optics than is possessed by man in this present state.

We are continually in the habit of giving different names to the same thing under different circumstances, or different inflections. We speak of gravitation and weight; but the latter is only the measure of the force of the former. How shall we separate the terms so as to make two things. We have seven names for the rays of light; but they are only so many different vibrations of the same one thing. We have also five names for our senses (or more philosophically, for our sense, in the singular number), all of which are vibrations of so many nerves, all together amounting to sensation. We have also water, ice, snow, rain, hail, steam and vapor, all reducible to one thing. And the most we know of electricity, galvanism and magnetism, is, they are modified inflections of one and the same thing. If thing it is, or the effect of a thing or things. But in giving my former article to the public it was not my intention to get up a philosophical discussion; far from it. I had a higher object in view, viz., one touching the future condition of the righteous; when they shall become "equal unto the angels". It involves the power of mind over matter, as in the instance of the living man, and in the want of mind in the stone. The subject, too, will lead to further light on the resurrection of the dead. "How are the dead raised up?" Are they coming up out of the midst of the sea, and desert parts of the earth, unclothed, unprotected and uncared for? or how are they to be "born again?" Is God under the necessity of creating new laws of nature, or to impress new properties upon old matter to bring about these things? or did He finish his work of creation before He rested? These are questions not to be turned away by a "may be," or a "don't can;" we want his Word for it. Angels have come to the earth and returned without steam cars, or steamboats, and by no new law of nature. And Christ by the power of his will or soul or mind, ascended to heaven with the same body that was nailed to the cross, to descend again in like manner in some future time.

With few exceptions, almost any man, by the power of his mind, can ascend up clear from the earth a few inches at least; but drop back again immediately. This is ascension in part; but I admit is a very small part. "But when that which is perfect is come, then that which is in part shall be done away." God does all things well. "Very good." He gives all his creatures what they need, and when they need; but nothing to lay up in store houses to be used at some future time. Christ did not make the wine for the wedding party until the time came to use it, nor has He taught us to pray to-day for bread to-morrow.

Man is a progressive creature. He does not arrive at his perfect state all at once; therefore he does not need all the divine light at once. Christ did not give it all to his disciples at once, but a little at a time, as they could bear it. The first glimmering rays of light given to man were very feeble. "The seed of the woman shall bruise the serpent's head." This was, no doubt, as much light as the infant family of man could bear at that time. Milk for babes before they can bear strong meat. But if the family of man had kept their eye on those twinkling rays, as they grew brighter and brighter, from that time to this, our divines would be wiser than they are now. But the traditions of men, like the ignis fatuus, has led them astray into a miry swamp, until they are lost and bewildered, and is fully unable to find their way out.

We are living in a lamentable time, when men seem to be afraid of a new idea, fearing it may not be true, and therefore condemn it without investigation; and yet all the real truth possessed by the churches was gained by diligent investigation, and it is bigoted folly for any man to flatter himself that he has all the truth and not one error. And where is the danger of investigation? or of treating the people with both sides of any religious question?

The truth will never suffer by coming in contact with error, for it is destined by its own divine nature to burn its way through the highest mountains of error. But to keep the people from free investigation of religious subjects, is the papal game nearly played out in the East, and ought not to be played over again here in the West.

So then, brother G., if you think I err, give your reasons why, and no harm will be done and no hard feelings created.

Your brother in Christ, seeking for truth, ANTIOCH BECHLE.

Question.

MR. EDITOR:—What is the meaning of Matt. xvi. 28; Mark ix. 1; and Luke ix. 27. Yours in search of truth,
W. I. STEELE.

LOCUST GROVE, Bedford Co., Texas.

We suppose that the trouble upon this Scripture is in reference to the phrase, "Till they see the Son of Man coming in his kingdom." The Diaglott rendering of this Scripture as given in Matt. xvi. 28, is as follows:

"Indeed I say to you, That there are some of those STANDING here, who will not taste of Death, till they see the SON of MAN coming in his ROYAL MAJESTY."

The renderings in Mark and Luke are substantially the same. That there is some authority for this rendering, we give below some of the lexicons upon this word Basileia rendered kingdom, in the King James Version, and Royal Majesty in the Diaglott.

Greenfield—Kingdom, realm, i. e. the region or country governed by a king; kingly power, authority, dominion, reign; royal dignity, the title and honor of a king.

Pickering—A kingdom, realm; dominion, royal authority; hereditary monarchy.

Boneyan—Sovereign rule, royalty; government, a diadem.

Bagster—A kingdom, realm, the region or country governed by a king; kingly power, authority, dominion, reign; royal dignity, the title and honor of a king.

Boger—On this text, quotes D. Heinsius, as follows: "The ancients interpret this of Christ's Transfiguration, whence they connect this with the beginning of the following chapter as it is at Mark ix. 2; Luke ix. 27."

Lange—On this this text says: "Chrysostom and many others hold that the limit, until they see the Son of Man coming, etc., refers to the history of the Transfiguration immediately following."

With this rendering, and the definition and comments before us, then connect Matt. xvi. 28 with the xvii. 1-9, where it properly belongs, and it is easily seen that Peter, James, and John in vision saw the Royal Majesty appear in glory. G. M. MYERS.

Gleanings.

As will be seen from the following letter, Brother Halstead, our Evangelist, expects to be at home—Romulus—during our state conference:

WARREN Co., Ind July 12, 1875.

H. V. REED:

My Dear Brother:—Myself and wife arrived here on Saturday the 10th. Had meeting yesterday. Shall remain a few days and visit with the brethren before journeying further. Wife is still gaining slowly, as we think, and if she continues to do so, while we remain here, we will not go west, at least while she continues to improve; but will return through Indiana, visiting some few points where we think there is most probability of accomplishing good. If we remain in the state, we will try to get around home to be at Conference. Shape all your arrangements so as to be there.

The following letter from Brother W. H. Radcliff, of Montour, Tama county, Iowa, speaks for itself, and tells of the faith and zeal of brethren there:

By appointment, the brethren and sisters of the one faith met at the house of Brother Adam Carter, at 2 o'clock, July 10th, for the purpose of confirming a former organization, and to build one another up in our most holy faith. Meeting opened by prayer, and a short discourse by Elder Webb from Col. iii. The brethren and sisters then carried on the meeting. General good feeling prevailed, and love seemed to reign, and all rejoicing in the soon coming of Christ our King. William A. Webb, acting elder, and Lafayette Hankle, deacon. We meet every first day to listen to the preaching of the word and attend to all the things commanded. Any of the preaching brethren traveling through this part of the country, is cordially invited to meet with us. We meet at the Rockvalley schoolhouse, five miles north of Montour, Tama county, Iowa.

Resolved, That a copy of these minutes be sent to the RESTITUTION for publication.

WILLIAM H. RADCLIFF,
Secretary, pro. tem.

Below we publish some extracts from a letter from a young brother upon whom the truth is beginning to have an effect as a light that shineth in a dark place:

DEAR BRETHREN:

I united with the Christian (sometimes called Campbellite) church about one year ago. They claimed to stand on the Bible, and on the Bible alone.

And I, like all, or nearly all the world at the present day, joined the church not knowing very much about what I ought to do. Things moved on smoothly until about five months after, when brother T. A—— gave me a few passages of Scripture to read. I read them, not thinking much about them at the time, but I read them again and again, and have studied them until I am enabled to go on my way rejoicing. I hope that I may yet grow in grace, and a knowledge of the truth as I grow older. . . . .

The Christian church claims that when one joins the church he is in the Kingdom of God, which I think is a very poor kingdom, when another church comes along and breaks it in pieces. If God's kingdom is no stronger than that, I desire no protection under it. But we read that the Kingdom of our Lord will be an everlasting kingdom, and one which cannot be destroyed; all the fiery darts of satan will have no effect on it; all he can do will avail nothing, for the Lord, the Anointed of the Most High, will be on the throne of his father David, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.

Yours, J. M. HARLOW.

SHARPSVILLE, Ind., July 19, 1875.

The following letter is received from one who is living where the "the sounding of the grinding has been low, and the grasshopper has been a burden" It speaks for itself. The last of the relief fund has been sent to her aid:

BRO. BARNELL:

I received the $10 you sent me in yours of May 17th, and am truly thankful to you for the same. I am truly thankful that there is a band of believers in the Lord Jesus who care one for another, and administer to the wants of the widow and the orphan. I am in a land of destitution, with four small children, and stand very much in need of help. If you can relieve my present wants it will be thankfully received. The grasshoppers left here some three weeks ago, after eating all the gardens, potatoes, corn, and, in short, everything that was growing they liked. So we must wait with patience till the earth brings forth her fruits. May God help us to earnestly contend for that faith which was once delivered to the saints. I often look forward to the time when the Deliverer shall come to redeem his people and change this vile body and fashion it like unto his own glorious body. I desire to be an heir and a possessor in that Kingdom which is to be established under the whole heavens, and which is to fill the whole earth. Then there will be no more begging of bread, but every one will sit under their own vine and fig tree, nothing to fear or molest; for earth will bring forth in her fullness, and will be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

Your sister in Christ,
T. A. LOVEWELL.

PLEASANTON, Kans., July 17, 1875.

Challenge.

We are requested by Brother Lyon to give place in THE RESTITUTION to the following:

MR. I. C. CURE:

Will you meet me in Swedesburg at some future time that we may fix upon, and in the spirit of Jesus discuss the following propositions?

I. Resolved, That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments teach a future gathering and conversion of Judah and Israel, or a portion of the literal or natural posterity of Abraham or Jacob, and their final settlement in Palestine.

II. Resolved, That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments teach that the promise made to Abraham, "In thy seed shall all the nations of the earth be blessed," has been fulfilled, or will be in this age or dispensation, before Jesus comes.

III. Resolved, That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments teach the resurrection to life of the entire race of the first Adam.

IV. Resolved, That the Scriptures of the Old and New Testaments teach that "Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among Israel," who was born of Mary, the wife of Joseph—died upon the cross—whom God raised from the dead, and made both Lord and Christ, existed as a distinct and conscious being with God, ages before his conception and birth, which occurred about 1875 years ago.

Book, chapter and verse shall be given by each disputant.

I will take the affirmative of the first, and the negative of the three last.

H. D. LYON.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.

All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King at its head, and immortal saints as joint-heirs with him, to the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel as preached, and intercedes as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential to final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the heading of any subscribed an article setting forth the views of the party offering same to be rejected. Free discussion of bible questions will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of withholding those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Creeds.

A creed is a brief summary of what we believe. Any system of principles is called a creed; as a political creed. A creed is either good or bad, as it is true or false. It is praiseworthy or blameworthy, according to the use that is made of it. It does not follow that because a false creed has worked evil, a true creed will do the same, or that we should have no creed, or that because many people have had a false religion, no one should have none, or, because many people have been called John, therefore all people who are called John are bad. We might as well oppose all religions as to oppose all creeds, for religion has been used as falsely as creeds. Even the word Christianity itself has been made to cover much evil. As well might we refuse to do anything, because some people have done wrong in trying to do something.

A creed is not certainly good or certainly bad. Every consideration that will show an erroneous creed to be bad, will also show a true creed to be good. That which renders a creed that is not true powerful for evil, will render a creed that is true powerful for good. Therefore there is no ground for the prejudice we have entertained against creeds.

It is not true that we have no creed. All religious people have a creed, either written or unwritten. The unwritten creed exists before the written can exist. What a man believes is just as really a creed before it is written as afterwards. It is equally as liable to perversion before it is written out as afterwards. The writing out a creed does not not change it. Its purpose remains the same still. Its influence over the man will be the same. There is no reason why a written statement should influence a man to do wrong more than an unwritten purpose. We could cite to examples of wrong under both forms of creed. There is no reason why a written creed should be more sectarian in its influence than an unwritten one. Under both forms of creed we have all seen the fruits of the purest sectarianism. The written form is no more opposed to investigation, or to progress, than the unwritten form. It is no more a yoke of bondage, or the cause of division, or a test of fellowship, or of Christian character, than is the unwritten creed. They are exactly alike. There is no difference. It takes the Scriptures as really for our only rule of faith and practice, as does an unwritten creed. The examples are abundant under both forms of creed for illustration. Even in our own body there are those who have not, apparently, got out of the ruts they used to travel to twenty years ago, and who have not been known to take one step of progress during that time. The same is true of some who have been under a written creed. These circumstances do not necessarily follow either form of creed, but they are incident to both, and of frequent occurrence. If, when men became corrupt who have a written creed, it is because they have a written creed, that when men become corrupt who have an unwritten creed, it is because they have an unwritten creed. Therefore both should be rejected, if either.

It is not a written creed that makes a division, but the corruption of the in the church. I refer you to the history of the church for proof. When any church or sect becomes sectarian, or opposed to investigation, or to progress, and who have only the form of godliness and not the power, and who cry peace when they are inactive, and sluggish and stagnant, what is the effect of preaching an active, progressive and efficient policy? It will divide, but why will it divide? Because the church is sectarian and anti-progressive. If the church was in an active, progressive state, there would be no division. Who is responsible for the division? The mother church. Christ came not to send peace on earth, but rather division. But what is this? Did not the angels sing at his birth, "peace on earth?" Yes. Why then this division? Because the people to whom he preached peace refused to follow the doctrines of peace, hence the division between those who follow the light and those who remain in darkness. It is in this way that division has been made in the church from that day to this, between the agitators and those who say, "let us have peace." It is not because men have got up written creeds that divisions have come in the church, but because the men of progress have been driven out of the church by its peaceful inactivity, and sectarianism, and written creeds are the result of such divisions.

So far as creeds have caused divisions, they have been unwritten creeds, which have afterwards been written out.

Written creeds are legitimate, and essential to the greatest efficiency of an organized body. This is the experience and testimony of all the organized bodies in the civilized world. It is always proper that the object for which a body is organized should be stated. This statement is its creed.

Our real faith, whether written or unwritten, is always our test of fellowship, and of Christian character. The statement often made that we do not make our faith a test of Christian fellowship is a mistake. We cannot help doing so, if we would. In all the respects I have named, there is no difference between a written and an unwritten creed.

But a written creed, a statement of our faith, is more efficient, because it is better understood. We can be united in the faith only as we understand it, and as we understand each other. In a well defined faith we can all agree, and it will tend to correct the faith of the church, and to secure unity of purpose in all the work of its members.

The above is respectfully submitted to the candid attention of the brotherhood. JOEL A. SIMONDS.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH.

Extracts from a Letter on Creeds.

Thinking the following admirable thoughts might be interesting and valuable at the present time, I have taken the trouble to copy them from the above book for the readers of THE RESTITUTION.

J. F. WILCOX.

"My aversion to human creeds as bonds of Christian union, as conditions of Christian fellowship, as means of fastening chains on men's minds, constantly gains strength. My first objection to them is that they separate us from Jesus Christ. To whom am I to go for my knowledge of the Christian religion but to the Great Teacher, to the Son of God, to Him in whom the fullness of the divinity dwelt? This is my great privilege as a Christian, that I may sit at the feet not of a human but divine Master; that I may repair to him in whom truth lived and spoke without a mixture of error; who was eminently the wisdom of God and the light of the world.

And shall man dare to interfere between me and my heavenly guide and Savior, and prescribe to me the articles of my Christian faith? What is the state of mind in which I shall best learn the truth? It is that in which I forsake all other teachers for Christ in which my mind is brought nearest to him: it is that in which I lay myself open most entirely to the impressions of his mind.

Let me go to Jesus with a human voice sounding in my ears, telling me what I must learn from the Great Teacher, and how can I listen to him in singleness of heart? All Protestant sects, indeed, tell the learner to listen to Jesus Christ, but most of them shout around him their own articles so vehemently and imperiously, that the voice of the Master is well nigh drowned. He is told to listen to Christ, but told that he will be damned if he receives any lessons but such as are taught in the creed. He is told that Christ's word is alone infallible, but that unless it is received as taught by infallible men, he will be excluded from the communion of Christians. This is what shocks me in the creed-maker. He interposes himself between me and my Savior. He dares not trust me alone with Jesus. He dares not leave me to the word of God. This I cannot endure. The nearest possible communication with the mind of Christ is my great privilege as a Christian. I must learn Christ's truth from Christ himself, as he speaks in the record of his life, and in the men whom he trained up and supernaturally prepared to be his witnesses to the world. On what ground, I ask, do creed-makers demand assent to their articles as conditions of church membership or salvation? What has conferred on them infallibility? Show me your proofs, I say to them, of Christ speaking in you. Work some miracle. Utter some prophecy. Show me something divine in you, which other men do not possess. Is it possible that you are unaided men like myself, leaving no more: not to interpret the New Testament than myself, and that you yet exalt your interpretations as infallible standards of truth and necessary conditions of salvation? Stand out of my path. I wish to go to the Master. Have you words of greater power than his? Can you speak to the human conscience or heart in a mightier voice than his? What is it which emboldens you to tell me what I must learn of Christ or be lost?

I cannot but look on human creeds with feelings approaching contempt. When I bring them into contrast with the New Testament, into what insignificance do they sink! What are they? Skeletons, freezing abstractions, metaphysical expressions of unintelligible dogmas; and there I am to regard as the expositions of the fresh, living, infinite truth which came from Jesus! I might with equal propriety be required to hear and receive the lispings of infancy as the expressions of wisdom.

Creeds are to the scriptures what rush lights are to the sun. The creed-maker dignifies Jesus in half a dozen lines, perhaps in metaphysical terms, and calls me to assent to this account of my Savior. I have less of Christ by this process than I should learn of the sun by being told that this glorious luminary is a circle about a foot in diameter.

There is but one way of knowing Christ. We must place ourselves near him, see him, hear him, follow him from his cross to the heavens, sympathize with him and obey him, and thus catch clear and bright glimpses of his divine glory.

Christian truth is infinite. Who can think of shutting it up in a few lines of an abstract creed? You might as well compress the boundless atmosphere, the fire, the all-pervading light, the free winds of the universe, into separate parcels, and weigh and label them, as break up Christianity into a few propositions.

Christianity is far more illimitable than the light or the winds. It is too mighty to be bound down by man's puny hands. It is a spirit rather than a rigid doctrine—the spirit of boundless love. The infinite cannot be defined and measured out like a human manufacture. It cannot be reduced to a system. It cannot be comprehended in a set of precise ideas. It is to be felt, rather than described. The spiritual impressions which a true Christian receives from the character and teachings of Christ, and in which the chief efficacy of the religion lies, can be poorly brought out in words. Words are but faint, rude hints of a Christian's mind. His thoughts and feelings overflow them. To those who feel as he does, he can make himself known; for such can understand the tones of the heart; but he can no more lay down his religion in a series of abstract propositions than he can make known in a few vague terms the expressive features and inmost soul of a much loved friend.

It has been the fault of all sects that they have been too anxious to define their religion. They have labored to circumscribe the infinite Christianity, as it exists in the mind of the true disciple, is not made up of fragments, of separate ideas which he can express in detached propositions. It is a vast and ever unfolding whole, pervaded by one spirit, each precept and doctrine deriving its vitality from its union with all. When I see this generous and heavenly doctrine compressed and cramped in human creeds, I feel as I should were I to see screws and chains applied to the countenance and limbs of a noble fellow creature, deforming and destroying one of the most beautiful works of God.

From the infinity of Christian truth of which I have spoken, it follows that our views of it must always be very imperfect, and ought to be continually enlarged. The wisest theologians are children who have caught but faint glimpses of the religion; who have taken but their first lessons; and whose business it is "to grow in the knowledge of Jesus Christ." Need I say how hostile to this growth is a fixed creed, beyond which we must never wander? Such a religion as Christ's demands the highest possible activity and freedom of the soul. Every new gleam of light should be welcomed with joy. Every hint should be followed out with eagerness. Every whisper of the divine voice in the soul should be heard. The love of Christian truth should be so intense as to make us willing to part with all other things for its comprehension, if it. Who does not see that human creeds, setting bounds to thought, and telling us where all inquiry must stop, tend to repress this holy zeal, to shut our eyes on new illumination, to hem us within the beaten paths of man's construction, to arrest that perpetual progress which is the life and glory of man.

It is another great objection to creeds that, wherever they acquire authority, they interfere with that simplicity and godly sincerity on which the efficacy of religious teaching very much depends. That a minister should speak with power, it is important that he should speak from his own soul, and not studiously conform himself to modes of speaking which others have adopted. It is important that he should give out the truth in the very form in which it presents itself to his mind, in the very words which offer themselves spontaneously as the clothing of his thoughts. To express our own minds frankly, directly, fearlessly, is the way to reach other minds. Now, it is the effect of creeds to check this free utterance of thought. The minister must seek words which will not clash with the consecrated articles of his church. If new ideas spring up in his mind not altogether consonant with what the creed-monger has established, he must cover them with misty language. If he happen to doubt the standard of his church, he must strain its phraseology, must force it beyond its obvious import, that he may give his assent to it without departing from the truth. All these processes must have a blighting effect on the mind and heart. They impair self-respect. They cloud the intellectual eye. They accustom men to tamper with truth. In proportion as a man dilutes his thought and suppresses his conviction, to save his orthodoxy from suspicion; in proportion as he borrows his words from others, instead of speaking in his own tongue; in proportion as he distorts language from the common use, that he may stand well with his own party; in that proportion he clouds and degrades his intellect, as well as undermines the manliness and integrity of his character.

How deeply do I contemplate the minister who, in the warmth and freshness of youth, is visited with glimpses of higher truth than is embodied in the creed, but who dares not be just to himself, and to make to echo what is not the simple, natural expression of his own mind! Better were it for us to beg our bread and clothe ourselves in rags, than to part with Christian simplicity and frankness. Better for a minister to preach in barns or the open air, where he may speak the truth from the fullness of his soul, than to lift up in cathedrals, amidst pomp and wealth, a voice which is not true to his inward thoughts.

If they who wear the chains of creeds once knew the happiness of breathing the air of freedom, and of moving with an unincumbered spirit, no wealth or power in the world's gift would bribe them to part with their spiritual liberty.

Another sad effect of creeds is that they favor unbelief. It is not the object of a creed to express the simple truths of our religion, though in these its efficiency chiefly lies, but to embody and decree those mysteries about which Christians have been contending. I use the word "mysteries," not in its Scriptural, but popular sense, as meaning doctrines which give a shock to the reason, and seem to contradict some acknowledged truth. Such mysteries are the staples of creeds. The celestial virtues of Christ's character, these are not inserted into articles of faith. On the contrary, doctrines which, from their darkness or unintelligibleness have provoked controversy, and which owe their importance very much to the circumstance of having been fought for or fought against for ages, these are thrown by the creed-makers into the foremost ranks of the religion, and made its especial representatives. Christianity as set forth creeds is a propounder of dark sayings, of riddles, or knotty propositions, of apparent contradictions. Who, on reading these standards, would catch a glimpse of the simple, pure, benevolent, practical character of Christianity? And what is the result? Christianity becoming identified by means of creeds, with so many dark doctrines, is looked on by many as a subject for theologians to quarrel about, but too thorny or perplexed for common minds, while it is spurned by many more as an insult to human reason, as a triumph of fanaticism over common-sense."

An Explanation.

It cannot be denied and is much to be deplored that we are sadly lacking in order as a people. I am satisfied too, that much of our labor is wasted and money squandered in consequence of this lack. Our societies seem to be too loosely united for concerted action, and no efficient financial scheme seems as yet to have been adopted. It is not easy to remedy the evils under which we labor, and I do not see as we are getting any nearer the solution of the difficulty, notwithstanding much thought and well-meant labor has been expended in that direction. I have always been an earnest advocate of church order and have wrought, perhaps not wisely, but according to the light I have to that end. I have done my best to bring the societies which are under my personal influence into Gospel order, and induce them to contribute systematically for the progress of the truth. Some are doing so with good results, others have refused absolutely to come into order, or submit to system or discipline of any kind, thinking their Christian liberty will thereby be curtailed, and are suffering the evil consequences of such a course. I had gone so far indeed as to develop a complete scheme for the organization of churches and their union into one compact body with a financial scheme having the tithing system as a basis. This was all carefully written out and all the details thoroughly studied, and finally submitted to some prominent brethren for their opinion. Others also have labored in the same direction and particularly the brethren in Michigan have done their utmost to bring about something of the kind, but all plans thus far have failed to satisfy any considerable portion of the body and all doubtless have been essentially defective in some important particular. The last effort in this direction in Michigan, was adopted at the late Conference, by reason of the ill-advised but well-meant endeavor of certain brethren to bring the body to the adoption of a creed as the basis of church order and concerted action if not of Christian fellowship.

In all my own efforts to accomplish or in any way aid to bring about a better state of things among us, I have recognized the fact that we are a free people, and the impossibility and undesirableness of inducing any considerable portion of the body to voluntarily return to the bondage of creed. There had been no especial occasion to bring out any marked avowal of sentiment on my part on this subject of creed, till the attempt referred to in Michigan. I there conscientiously opposed the attempt and did my part to defeat it. And, if I remember, I distinctly avowed my hostility to that feature alone of the scheme of organization. As to the financial part of the programme, I said then and repeat now, that any plan which meets the commendation of the body or any considerable portion of it will receive my hearty co-operation, and I will not oppose any attempt in that direction, but am willing to submit my own preferences to the maturer judgment of others, and will assist with my best powers in perfecting any scheme that proposes to end the chaos in which we now are. But any attempt to fasten the chains of creed on the church or any member of it, I then and now, and ever shall oppose. Having hitherto co-operated with prominent Michigan brethren to perfect and bring about the general adoption of a scheme of organization, it seems that my assistance was confidently counted on to carry forward the plan involving the adoption of a creed at the late Michigan Conference; and that notwithstanding my express declaration of that feature of the plan given in private correspondence on the subject. Very strangely my active opposition at that time was attributed to my having first chanced to fall into the company of others, as earnestly opposed to the idea as myself on my arrival in Meadon, and having been "captured" by them. It is true that we had conversation on the subject previous to any opportunity for action on my part, but subsequent to the virtual defeat of the plan the day previous; but it is not true that such conversation contributed to my action in the matter, as my private letters will testify long before the time of the Conference or any invitation to attend had been given to me.

I have stated that I was formerly in favor of adopting a system of tithing, and it is but just to say, that after submitting my draft of scheme involving that idea to the brethren aforesaid, and more mature thought in that direction, I have wholly abandoned it as inconsistent with the spirit of Christianity. And for the same reason am not in favor of enforcing on any man or society by law, or, what is the same, the will of the majority, any scheme by which he or they are compelled to contribute a per centage, large or small of their income. Christianity is a system of the largest liberty with all its corresponding responsibility. It is not a system of law, but of liberty. "Do as you choose and take the result," is its language. Give liberally and receive liberally, or give sparingly and receive sparingly, is its financial scheme. That this fundamental idea is capable of direction and regulation on some per-centage plan, I do not doubt; but would have it wholly voluntary on the part of every one. I have, therefore, never expressed nor do I now any opposition to any effort in that direction, but will heartily co-operate. I have thought that this explanation is due myself because some brethren seem to suppose that in consequence of my course in Michigan, that a sudden and radical change took place in my sentiments on the occasion referred to. One brother writes me, "your course this year gave your influence to the opposition, showing you this year to be pulling down what you were last year anxious to build up. We were very sorry for your change of sides."

I trust I shall now be fully understood by all who have any interest in the matter. I cannot see any occasion for feeling in this matter. I trust we are all equally concerned in the progress of the truth, and ought not to be so wedded to a plan of our own devising as to be unwilling to submit to the judgment or decision of others. Brethren let us co-operate earnestly and lovingly for our common faith, and rather encourage each other to do greater things on any plan or no plan at all, than to waste our energies and sour our minds by contending about the way in which it ought to be done. Order, unity of action, is desired, and even essential to the best results, but if we cannot all work on one plan let us waste no time, but all work earnestly and zealously for Christ. If we cannot agree as to the best way of rescuing the drowning man, let us have a care lest he perish while we are deliberating and contending.

Yours for the perishing,
J. F. WILCOX.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....August 4, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ We are to preach in Plymouth next Sunday, at the usual hours, morning and evening.

☞ Brother Stephenson writes us that he will attend the annual Conference at Hensselaer next week.

☞ Brother A. B. Magruder, of Baltimore, will please accept our thanks for copies of his tract, entitled: "Certain Christadelphian Doctrines compared with Scripture." The tract was published in England, and is a most satisfactory exposition of the subjects of which it treats.

☞ We have received the August number of the "Phrenological Journal." It is one of the most liberal and readable magazines in this country. We have been a reader of the "Journal" for many years, and always found many things of great interest in its pages. We most cheerfully commend it as a salutary magazine, and one that will tend to elevate and purify society.

☞ The recent storms have been most disastrous to the crops in many of the Western States. The rainfall has been heavier than for many years before. Railroad bridges have been washed away, whole fields of grain submerged in water, houses undermined, and much property destroyed. Everything in nature shows us that man has no abiding hope, only in the eternal promises of life through our blessed Lord.

☞ A good brother in Wisconsin, writes us that he will have to part company with the RESTITUTION, because it fights definite time. This brother became deluded with Thurman's notions on time, and forgot the words of his Lord: "Watch ye therefore, for ye know not when the time is." Had he stuck to his Bible he would not now claim that we are in the day of the Lord, and have been since Thurman's time run out in April last. All threats have a convenient way of explaining that their time was right, but they were mistaken as to the event. True candor would suggest an open confession of such wild speculations, and bring these erring mortals to realize that the Bible nowhere reveals time. But, it is hard to confess mistakes

Hold Your Tongue.

Men can guide ships, bridle horses, tame lions, run telegraph cables under the ocean, navigate the air, signal the storms and tunnel the mountains, but the tongue remains unconquered.

The tongue was made to speak words of hope, to sing anthems of praise, to console the broken-hearted, to encourage the doubting, and to proclaim the beauties and glories of an immortal world. Its words were to distill like the dew, and to be as sweet as honey, but how perverted. It is sharper than a sword, stings like the viper and wounds the hearts of men. Words of blasphemy, of distrust, of despair are uttered, when there should be only words of hope, of truth and of love, falling like the rain drops on the new mown grass.

It was the tongue of an eloquent Greek which calmed the stormy passions of the multitude. It was the tongue of an angel that proclaimed the tidings of love and hope to the fallen of earth. It was the tongue of our blessed Lord that pronounced the world's forgiveness in his name. And we behold cloven tongues of fire ready to proclaim the pentecostal gospel, when the tidings of life were to go forth to the nations. Unknown tongues were heard in the infant church, and uttered the wonderful words of the Father's love.

But there are times when the tongue should be silent. Men are to be judged by their words. When two men are in a quarrel, hold your tongue; when you have nothing good to say of others, hold your tongue; when your words are to be carried by feet that are swift in running to mischief, hold your tongue.

Remember that the seven sins of the body include the sinful tongue. Says Solomon: "These six things doth the Lord hate; yea, seven are an abomination unto him: A proud look, a lying tongue, and hands that have shed innocent blood, a heart that deviseth wicked imaginations, feet that be swift in running to mischief, a false witness, and he that soweth discord among brethren." Prov. vi. 16-19. He who would see long days, enjoy the comforts of truth, be ready for angel-greetings, must refrain his tongue from evil, and his lips, that they speak no guile.

The tongue is indeed a little member, but it boasteth great things. Let the heart be imbued with love and purity, then from its abundance of goodness the tongue will utter words of hope for the fallen, and messages of peace to those who sit in the valley of death.

De-cription of the Savior.

It is a remarkable fact that the four Evangelists give no account of Christ's personal appearance. Indeed, nothing is said about his personal appearance in any of the Epistles. There are some traditional accounts which seem to be very ancient. The following, from "Foster's Encyclopedia of Illustrations," we do not remember to have before seen in print:

The following is a correct translation of an epistle sent by Publius Lentulus to the Roman senate: There appeared in these days a man of great virtue named Jesus Christ, who is yet among us; of the Gentiles accepted for a prophet of truth; but his disciples call him the Son of God. He raiseth the dead, and cureth all manner of disease. A man of stature somewhat tall and comely, with a very reverend countenance, such as the beholder must both love and fear. His hair the color of a chestnut full ripe, plain to the ears, whence, downward it is more orient, curling and waving about his shoulders. In the midst of his forehead is a stream or partition of his hair, after the manner of the Nazarites; forehead plain and very delicate; his face without spot or wrinkle, beautiful, with a lovely red; his nose and mouth so forked as nothing can be reprehended; his beard thick, in color like his hair, not over long; his look innocent and mature: his eyes gray, quick, and clear. In reproving, he is terrible; in admonishing, courteous and fair spoken; pleasant in conversation, mixed with gravity. It cannot be remembered that any have seen him laugh, but many have seen him weep; in proportion of body most excellent; his hands and arms delectable to behold; in speaking, very temperate, modest and wise; a man of singular beauty, surpassing the children of men.

An Infidel Objection Answered.

"If there is a God, why does he not interfere in behalf of right?"

This has been the battle cry of atheism—over and over again the old taunt has been hurled in the face of Christianity. If there is a God of purity, why does he permit a carnival of crime? If there is a God of justice why does he suffer tyranny to exist? If there is a God of might, why does he allow his name blasphemed, his word sneered at, and his promises ridiculed? If there is a God of mercy and truth, why does he allow the innocent to be injured, and his own children persecuted?

The pages of earth are stained with blood, and the very laurels of her chieftains have taken root among the bones of dead men. Sin walks the earth in gold and purple while virtue often hath not where to lay her head. The creeds of men are powerless to stay the hand of crime. Professed Christians wear the robes of formality and self-righteousness. And the sceptic stands amidst this moral chaos and asks, "If there is a God in heaven, why does he permit such things to be?" We answer, because the time has not yet come when He shall vindicate His power in the earth.

As we look upon the half finished plan, only one page of God's universe is visible to our eyes. We stand like little children in an unfinished building and wonder at the confusion around us, many of us only half believing that the Great Architect can bring order out of chaos and beauty out of deformity.

The earth herself was born amidst air and water. There was the sweeping of tides and currents—the smoke and steam of submerged volcanoes—the warm ground of seething continents—the heat of subterranean fires and the darkening clouds of vapors. If the sceptic could have stood among the desert places and watery wastes of chaos—if he could have listened there to a beautiful prophecy, of sun-lit vales and snow-crowned mountains—of crystal lakes and rolling streams—if he could have heard of the fragrance of flowers and the songs of birds, how like a fairy tale it would have sounded in his ears. How he would have taunted us with the chaos and the darkness—he would have told us that the rumbling earthquake and throbbing mountain were poor evidence of sun-lit landscapes and peaceful seas—he would have said, "If God can create a finished earth whose vales shall be flooded with beauty, and mountains crowned with sublimity, why don't he quiet these restless surges, and bring the helpless land out of their grasp?"

But in his own good time, he wrought out the problem of creation—the waters fled away from his presence, giving up earth's hills and valleys, where trees and flowers sprang to life, and at last the beautiful prophecy was fulfilled.

In like manner he shall yet work out the great moral problem of humanity. Earth is apparently lost in the wild ocean of crime and misrule, but a strong hand is at the helm, and as who shaped her mountains and hollowed her seas—who melted her ores in his furnace and her metals in his crucible, shall yet lead her into the glorious light of Eden restored.

This is the age of discipline and the age of suffering—the age in which men are developing characters for eternity. But we are not left alone in the struggle and the warfare. Every cry of humanity reaches God's ear—every pain of his children is felt in his heart, and every act of injustice is written in the book of his remembrance. As the spirit of God "moved upon the waters" of the chaotic earth, so in his own good time a new power shall be introduced amid the restless waves of humanity.

He who said "Let there be light" shall send into the moral darkness of the present age, the "Light of life" and he shall divide the light from the darkness and bring out the truth and purity that have dwelt in the wildness of sin.

Then shall the wrongs of innocence be avenged and the tyrants of earth be crushed by Infinite power. The seething volcanoes of moral corruption and political strife shall fade before his eye. The dross of hypocrisy and self righteousness shall be melted in his furnace and the pure gold of loyalty to God shall gleam with seven fold brightness. Looking upon earth's sin and sorrow—looking at the helpless throes and weary brow, we see only one fragment of the grand eternal whole. But when the vast design is finished—when the grand scheme is completed, and earth herself is flooded with glory, we shall see with undimmed eyes the wisdom and justice, the power and love of the Infinite Father.

MRS. H. W. REED.

Pretended Physiological and other Objections to a Resurrection Considered.

Pretended physiologists affirm that there can be no such thing as a resurrection of the body, the identical man who lived and died, because that body changes, loses entire new bodily every seven years, at least.

Physiology teaches no such absurdity, no such untruth, because physiology is nature and allied to nature's God, as well as to the God of revelation. For the same Being who is the God of nature, is also the God of revelation. Physiology teaches no more than this: From birth to death there is a continual throwing off of effete, worn out matter and a re-supplying of new material to be appropriated by chemico-vitality to the re-building of worn out tissue. From birth to manhood, not only a re-supplying, but a continual growth, and from manhood to death, no growth but a decadence.

But a living organized being is the same at birth, during life, and at death. Living organized material is always the same. Bulk and weight, large or small, does not destroy identity. Configuration, size and texture of the brain, nervous and other tissues, make all the difference we see in men and women, give them their identity all through life. That this is true, we demonstrate from the following facts:

1. The infant, after configuration, features, color, etc., are fixed, it matters not how young, if thoroughly daguerreotyped upon the mind, may be certainly recognized at any time in after life, especially if seen frequently during growth. Now, if it changed every seventh year, this could not be the case; for it would not be the same infant, the same man. A universal fact, then, gives the lie to this pretended physiological theory.

2. Facts and circumstances presented to the very young, making their impress upon the sensorium, are as vivid after the lapse of half a century, as if presented yesterday. Indeed much more vivid. I am past fifty-six years old, and I can remember more distinctly things that transpired fifty years ago, than those that happened but yesterday. This is the general experience of the aged. Now, if I were not essentially the same being, if I had not the same cerebro-configuration and texture, this would be an utter impossibility; for these facts and occurrences would not have been presented to myself, but to some other being, and therefore utterly unknown to myself. According to this false physiological theory, I have changed, utterly changed, more than six times.

But the same chemico-vitality which had then arranged my configuration, texture and identity, differing from all others, and so like, have continued that identity. All these have grown, but identity still continues, and will continue until death, and after the resurrection, if a child of God, will continue forever and ever.

3. If this were not so in all cases, then at the end of every seventh year, identity being lost, perception, memory, reason, etc., would be lost. All that were learned during the seven years, would have to be re-learned or forever unknown.

4. False physiology, as well as bald-headed infidelity, not only strikes a death-blow to revealed religion, but if acted upon and carried out in society, would abolish kindred, blood, and ties, families, the marriage relation, and make it impossible to punish for crime or reward for virtue, either in this life or in that to come. Because,

1. At the end of every seventh year, A and B being brother and sister, losing their identity, would be so no longer.

2. C and D being husband and wife, losing their identity, would be so no longer. And living together in that relation, unless married, would be living in adultery. Our society and laws are better than this perverted physiology.

3. All relation between husband and wife, parents and children, would be abrogated, and children would be unprotected, uneducated, unprovided for, and cursed upon society as ignorant waifs.

4. Debts contracted would be unpaid, and the debtor would come into court and dare the collection of the debt. He would plead that he did not contract the debt; that it was done some seven years before, and when he was not in existence! What a plea! And just such a foolish one is the false physiological one against the resurrection of the dead!

5. The husband and wife tiring of their conjugal ties would separate and form new affinities, render their children illegitimate, give them no protection, education or property, and leave them to lawlessness, crime and degradation.

6. Crime, murder for instance, would go unpunished; for the murderer evading the law and punishment for seven years, would step into court and dare the law, judge and jury to condemn him. He would plead that he did not commit the crime, could not have committed it, for he was not in existence when the crime was committed.

Would courts listen to such pleas? Are these false physiologists, these pleaders for the loss of identity every seven years any better? Arguments and facts of this nature might be lengthened out almost ad infinitum, but these are enough to show that this science falsely and wickedly so-called, would overturn the whole structure of society, and make our world the theater of confusion, crime and deep degradation.

2. But infidel physiologists when overthrown upon this point, assert that a resurrection is impossible; for bodies remanded to the earth for thousands of years, or drowned, or burned, or destroyed by wild beasts for thousands of years, cannot be raised from the dead.

All this is utter ignorance, false assertion, and made by the unenlightened, unsanctified heart. Scientists admit there can be no such thing as annihilation of matter. It may be changed, but not annihilated. Death does not annihilate men as matter, but changes, destroys as man. But, if a Christian at death, his life is hid with Christ in God, and when Christ who is his life appears, then will these disorganized materials be gathered up, re-arranged, and identity and life be restored. The scriptures abundantly teach this. So, too, do they teach, that the wicked shall be raised, judged, and forever destroyed.

This doctrine is not at all unreasonable. Chemists can destroy and re-create. Weak, fallible man, understanding the laws and science of chemistry, can disorganize and reorganize. Now, cannot God, the great Chemist, he that made the universe, and who knows and understands all its materials who, in the first place formed, fashioned, arranged and made man, and who disarranges organization in death, re-arrange, re-organize and give life again to the same materials, the same identity? He who would negative this not only shows his own ignorance, but is an atheist of the deepest dye—denies to the Omnipotent Jehovah, the great Creator, the mighty Chemist, that he awards to fallible man! The certainty of the resurrection of the dead and their identity resolves itself into these questions:

1. Has God the wisdom to bring about the means for their resurrection?

2. Has he the power to put into effect these means?

3. Has he promised their resurrection?

4. Has he the will, the disposition to do it?

Upon these questions, I need not now stop to argue. I have not now the time, nor disposition. Nor is it necessary. Upon the first question this must now suffice: He who had the wisdom to arrange in his own mind all the unnumbered worlds that roll in universal space, and before they were made, surely has wisdom to keep in memory all the materials of the dead, and, in that memory, before the event transpires, to re-create and give them eternal life.

He who had power to create a universe, to create man, surely has the power to re-fashion, re-create from the materials of the dead immortal man and give him identity, so that he may know he is the same man, who in yonder age, believed and obeyed the gospel. Also to raise from the dead the wicked, giving them identity, so that they may know that they are the same, who in yonder age refused obedience to the gospel, and to punish them with "an everlasting destruction" for that disobedience.

I need not stop to argue his promises; for the Bible is full of them. The resurrection is the great central, pivotal point of religion, and without it there is no hope, no eternal life, no God, and no truth in the universe!

And need I stop to argue about his willingness? He who gave his only begotten son to die the death of the cross, who pauperized heaven to obtain a sacrifice worthy to redeem and save fallen man, who, for nearly six thousand years, has been drawing upon heaven's love, wealth, and power, in order to purify the heart, to prepare man for the paradise of God, will most undoubtedly glorify his own name in the culminating piece of man's redemption—the resurrection of his dead saints and their glorification.

ALFRED MALONE, M. D.

Year-Day Theory.

The question was raised long since as to the use of a day for a year in prophecy. I replied, and as some are still enquiring, I forward my reply to meet such enquiry, as far as it may.

J. B. COOK.

In reply much might be said; but the sum of the proof may be briefly stated. The manner and measure of Revelation, on all points, may admit of doubt! Nay, it is all doubtful and doubted by all doubters! "When the Son of man cometh shall he find faith on earth?" This implies but very little faith, in contrast with a world full of doubt—"as it was in the days of Noah." Of course we need not expect to be overwhelmed by evidence on such a point of Scripture truth. The salient points alone are noted now.

1. Writers against "the year-day theory"—against taking 2300, 1260, and 1335 days, to represent so many years—move one side of, and away from, the facts in the case. They dwell on the doubtful aspects of it, and insist on instances where day is only "a day," and year is also a full year; which is all easily said, without reaching the merits of the question.

2. The designation of time by hour, day, and year, are not only always given with precise limitation. John v. 25-28; Gen. ii. 4; Luke iv. 10. "This hour" is the whole range of the hearing of the voice of the Son of Man. "The day," the entire creation period, and "the year" is all of "the acceptable years of the Lord," &c.

3. We are then obliged to accept God's use of terms, so far as we believe his Word, at all. Hence we ask, Does God give us examples of his use of days so as to tally with year? And does he fulfill his word by so many years, where "day" is the term used to express the time in prophecy?

4. "The DAYS of Adam were 930 years." Gen. v. 5. Thus days tally with years, TEN times over in this one context. (See whole chapter.)

Laban said to Jacob, "Fulfill her week—serve with me seven other years!" Gen. xxix. 27-30. Here in a historical text, a "week is answered by seven years."

"The space (days) of the seven Sabbaths of years shall be forty-nine years!" Lev. xxv. 8. The seven times seven "days" tally with the forty-nine full "years." See Ezek. iv. 4-8. "I have appointed unto thee each day for a year." Thus from the first man, Adam, to the time of Daniel the Prophet, we have days and years used as tag and tally! Nay, we have the duration of the "2300, 1260, and 1335 days" extending through as many "years," in the fulfillment of prophecy!! Without the least special pleading, I note the undoubted fact that "the time for the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow," (1 Peter i. 10, 11,) seem to embrace "the seventy weeks," and the 2300 days of Dan. viii. and ix. The subject of the prophecy, the revealing angel and the range taken in its accomplishment, make it unmistakably true, that the apostle refers to Daniel. Then the first period did embrace the first advent of Messiah; and Dan. viii. 14, reaches to "the end—the time appointed." Dan. viii. 17-19; Acts xvii. 31.

As certainly as "the time was fulfilled" for Christ to commence his ministry, (Mar. i. xv; Dan. ix. 25,) so faith affirms "the end of the times of the Gentiles," when "the time appointed—the 2300 days" expire and "the glory" becomes due.

True, I cannot explain every lota, as I can measure so many feet, or weigh so many pounds; but I do see and say, "with all boldness," that the grand outline of prophecy is as unmistakable as the cardinal points of the compass.

But if any insist on my making the matter plainer still, I refer them to the prophecy accomplished—in detail—down to "the time of the end." Dan. vii.

This is the truth, as a whole, or we are compelled to abandon faith in God's Word! It is this, in its sum, or we have nothing left on which faith can rest! For Rome did rule the world at the first advent, and thence on till now, when it is declining to its foretold doom." Rev. xvii. to xix.

But allow that Rome is "the fourth kingdom," as it is the last in every symbol-series; then the truth that "the days" do represent so many "years" is inscribed by the finger of God's Providence on the face of creation. Then also "the fourth" symbol, (Dan. vii; Zech. i. 18-22,) cannot be construed literally of some future "oppressor," but by assuming that God will empower one more infuriated—by some thousand fold—than all the Roman Neros, of which the Word of God says nothing! Rome is the fourth and last. This the world has had. Now its doom impends. Amen.

How It Works.

We have lived in the city of Grand Rapids four years; we have held meetings in the old way about one and one half years, every Sunday. We made no progress. We did not become any more efficient. Things were so discouraging that we gave it up. What we did was done by guessing, and but little at that. We were no more a compact, working body at the close of our meetings than at the beginning. We could not tell what the matter was. We had good preaching. There was no division among us; but we worked without system, without order, without any particular manner of obligation to the body, in fact there was no body. We were afraid of the means necessary to come into a compact, united and well organized body. We worked—worked hard—but without any marked good results. Our efforts did not seem to tell on the cause, for good. We gave it up as a hopeless case, waiting for something to turn up. Last winter we made an individual effort to get Brother Wilcox here to hold a series of meetings, hoping to get started in some such way, but we did not succeed. We felt isolated and alone, as if there was no nucleus to gather around. We did not know what to do. We did not know how to go to work. We were like parties who would like to make a bargain, they talk on the matter frequently, and are agreed on both sides that they want to make a bargain. They do everything that is necessary to make a bargain, only they are afraid to say to each other, we will do it. They failed to say we will agree to the proposition. Thus we worked month after month, without making the bargain. But after a good deal of study, and deliberation, and excitement, and opposition and scars. We whose names are now attached to our organization, made a careful statement of what we wanted to do, and were very particular to have it just exactly what God has proposed to do, and we made another statement as to how we would strive together to do it. In this statement we were very careful to have it according to the general principles laid down in the New Testament, and when we had fully made up our minds what we wanted to do, and how we wanted to do it, we agreed to do it. We pledged ourselves to each other that we would work together upon the plan agreed upon. This was all done in writing. We are all under the most solemn bonds to do this, but we like to do it, so that we do not feel the chains that bind us together. The result is, we begin to love each other, we begin to sympathize with all the members of the body, we all begin to realize that we belong to the body, we begin to share its responsibilities, and we begin to recognize our obligations. We all attend every meeting of the churches, and pay into its treasury the first of every month according to our articles of agreement. Out of our first contribution, we sent $6.50 to the grasshopper sufferers; out of the second we sent $6.00 for the same object; out of the third we sent $5.00 to the conference; out of the fourth we furnished every family in the church with the RESTITUTION who were not taking it, and we have still money in the treasury, and it is increasing. The leading brethren in Jamestown have adopted our plan of finance. They pay one per cent. on living expense monthly, and the net income beyond this, five per cent. at the end of the year.

The Home of the Blessed.

Altered from "Home of the Soul;" words and music will be found in "Gospel Songs," by P. P. Bliss. For sale at the Office of the RESTITUTION.

I will sing you a song of that beautiful land,
The glorious home of the blessed,
Where the storms never beat on that glittering strand,
While the weary ones ever shall rest.

Oh! that home of the blessed in my visions and dreams
Its bright jasper walls I do see,
Till I fancy but dimly the vail intervenes
Between that fair city and me.

There the great tree of life in its beauty will grow,
And the river of Life flloweth by;
For no death ever enters that city you know,
Nor nothing that maketh a lie.

That unchangeable home is for you and for me
Where Jesus of Nazareth stands,
The King of all kingdoms forever is he,
And he holdeth our crowns in his hands.

Oh! how sweet it will be in that beautiful land,
So free from all sorrow and pain,
With songs on our lips and with harps in our hands,
To meet one another again.

J. F. WILCOX.

Worthy of Death.

Whatever may be said of death as a natural necessity—the debt of nature—we believe our Maker had a motive and a just object in consigning all men to death; in short, no man dies improperly or without a cause, which makes him worthy of death. But for an equally just cause some are worthy of redemption, after being holden in death and its corruption in the grave for a set time. "For the wages of sin is death; but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord." All receive the wages, but after a time the gift is substituted, and the death is abolished for those worthy of the gift.

"What fruit had ye in those things whereof ye are now ashamed? for the end of those things is death." Service to sin and the iniquity of uncleanness, at the termination of life ends in death. The service of God also at life's termination ends in death; and so far both end in the same manner and the same condition. But while at the end of their mortal life, death begins and becomes the end of the ungodly, there is another end to the servants of holiness. They die and go to corruption like the others, but this is not their end; but their death ends at last in life.

Can this difference be destroyed, so that the end of the ungodly, which is death, shall have another end, which is life? If so, the end of those things of which the Roman Christians had become ashamed, is not death. And if the end of the practices of iniquity is to have another end, what is the propriety of a boast of the gift of life as the fruit and end of holiness to the followers of holiness? "For he that soweth to his flesh shall of the flesh reap corruption; but he that soweth to the spirit shall of the spirit reap life everlasting." Is there any harvest or reaping but corruption for the sowers to the flesh? Is there some things—some sort of life—awaiting the reapers of corruption? The corruption sown to the spirit: but it is sown in corruption, to be raised in glory, or life everlasting. Shall the reaping of the sower to his flesh ever be changed by any possibility to a reaping of life everlasting? No! comes the answer; the end of these things is death. And if that be the end, there is no other end; it is not possible to make or substitute another end.

All these statements and many more, have a significant force for the hopelessness of any sort of reaping—any other end—any other fixedness than death, in the intensity of its duration, for the ungodly; which is equalled only by the expressive word, perished.

"For I am not ashamed of the Gospel of Christ; for it is the power of God unto salvation to every one that believeth."

Salvation is by the power of God, and the Gospel is the exposition or statement of that power in the resurrection. And so also, "The preaching of the cross is to them that perish, foolishness; but unto us which are saved it is the power of God." "He was crucified in weakness, but he liveth by the power of God. For we also are weak in (with) him, but we shall live by the power of God toward you." That is to say, we are weak in mortality as he was, but we shall live by the power of God, when it is exerted to raise you out of your graves to salvation. So the preaching of the cross or crucifixion is the statement of the death and the life by the power of God, and the life also unto salvation of every one that believeth, or, as stated in another place—"And what is the exceeding greatness of his power to us-ward who believe according to the working of his mighty power, which he wrought in Christ when he raised him from the dead, and set him at his own right hand." Eph. i. 19-20. We can, with these explanations, understand Paul's meaning of the Gospel and the cross being in their main topic the assertion of the power of God, in restoring life to the dead, unto salvation.

Now, a question presents itself. Will the power of God which he wrought in Christ, and which also is to be wrought unto salvation to every one that believeth, ever operate unto salvation to them that have perished, or to them whose end is death—whose only reaping is corruption—or to any who believe not, of any sort?

The thing is so incongruous—that in addition to every one that believeth, shall be added millions, every one of whom never believed—who shall likewise be the subject of the power of God unto salvation,—that the answer comes in the strong accents of negation, from the lips of him who made the declaration of the strait gate, and the few there be that find it, when asked,—"Lord, are there few that be saved?" And of the broad way and the wide gate that leadeth to destruction at which the many go in.

That "God is love," does not afford an affirmative answer to the question, for an authority equally high has said, "Our God is a consuming fire." God is not, then, all love, in all cases. But he "so loved the world that he gave his only begotten son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish but have eternal life. God sent not his Son to condemn the world " " he that believeth not is condemned already." "He that believeth not the Son shall not see life; but the wrath of God abideth on him," If the wrath of God abideth on unbelievers, will they not abide in death? Will they ever come to life? Not according to the statement of the love of God, in the third chapter of John.

It need not be alleged here that all who are in the grave shall come forth. That all is so restricted and limited that it need not and should not be misunderstood. Christ was speaking of giving life and executing judgment also, because he is the Son of Man, as is seen in the two verses preceding. And they all, who are in the graves, having done good unto the resurrection of life; and they that have done evil unto the resurrection of damnation, shall hear his voice and come forth. This is the whole extent of the resurrection taught here, and the "all" are only such as are to receive life from the giver, who has life in himself, and those who are to receive condemnation or damnation from him then authorized to execute the judgment. These "all" of the latter description do not arise for "a fair chance," or a better chance, but for a deeper woe than the great and massive majority of men whose undisturbed end is death. Nor is the power of God exerted for the resurrection of one of them unto salvation. Some, at least, of the time that Christ taught in Judea, must weep and gnash their teeth, when they see Abraham and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, and themselves thrust out. And in order that this may be, they must all of this sort arise to that damnation at least.

Let us repeat the question: Will the power of God so exerted for the resurrection unto salvation of one—yes, even one—that has not believed? Patience, brethren. Some of you have tried to prove the affirmative by loosely quoting a number of passages of apostolic words, such as the following: "Who will have all men to be saved and to come unto the knowledge of the truth." Now, if the Universalist's sense of this passage is true, the passages that speak of death as the end—of going to destruction—of reaping corruption—and of perishing—admit of no explanation, and they cannot be true. They cannot be made to harmonize with that sense of the passage. If it means a willingness, then it will agree with the scriptures generally, and in particular with God's declaration, "For I have no pleasure in the death of him that dieth, saith the Lord God; wherefore turn yourselves and live." It agrees with his sending his Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish. But those (whosoever), are all whom he will really save. People say that God is able to have his will done. The point is not his ability. But we know he does not have his will done; that his will is of such a nature that he can dispense with it in many cases, as—"Not every one that saith unto me, Lord, Lord, shall enter the kingdom of heaven; but he that doeth the will of my father, which is in heaven." If it is his will that all men should be saved and come to the knowledge of the truth, the great majority do not do his will, and therefore cannot be saved. Matt. vii. 21. And—"For therefore we both labor and suffer reproach, because we trust in the living God, who is the Savior of all men, especially of those that believe." Christianity is for all men, as Christ is the ransom for all men. But millions have been pagans, as Chinese, Brahmins and Mohammedans. The ransom for all can go no further than the Christianity, which is equally for all. And the two were offered to all when apostles preached the Gospel to every creature throughout the world. This is all. The ransom and the Gospel go together, and stop together.

The apostles suffered reproach from the Jews for preaching that Jews must embrace Christ, and for preaching to Gentile nations that Gentiles might be saved. And as the Gospel and Christianity are for all men, but specially, only for those that embrace both; so the Savior of all men is only really the Savior of those who believe the Gospel and become Christians.

"And he is the propitiation for our sins: and not for our sins only, but also for the sins of the whole world." This, as also the passages above, were written by Jewish apostles, who had awakened to the great truth that Christ was not merely the Savior in Judea, the propitiation for one of the Jewish nation's sins—but also equally available for Gentiles throughout the whole world. But to the Jewish people who refused to receive the propitiation, he who was the propitiation said: "If ye believe not that I am he, ye shall die in your sins." Therefore thousands of the Jews died in their sins, for refusing to believe that he was the Messiah propitiation. And Gentiles also throughout the whole world have died in their sins, notwithstanding the general expiation, which is "Even the righteousness of God, which is by faith of Jesus Christ unto all and upon all them that believe; for there is no difference;" that is, between Jews and Gentiles.

In like manner, "He tasted death for every man," though it is quite apparent that the expression, "every man," relates entirely to the many sons to whom he is the Captain of salvation, and who are following him to glory, as in the next verse taught. And though many, are few compared with all men.

Another insisted on is this: "Because that if one died for all, then were all dead." Our judgment is the same as the apostle's. But did he judge that all would live, because one died for all? His words about this are: "And that he died for all, that they which live should not henceforth live unto themselves, but unto him that died for them and rose again." Not by any construction does he say that all are going to live, but only they that live to him in the present life.

Gleanings.

Bro. R. F. Peake, of Marmidon, Kansas, seven miles south-west of Ft. Scott, on the M. K. & T. R. R. writes that he is desirous of a meeting, and that there are several other members in that vicinity.

Also a letter from Edwin Roll, of Hyattsville, the next station south-west on the same road, states that a meeting is desired in their neighborhood, and that there are several interested in the truth.

Will bro. Jno. Foore, on his visits to or from Ft. Scott, attend to these calls?

Bro. Amos Sanford, like the faithful soldier, ever true to his country, is still active and in the field, as the following letter, of the 24th ult., will show:

From July 12th to 18th I gave nine lectures near Sulphur Springs, Williamson county, Illinois, with good results. Bro. Henry M. Cooke has lived here for seven years, without the privilege of meeting with any of the "One Faith" proclaimers. He did what he could for the truth, but for some time past has been too feeble to read and expound the Scriptures to his neighbors. He came here from Mississippi, where he he heard Dr. Thomas preach the first principles of the Gospel of Christ, in which he is well instructed, and his amiable, intelligent family show forth the fruit of his labors for the truth. On Sunday, at his house, an Ecclesia of 12 gathered around the table and commemorated the crucifixion of Jesus. Precious season. "Praise the Lord."

AMOS SANFORD.

Again we learn by a letter of the 20th ult. that in response to Bro. B. M. Adams' Macedonian cry for help, Bro. Amos Sanford will visit Moberly, Randolph county, Missouri, and commence a series of Bible meetings on Thursday, Aug. 12, 1875, as Bro. Adams may arrange. And from there he will be ready to visit any accessible points where his labors may be desired.

We say let the brethren in Northern Missouri keep Brother Sanford busy; and forget not the one thing needful to the preacher. Bro. S. speaking of late trials of others as well as those experienced by himself, says: "It seems to be the fate of all those who come into the "One Faith" to soon know what it is to pray, 'Give us this day our daily bread.'"

Bro. J. C. Kimsey, of Prescott, Kansas, under date of the 24th ult., writes that Bro. Z. Gower, so long known, tried and loved by the brethren in that locality, sold out and moved to Texas. And also that since Hicklin, Sanford, Myers and Gower have left the state, he feels quite lonely, but will contend earnestly and as strongly as he can for the faith once delivered to the saints.

We had a letter recently from Bro. S. S. Hayden, of Nevada, Vernon Co., Mo. Bro. Hayden is an efficient laborer, and knows how to divide the word of truth; and is ready to do service within reach. Let the brethren of Western Missouri and Eastern Kansas avail themselves of his labors. He is a laborer that is worthy of his hire.

A letter recently received from young Bro. Ayler, Taylor Co., Iowa, speaks of the abundant crop of grain growing there this season; but tells of the destitution of the country religiously. No one to sow the pure and unadulterated seed of the kingdom, from which a crop might grow.

We will say to this young brother, as he is only twenty years of age, to read study the word, and preach by example, and from house to house by word, and when opportunity offers, sow the seed broadcast.

A letter from Bro. John Hull, Mt. View, Benton Co., Mo., gives intelligence of a few of the faithful ones at that place for whom he is preaching, and who have embraced the truth under his labors. We judge from his letter that he is a faithful worker, contending for the truth against all opposition, Spiritualism included.

The following is a letter from Bro. Coddington which speaks for itself; after writing for tracts and books, he says:

I cannot close without adding a word of encouragement to you and the true and faithful brethren of your place. The blessed Lord selected me out of a small M. E. Church of this city a year past by that word of life, and the Lord has wrought a wonderful work since by calling out from the Baptist, Methodist and other Spiritual classes some seventeen souls, and such, I trust, as shall finally be saved.

We are now in quite good working order, and are located at 807 Fulton Ave., Downing Hall.

Please inform all those who wish to communicate with us to address all communications to J. Coddington, Sec., 718 Gates Ave., Brooklyn, N. Y.

Called in Question.

Twenty-one years ago last February an aunt of mine came to visit her sister, (another aunt of mine), with whom I was boarding, and reported that two men had been preaching very strange doctrines in her neighborhood, calling in question the dogma that the soul of man is immortal, and asking in confident terms for the text of Scripture affirming the doctrine so commonly believed.

"The soul not immortal! That is strange!" I said. I made an effort to call to mind a passage, yes, one, that positively and explicitly stated the doctrine. Not one of this class of texts could I call up. I wanted the Scripture that said the soul is immortal, deathless, or undying, for that would settle the question. I felt strange enough, confronting for the first time in my life the tremendous thought shaped in point-blank denial of a long-cherished view.

The soul not immortal! True, I did not embrace the negative then and there, but the charm of my old faith was gone, and my dream was broken by a clap of thunder. I had just passed my minority. I had been reading papers and books eleven years, and a part of this time hearing preaching, yet not once had I read or heard of men doubting or denying the popular view on this point. My faith or credulity had flowed on without a counter current. When my position was questioned I felt it my duty to examine the ground of my old belief, and the new. Result —"life only in Christ, my well-grounded hope."

Holder of the popular doctrine, please examine the reasons of your hope. It may lack Scripture proof.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND M. V. REED

"There remaineth therefore a rest to the people of God. . . . Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible the things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The subject in greater detail may be stated as follows:

1. To restore to Bible testimony as to the future location and mission of the Kingdom of God.

2. To show the ultimate completion of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible is making concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man and his entire dependence upon Christ for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as it is and is to be past, and as it is now being studied before and as preparatory to the return of Jesus to establish his Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "Our Rest." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently sustain its circulation. If he desires the Instructions we shall give, or if he would contrast it to others, we shall gladly enter his name upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

Dead.

Dead! That is the word
That rings through my brain till it crazes!
Dead, while the May-flowers bud and blow,
While the grass creeps over the white of the snow,
While the wild-woods ring with the song of the birds,
And the fields are abloom with daisies.

See! Even the clod
Thrills, with life's glad passion shaken:
The vagabond weeds, with their vagrant train,
Laugh in the sun and weep in the rain.
The blue sky smiles like the eye of God—
Only my dead do not waken.

Dead! There is the word
That I sit in the darkness and ponder!
Why should the river, the sky, and the sea
Babble of summer and joy to me,
While a strong, true heart, with its pulse unstirred,
Lies hushed in the silence yonder?

Lord! Lord! how long
Ere we rise to thy lights supernal?
Eia the soul may read what the Spirit said:
"Life that must fade is not life, but death,
Lift up thine eyes, O soul! be strong;
After death comes life eternal!"

Objections Answered.

RELATIVE TO THE RETURN OF ISRAEL.

The Word of the Lord touching Ismel's return, lies largely imbedded in both Testaments. Thus when God divided the nations, He set the bounds of the people according to the number of the children of Israel, for the Lord's portion is his people; Jacob (Israel) the lot of his inheritance. Deut. xxxii. 8, 9. The people shall dwell alone and not be reckoned among the nations. Num. xxiii. 7-10; xxiv. 1-9. He that scattered Israel will also gather him and keep him as a shepherd his flock. (Jer. xxxi. 10, 11, 31, 31; Rom. xi. 25, 29; Heb. viii. 8, 12,) and as I count the names of their city, land and nationality, they occur over 1500 time; and hundreds of times they make the primal parts of prophecy itself. These terms, through all history, are the same as those in the prophecy, so that if wrested out of prophecy we lose the marrow and back bone of the Bible and of history itself. Both are then alike bereft of their value, because bereft of their truth and importance. Those who accept these terms as true in history, are challenged respectfully to employ them, as inspired men and angels do, when quoting prophecy. Then, like Paul, they will teach the faith they now persistently toil to destroy. This plain and righteous test is above suspicion. It is based on the proper and unmistakable facts of the case; which these brethren would rejoice to apply to all opponents of the second advent and resurrection, in discussing these points of gospel truth.

On these premises I remark

1. That Dr. Field's other objections do not lie against us as if we made up our own quotations. They do not say that we conjure up Scripture to suit our purpose. In other words they see and own the Scriptures we quote, and only labor to break their proper force, to our faith. Hence, our difference lies here; we believe these large and plain portions of the Word in their proper terms and relations to Christ and his gracious reign, but they disbelieve and reject them from prophecy, though compelled to read and believe and teach them as they occur in all history, and in the shadow of good things to come. Surely they should stand self convicted. For if used in the shadow, they do belong to the substance of the good things to come. They are thus incorporated in the primary terms and in the very structure of the prophetic plan of God. Hence ye would do well to believe them also. Amen.

2. The objectors do not claim that we use Israel, Judah and Jerusalem of Zech. i. 18-22, in an improper or unscriptural sense; because the facts of history demonstrate their legitimate use here as subjects to the four Gentile powers. By consequence they should be consistent and concede the literal meaning of these terms at the close of Gentile times; when the Gentiles are to be cast out, and they themselves and their land delivered.

3. But they do claim, as a main basis of their objections, that in the gospel calling, there is neither Jew nor Gentile. There they are right. We are glad to agree with them so far, and if they would listen and learn how we discriminate between this age and the age to come, they might agree with us all through to the gospel of the kingdom.

The kingdom to come has no place but in the age to come. Heb ii. 5; vi. 5; Matt. xii. 32; Mark x. 30, 31.

This present evil world, (age) is evil in the sense that the devil is its god. Gal. i. 4; 2 Cor. iv. 4. The word for evil is the sum of the phrase wicked one, five times over in John ii. 13, 14; iii. 12; v. 18, 19.

In contrast, Christ will come, raise his saints and reign with them, to bless, restore and glorify, according to promise, in the world to come.

In this present evil world, the devil and his angels are the organizing power for evil, but in the age to come, Christ and his saints will organize and administer for good—for glory to God in the highest, and on earth, good will to men.

4. The doctrine of the age to come does not alter an iota of the gospel calling—the church, in this age, nor the fact of the second advent; and the resurrection and change of the saints. No indeed. The age to come, is to be the sphere of nine parts of Messianic promise, as compared with the past. The great burden of the Word of the Lord, belongs under Christ as King in Zion.

The age to come only adds to the glory of Christ's second coming and reign. It alone gives us the sphere and time of the abounding blessings of the kingdom, so often set to music in the Psalms and Prophets. Psa. lxxii. Isa. lv. It is to be the sphere of the greatest glory of the saints. Eph. ii. 7; iii. 21. Hence, if the objectors could have their mind and way in this matter, they would undermine, or contravene their own greatest mercies. Matt. xix. 28; Luke xii. 32; xxii. 29, 30; Eph. ii. 7; Rev. xx. 4-6. They would upset their own throne.

5. They object, as if it were a real objection, that they are not all Israel, who are of Israel. But it should suffice to say, in answer; that they are not all Christian who are of the church. For they know that the church will be saved. Yes, and I know that Israel will be saved; for a like good reason; God hath said it. Rom. xi. 26, 29. Christ hath died to secure it. John xi. 50, 52. And the world's hope seems often bound up in it. Psa. lxxii. lxxxix. 31-37; xcviii. 3-9; cii. 13-22; Luke ii. 29-32; Rom. xv. 8-13.

6. Unbelief arises from darkness, and is always full of doubts. Thus it was with the Jews, as to the calling in of the Gentiles. So it is now with Gentiles, against all that God hath said of the restoration of Israel under Christ.

All such doubts should be relieved by Rom. xi. 30, 31. The sovereign mercy that reached the Gentiles after having been sunk thousands of years in idolatrous debasement, is to return to Israel. This dispensational truth. And as God's thoughts and ways are heaven-high above ours, I ask all objectors, Who are you, that you reply against God? Rom. ix. 20. Your puny will against the Divine, is less than the spider's web before the lion.

No apology need be made for human error or imprudence on these subjects. But it is your duty and mine also, to believe in God, and believe his prophets. Luke xxiv. 25, 44. "O fools and slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken."

J. B. COOK.

The Apostolic Fathers on Immortality.

"The fathers," known by the names of Barnabas, Clement, Hermas, Ignatius, and Polycarp.—"These five writers," says Dr. Clarke, "constitute the whole of what are called the 'Apostolic Fathers.'" We know, if we did not find the proposition sustained by the writings of these fathers, all efforts to establish the doctrine by the opinion of uninspired men this side of them, would only be labor lost, as when one beats the air; hence we determined to go carefully and look over every thing written by them on this subject; and still further, if we did not find the doctrine in their writings it would be very strong evidence that the apostles never taught it to the church of Christ; and if they did not teach it, it would be equally certain that Christ did not teach it to them; and then it would most clearly follow, that it is not a Bible doctrine.

The apostolic fathers flourished between A. D. 71 and A. D. 140. They immediately succeeded the apostles, and wrote before the time of Justin Martyr. The first of these, Barnabas, was a companion of Paul, who says of him, "He was a good man and full of the Holy Ghost and of faith." Acts xi. 24. Clement of Alexandria denominates him, "The apostle Barnabas . . . . . the apostolic Barnabas, one of the seventy, and fellow worker with Paul;" hence it appears he was one of the "seventy" sent out by the Savior. His writings were held in great esteem by the early Christian churches and are often quoted by them; and as he lived in the time of St. John, intimately associated with Paul, and with others who had learned the doctrine of christianity from Christ and the apostles, it looks very reasonable that he should write the same doctrine that they taught.

If Christ and the apostles instructed their hearers that man has an immortal soul that lives on in a conscious state after his death, we shall expect to read it in the writings of this apostolic father. What are the facts? In all his writings, we cannot find a hint that man has by nature an immortal soul. He does not intimate that the wicked are to suffer eternal misery. In the fifteenth chapter, he says: "For he who does such things shall be glorified in the kingdom of God. But he that chooses the other part, shall be destroyed together with his works. For this cause there shall be both a resurrection and a retribution." He teaches plainly that there is no reward till Jesus comes, and no punishment till after judgment. We find nothing about disembodied souls or spirits which are alive in hades or any other place, but plain teaching to the contrary.

We turn to Clement, the second of apostolic fathers. He was Bishop of Rome, and is thought to be the one whom Paul mentions among his fellow laborers whose names are in the book of life." Phil. iv. 3. There is a spurious epistle attributed to him, which is thought to have been written in the fourth century. He wrote about the time that St. John lived. In the seventh chapter he says: "It is written, The merciful shall inherit the earth . . . . but the transgressors shall perish from off the face of it." In chapter eighteen he says: "What can mortal man do? or what strength is there in him that is made out of the dust?" In all the writings of Clement, we can find nothing about immortal souls or spirits, or about eternal misery.

We pass to examine the writings of Hermas, the third of the apostolic fathers. In his second vision he says: "Happy are they that do righteousness: they shall not be consumed forever."

Again he says in the third vision, verse 86, he who abstains "from all evil works, believing that if he shall contain himself from all concupiscence he shall be the heir of eternal life."

In the Sixth Command he says: "The evil way has not a good end. . . . it is rugged and full of thorns, and leads to destruction." Again, in the Twelfth Command he says: "Whosoever therefore shall depart from all evil desires, shall live unto God; but they that are subject unto them shall die forever."

In the Sixth Similitude, when speaking of those who "have blasphemed the name of the Lord," he says: "These kind of men are ordained unto death."

In the Tenth Similitude he says that he who neglects the commands, "shall not live forever."

In all his writings we find nothing about eternal torment, immortal souls or spirits.

We next turn to the writings of Ignatius, the fourth of the apostolical fathers. He was bishop of Antioch, in Syria, the latter part of the first, and the beginning of the second century. Some say he was the one whom the Lord took in his arms and set in the midst of his disciples. Ignatius was martyred by being thrown to wild beasts for being a Christian.

In his epistle to the Magnesians, second chapter, he says: "It ye united to your bishop, and those who preside over you, to be your pattern and direction in the way to immortality."

In his epistle to Polycarp, he says: "Be sober as the combatant of God; the crown proposed to thee is immortality."

We can find nothing in all his writings about immortal souls or spirits, nor any thing about eternal misery for the wicked.

We now turn to Polycarp, the last of the apostolical fathers. Eusebius, the earliest church historian, says of him: "Polycarp, disciple of the apostles, who received the bishopric of the church in Smyrna from the eye witnesses and ministers of the Lord."—Euse. B. C. 36. In his epistle to the Philippians, second chapter, when speaking of pleasing the Lord, he says: "Whom if we please in this present world, we shall also be made partakers of that which is to come, according as he has promised to us, that he will raise us from the dead." Polycarp says nothing concerning immortal souls or spirits existing as conscious entities between death and the resurrection; neither do we find a word from him about eternal torment.

After looking over all the writings of the the apostolical fathers, and not finding one word about immortal souls or spirits, or that the spirits of men are conscious beings between death and the resurrection, we inquired of the "Doubting Castle" managers, with much earnestness, "Why have you caused it to be stated that the primitive Christians from the days of the apostles believed that disembodied human spirits existed in a conscious state, when there is not one such statement in all the writings of the apostolical fathers?" And to their blushes of confusion, echo answered, "why?"

As these fathers received their doctrine from the apostles and those who were instructed by Christ, it appears clear that they learned and taught nothing concerning conscious, disembodied human spirits; therefore the doctrine is not sustained by them.

Faith and Religion.

The words forming the caption of this article appear to be taken by some people as synonymous terms, and that whoever has the one has per consequence the other. My experience, personal and otherwise, shows to me a wide difference between the meaning of the terms practically.

A man or woman may have faith and yet not have a particle of religion, though they cannot have true religion without having faith to some extent. Faith is a matter of the head, the reason, while religion is of the heart, the affections, almost wholly. The first is the effect of testimony, without which it is impossible to have faith, while one may have a good deal of religion without much testimony. In fact a real warm-hearted religionist does not ask for testimony, but is swayed by his impulses and affections. He is good and kind, because he loves to be so; and he does not stop to ask, "What is promised for this?"

Paul says, "Without faith it is impossible to please God," but it is possible to displease Him, and have faith. Peter gives an admonition to the ones scattered abroad who had with him "obtained like precious faith," to add to their faith "virtue, (courage), to virtue knowledge, to knowledge temperance, (self-control), to temperance patience, to patience godliness, to godliness brotherly kindness, and to brotherly kindness, charity, (love)." 2 Peter i. 5-7.

Faith is first, but without these additions no "abundant entrance" will be administered unto those who have the faith, into the kingdom. It is the whole chain that binds us to God. Faith and obedience are but two links, and they bind us to God's justice. Having heard the testimony offered, we have believed; having believed, we have voluntarily obeyed the requirements by which we place ourselves under God's laws, and are certain of one of two things, its rewards or its punishments. We may have the first, if we add to our first two steps those that Peter exhorts us to; but if we stop where we began, though we know all things, we shall surely get the latter.

Paul says, in 1 Cor. xiii., "though I have all faith so that I could remove mountains, and have not charity (love), I am nothing." "And now abideth faith, hope, charity, but the greatest of these is charity."

What is this charity, or love, that comprehends and covers so much? Paul says, Rom. xii. 9, 10, 13, 16, "Let love be without dissimulation; abhor that which is evil, cleave to that which is good. Distributing to the necessity of saints; given to hospitality. Be of the same mind one towards another. Mind not high things, but condescend to men of low estate."

These definitions are plain enough for any one to see what is essential for a Christian character. Paul defines this charity to be long-suffering, kind, not envious, vaunting or puffed up, of good behavoir, not selfish or easily provoked; thinketh no evil, and rejoices in truth, and not in iniquity.

One whose character reflects all these traits—and if one is gone it has lost so much of its lustre—is, indeed, a rare jewel, and proves the possessor to be one who has been with Jesus, and learned of Him.

What is religion? James says: "Pure religion and undefiled before God and the Father is this: To visit the fatherless and widows in their affictions, to keep himself unspotted from the world."

To visit the widow and the fatherless in their affections—not to distress them by enforcing some claim, usurious or otherwise, against the little estate the husband and father left them, and which claim he could not pay, but to minister to their wants and necessities. To keep oneself unspotted from the world, is to keep aloof from its entanglements, not to be caught and dazzled by its glare of fashion, and like it look down with coldness or contempt on a less fortunate brother in the world's chase after daily food.

James says, too, that any man's religion is vain, who, seeming to be religious, bridles not his tongue, but deceives his own heart. The tongue is an unruly member, and runs riot sometimes, and does no end of mischief, but there is a power back of it which sets it going or holds it in check, according as it is disposed. No one has an unruly tongue of itself. It is a harmless member when not controlled for evil speaking, and no one having the graces of the Spirit, as enumerated in Gal. v. 22, 23, will ever be troubled with this worse than poison—an unruly tongue.

The word "religion" is said to be derived from two Latin words, re, again, and ligo, to bind. "To bind again." Is therefore the meaning and force of the word. Man was once attached to God, bound to Him by the laws of His creation; but the ligature was obedience, and it was broken when man became disobedient. The plan was then adopted to re-bind man to his Creator, and that re-binding process is obedience, and in order to get the full benefit of God's love, a full and complete attachment must be made. Faith is the first step in the process, and that cannot be taken until we first hear what proof there is that we have been cut loose from our Creator, and what is necessary to re-bind us to Him. That is testimony, and upon that testimony we found our belief or disbelief. If we accept the testimony as sufficient, we believe it, hence have faith. Then, having believed, we have taken the first step, and ask what further have we to do, and are told to "cleanse and wash away our sins, calling on the name of the Lord." This is the second step, and is a voluntary one, and we have then forged the chain that binds us to God's justice. If we stop here we are worse off than if we had never moved from our first position, for with our faith and obedience alone, we are in the condition of the man with the buried talent, doomed to punishment and spoliation of what he has. But if, having gone thus far, our hearts are touched with God's love and mercy, if our affections are drawn out towards our Lord and Master, who has done so much for us, and we feel constrained to do for others as much as we are able, then will we add to our already acquired treasure of possibilities, the richer possessions of courage, knowledge, temperance, patience, godliness, brotherly kindness, and charity, and be crowned in the kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ, kings and priests for one thousand years' reign on the earth, over its nations and peoples, to bless them, rather than to destroy.

Who will fail of this rich legacy made sure to the faithful followers of Jesus, by the oath and promise of Jehovah? Not one, I hope, at least, of all those who have taken the first and second steps in the road to the kingdom.

H. H. PEIRCE.

GENEVA ILL., July 28, 1875.

A Sum in Addition.

"And beside this, giving all diligence add to your faith virtue," (courage or fortitude), for you will stand in great need of it. You may be compelled to renounce a spurious faith, leave the church of which you have long been a member, or perhaps an honored minister, abandon a good salary, forego ease, bear reproach and preach an unpopular doctrine, and perhaps support yourself while so doing; you may have great things to bear, and you will need courage; then be diligent to add it. And to courage, knowledge. Remember when you enter the school of Christ you become a student for life. Then never think you have learned it all. The Bible is an inexhaustible fountain of living truth; whatever was written is for our instruction. Avail yourself of it, for you will need all you can learn, to strengthen yourself, to instruct the ignorant, and refute the contentious.

"And to knowledge temperance," or self-control. If you allow yourself to become a victim to self-indulgence, your progress and usefulness is at an end; then learn to practice self-control.

"And to temperance, patience." "For ye have need of patience, that after you have done the will of God ye might receive the promise." Be patient therefore, brethren, establish your hearts, for the coming of the Lord draweth nigh." This is the age of evil; what can't be cured must be endured. If you continually fret and chafe over the disagreeable and the evil, your temper will become sour, you will become hateful and hating, you will utterly lose the spirit of Christ, and finally the crown.

"And to patience godliness," or piety. Learn to love God under the cloud, as well as in the sunshine; when he frowns as when he smiles. Study God, and you will know him; knowing him, you will love him.

"And to godliness (piety, or love to God), brotherly kindness." From loving God you will learn to love your brother. You ought to love your brother because God loves him, because he, too, loves God. You know that as we approach a common center we draw near each other. Let God be the common center of all your affections, and you will increase more and more in mutual love manifested in brotherly kindness.

"And to brotherly kindness charity," or love. Let your heart be continually enlarged and expanded: from loving your brother (in Christ), learn to love the race of man. Remember that God loves the world, or race, saints and sinners. Guard against that narrow selfishness that would confine your affections and generosity to your own family, or sect, or nation. "If you love them that love you, what thank have ye?" Embrace all for whom Christ died, in the scope of your affections. This will give you a noble large-heartedness like unto God, and will give a zest to your benevolence. You will be anxious to do for all. A soul saved in China will give you equal joy with one saved in America. You will be a brother to man, a true philanthropist or lover of mankind. "For these things being in you and abounding they will not permit you to be inactive, nor unfruitful in the knowledge of our Lord Jesus Christ." 2 Pet. i. 3-8

WIDE AWAKE.—The second number of this new juvinile magazine surpasses if possible, the first. The illustrations and reading matter are first-class. The opening story, "Two Fortune Seekers," by the "Little Classics" man, Rossiter Johnson, is charged with boys' humor and men's philosophy. Mrs. Clara Doty Bates, who, by the way, is one of the best writers of children's poetry in the land, contributes "Tony." "Young Rick," Miss Eastman's serial, is excellent. "Benjamin Franklin," by Rev. Dr. Chapin, is appropriate, contemporarily. "A May Marriage" is a graceful poem. Miss Farman's "Cooking Club" enjoys itself hugely. "How to Amuse the Babies" is charmingly written and charmingly illustrated. "A Queer People."—"Their Children" is worth perusal. "Frankie's Troubles," "Grandma's Pocket," and "Where did it go?" are each veritable bits of child-life. The Guessing-People and the Singing-People are each well served. Price $2.00 per annum. D. Lothrop & Co., publishers, 38 and 40 Cornhill, Boston.

A Singular Missionary.

A singular missionary preacher is passing through Southern Illinois, and a great deal is said about him; but just what his religion is, I have been unable to ascertain from the many conflicting rumors concerning him. He wears a red cap, and a long black gown. Some represent him as a Jesuit, some as a Russian and others as a Turkish priest. I did not see him as he passed through this place. He was not permitted to speak in this place on account of the prevalence of small pox. Here is what the Jonesborough "Advertiser" says of him:

"The Rev. Periovant, a Bulgerian priest from Turkey, was in our city on Saturday last, and delivered two lectures. Owing to his speaking English so brokenly, his second lecture was not very largely attended. His mission to this country is to incite the Christians of this country against the Turks, and make an attempt towards taking the holy land from their control."

Ignorance a Sin.

I have known some persons who purposely avoided the reading and studying of the Scripture in order that they might remain in ignorance of God's plan, and the obligations he has imposed on man through a revelation of his will.

The person who thinks that self-imposed ignorance will weigh anything in his favor by mitigating the severity of the sentence, or by changing it entirely in that day when the secrets of the heart shall be laid bare, will be woefully deceived.

The real quality of sin is involved in the act of rejecting the light in this way. Some of this class are esteemed good and moral in the light of the world's moral code. But what of that? This does not lessen the peril of their situation. That heart is obdurate and rebellious which refuses to hear and be instructed through the only medium which sheds light on the great questions of human obligation and destiny.

Sinner of this class, let me say to you that your respectability and good behaviour toward men will avail you nothing in the great day of rewards in the presence of the Judge, whose word spoken in the past condemns or acquits in the final decision. God's word demands of you a definite faith, faith in the Gospel, a hearty obedience to all its requirements, and a life of piety and devotion such as you do not now manifest. You may say this is a yoke and a burden. So it is. But Christ says: "My yoke is easy, and my burden is light." Yokes and burdens have become synonyms of tiredness, but here are a yoke and a burden the wearing and bearing of which affords rest to the soul. They are "easy and light," is the reason the Savior assigns. How very easy and light compared with the ritual of Moses, the various forms of human legalism and service of sin. Whatever suffering and affliction belongs to the cross are light weighed against the "eternal weight of glory."

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS,

All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final reestablishment of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of Kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of rebuking those controversial methods which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Are the Two Witnesses of Rev. xi, Moses and Elias, No. III.

Of the the things written in Nos. 1 and 2 this is the sum:

1. That Moses and Elias have already once appeared as witnesses of the majesty of God in the person of Jesus, in the representative scene on the mount of transfiguration, Luke ix.; 1 Pet. i.

2. That these witnesses are to "finish their testimony," and hence must reappear.

3. That they cannot be two principles, of civil and religious liberty as some suppose, nor the Old and New Testaments, nor the law of the prophets as others think; for Rev. xi. 10, expressly declares them to be "two prophets," which like Moses and Elias knew that they had power to turn water into blood and smite plagues in the earth, as Moses did in Egypt; and to shut heaven that it rained not, as Elias did in the days of Ahab.

4. That the forty and two months, and the twelve hundred and sixty days are literal days of literal length, and not so many years.

5. That consequently the time of their testimony and prophecy is just three years and a half, and when slain as martyrs, they are to remain unburied in Jerusalem ("It cannot be that a prophet perish out of Jerusalem, saith Jesus) for three days and a half, when they are again to stand on their feet, and ascend up to heaven.

6. That the witnesses are yet to appear, and their career and mission are yet future, for both are to be enacted between the sounding of the sixth and seventh trumpets; and the latter sounds in the end of the "times of the Gentiles," and just before the glorious advent of the king of Israel and of the saints.

The fourth verse of the ninth chapter, calls for some consideration. Here the two witnesses are compared to or represented by "two olive trees and two candlesticks." These figures are aptly descriptive of two such eminent prophets as Moses and Elias. The province of olive trees is to supply oil, in the East, is to feed the flame of the candle stick or light stand, and thus to diffuse light and give knowledge; and the effect of this is to expose the wickedness of the rulers of the darkness of this world, and thus draw down on the witnesses the wrath of their enemies who are thus "tormented" by their testimony against them. v. 10.

That these events have yet to happen, and consequently are not fulfilled, seems further manifest from a collation of chap. x. 6; and xi. 2. The angel that sweare that "there shall be time no longer," refers doubtless to Gentile and not to Jewish times. In chap. xv. 4, John is bold "not to write" certain things, but to "seal them up." These were the utterances of the seven thunders. If these were not good reasons [illegible]

"God winked at." Such times are now transpiring before us. Is it not true that the populations of Asia, Africa, Europe and America, in the mass, are under times of ignorance, as to God's word and laws? It is only individuals that come under condemnation for knowing and rejecting the gospel. As to the nations, then, as there is no appreciable intelligence among them as to Divine things, the word declares, as to them, "there shall be time no longer." Hence in chap. xi. 2, the angel who measures "the temple, the altar, and them that worship therein," (who are the Jews exclusively) is expressly required to leave out and not measure the court of the Gentiles. But we must not thence infer, that the terminus of Gentile times is lost to God's view, for Paul expressly informs us, in Rom. xi. 25, that "blindness in part is happened to Israel until the fulness of the Gentiles be come in, and so all Israel shall be saved."

Acts xv. 13-17 is authority for the position that Gentile time is now allowed only for individual selection to the kingdom, when set up, and that when the tabernacle of David is restored, and Israel is returned to Mount Zion, then the nations of the earth shall learn wisdom and righteousness and share in the blessedness of that restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his holy prophets since the world began.

In the next, I shall seek to show the position of the saints on earth when the two witnesses appear on the scene.

The Great Tribulation.

"Fo then," says our Lord, "shall be great tribulation, such as was not since the beginning of the world to this time, no nor ever shall be." This passage presents some difficulties at the first view, but a careful examination, and thorough discrimination, will dispell them all. J. M. S., in the RESTITUTION for July 14, has given us, in an article of some length, light on this point. If allowed to do so, the writer will present some important considerations, which J. M. S. has omitted or overlooked.

As he truly says, the "Jews were to be the subjects of both the tribulation and the deliverance so graphically described by our Lord." Paul adds that "tribulation shall fall upon Jew first, and also upon the Gentile." This idea is admitted by J. M. S., but the further idea I wish to offer is, the great tribulation which began upon the Jews at the destruction of their city by the Romans, is not to terminate until antichrist is destroyed, when all nations are gathered against Jerusalem, as foretold by Zechariah, and when the two witnesses must finish their prophecy. With no other view can we harmonize the sayings of our Lord. There can be but one greatest of all tribulations, and our Lord adds, "This generation shall not pass till all be fulfilled." It is so rendered.

One other idea which tends greatly to clear up all difficulty. It is that the prophets nowhere interpose time or events between the first and second advents of our Lord. Neither does our Lord himself in this instance, as reported by Matthew and Mark. J. M. S. failed to discriminate between these two reports, and that recorded by Luke. The two former reports were given from what our Lord said on the Mount of Olives to a select few of the disciples. The report by Luke was from what he had previously heard said in public, at the temple. There are many important points of difference here, and very instructive if duly observed.

Let us contrast a few of these points. Matthew and Mark report these words of our Lord: "When you see the abomination of desolation spoken of by Daniel the prophet, standing in the holy place," etc. Luke reports "When you see Jerusalem surrounded by armies." This was not spoken of by Daniel the prophet, but by Zechariah the prophet, and the events immediately to follow, are nearly two thousand years apart; but as before remarked, they are coupled together like the two advents in Matthew and Mark, as though they were to come in one generation. And so they must in some sense, or we have a [illegible] understand, swift as eagles," etc. See full description, Deut. xxviii. Notwithstanding that Luke refers to the "armies" of Zechariah, the event still future, history tells us it was taken as a warning by the Christians in Jerusalem before besieged by the Romans. The city was first surrounded and then the army withdrawn for some unknown cause; and Christians fled. A similar flight must take place when anti-christ breaks his seven years' covenant with the Jews in the midst of the week, and "all nations come against Jerusalem to battle."

Luke alone, in chap. xxi. gives us a series of events, which must occupy a space of time, calling it the "times of the Gentiles," during which time Jerusalem is trodden under foot by the Gentiles, and according to Luke, it is after these times of the Gentiles, that the signs are to appear in the heavens; which to an unobserving reader, Matthew and Mark would place immediately after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans.

But Matthew and Mark do not really so place them. They place the signs in the heavens after the abomination of desolation spoken of, is set up. The Romans never set up that abomination in the holy place, in the temple. They never took away the daily sacrifice three years and a half, as the man of sin will do. The sanctuary was burned up, before Titus could reach it on taking Jerusalem.

It is very easily shown as J. M. S. has done, that all these things have nothing to do with Rome. But this is not all we have to do with the subject. We want a complete and harmonious understanding of all that these Scriptures teach. It is from a wrong understanding of these Scriptures, that has arisen all the Babel-like theories respecting the second coming of our Lord. Some say the second advent was at the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; because our Lord said all these things should be fulfilled on this generation. To harmonize all scripture—of, some—length, light on this point. If allowed to do so, the writer will present some important considerations, which J. M. S. has omitted or overlooked.

As he truly says, the "Jews were to be the subjects of both the tribulation and the deliverance so graphically described by our Lord." One other idea which tends greatly to clear up all difficulty. It is that the prophets nowhere interpose time or events between the first and second advents of our Lord. Neither does our Lord himself in this instance, as reported by Matthew and Mark. J. M. S. failed to discriminate between these two reports, and that recorded by Luke. The two former reports were given from what our Lord said on the Mount of Olives to a select few of the disciples. And so they must in some sense, or we have a [illegible]

[illegible] fulfilled [illegible]

J. M. S. I am seeking no point of controversy; only wish to guard his remarks from misapprehension, by those who are claiming that the resurrection is already past, and those who claim that the second advent is in the past also.

I have a further object in view. I am anxious that the readers of the RESTITUTION should enter upon an entire re-examination of the whole book of prophecy; until they discover the beautiful harmony of the whole subject. All who do this will be in no further danger of running after the one and another who are switching off the straight track of truth; those who are ever learning, but never coming to the knowledge of the truth. There are too many of these unstable minds. We have all come up through so many winding paths in pursuit of truth, and we still have so much of the relics of old prejudices clinging to us, we all need caution against the wiles of ingenious errorists.

I know how hard it is for us to escape entirely all the influences of our educational prejudices. A degree of honesty may be clearly wedded to these prejudices, but how great the gain to such as can shake off all such prejudices, and supply their place with the pure truth.

Among these prejudices a very strong one is found in the shape of the popular notion that the dispensation in which we live is the ultimate of christianity. This notion leads to the supposition, that some how or other, the prophecies of the Old Testament are fulfilled in this age. To make such prophecy applicable to this age, all sorts of inventions must be resorted to. Because the typical portions of Daniel's visions were fulfilled in the history of four great empires, down to the time that John the Baptist proclaimed that the kingdom of heaven was next in order, there seems a little plausibility in the scheme, to look for a continuous chain of the fulfillment of prophecy among the nations since that time. Whereas the whole work of fulfilling prophecy until our Lord comes to set up the kingdom which his herald proclaimed, is suspended. No note of time is given. For ought we know, the kingdom next in order after the Roman, then at the zenith of his power, would have been immediately set up, had not the herald proclaiming it, been beheaded, and his chief crucified. At any rate all further attempts to establish that kingdom has been postponed until the crucified chieftain returns.

During the last half of our Lord's ministry, because he knew what was about to happen, began, by dark parables, to disclose the mystery of God, by giving the several likenesses of certain preliminaries of the coming kingdom. This preliminary dispensation is called by several names: Mystery of Godliness—Gospel of the grace of God—Kingdom of patience of Jesus Christ, etc., all of which is to be succeeded by the revelation of Jesus Christ.

As before remarked, nowhere in the Bible, is this intervening dispensation recognized, except in the seven parables of Jesus, and his seven epistles, sent to the seven churches, standing as the typical representation of all the church until he comes. Then the disciple is call up to receive his new commission, and to send back so much of its contents to the churches, as we find in the Apocalypse commencing at chapter iv.

The contents of the little book, and the utterances of the seven thunders, are reserved for a future testimony. Then we shall know how this great tribulation will come to its close.

—The Roman Catholic clergy of Lawrence have issued a card, condemning the riot, and expressing the hope that the ringleaders may be made to feel the enormity of their crime. How much better it would be for the Roman Catholic clergy to instruct their people beforehand that such outrages are not in harmony with the Church of Christ. They have no hesitation in teaching their people that to eat meat on Friday is sin; could they not contrive also to intimate to them in some delicate way that to murder peaceful Protestants on the 12th of July, is not only the proper thing for Christians to do. The Church.

The Church is represented in the New Testament as a compact body, fulfilled together. "In whom all the building fitly framed together groweth unto a holy temple in the Lord, in whom ye also are builded together for a habitation of God through the Spirit." "For we are laborers together with God, ye are God's husbandry, ye are God's building." "From whom the whole body fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." "For as the body is one and hath many members, and all the members of that one body, being many, are one body; so also is Christ. For, by one Spirit are we all baptized into one body, whether we be Jews or Gentiles, whether we be bond or free, and have been all made to drink into one Spirit. For the body is not one member, but many. If the foot shall say, because I am not the hand, I am not of the body, is it, therefore not of the body? And if the ear shall say, because I am not the eye, I am not of the body. Is it, therefore, not of the body? If the whole body were an eye, where were the hearing? If the whole were hearing, where were the smelling? But now hath God set the members in the body, as it has pleased him. And if they were all one member, where were the body? But now are they many members, yet but one body. And the eye cannot say unto the hand, I have no need of thee: nor again, the head to the feet, I have no need of you. Nay, much more those members of the body, which seem to be more feeble, are necessary. And those members of the body, which we think to be less honorable, upon these we bestow more abundant honor: and our uncomely parts have more abundant comeliness. For our comely parts have no need; but God hath tempered the body together, having given more abundant honor to that which lacked. That there should be no schism in the body, but that the members have the same care one for another. And whether one member suffer, all the members suffer with it, or one member be honored, all the members rejoice with it. Now ye are the body of Christ, and members in particular." "Ye also, as lively stones, are built up a spiritual house, a holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable to God by Jesus Christ," "Submitting yourselves one to another in the fear of God."

Thus, the church is compared to a building fitly framed together, a holy temple in the Lord, as being builded together, as a body fitly joined together, to a human body with all its members necessary, and in sympathy with each other, if one member suffer all the members suffer, if one be honored all the members rejoice; as lively stones built into a house, all supporting each other, and all the members submitting to each other. This is the picture of the Church as shown in the New Testament. How beautiful it is? What a unit body it is? How the members all support each other? And how they all work for the body? How the more feeble ones are cared for? What particular sympathy flows out toward all the members of the body? How strong it is? How permanent it is? being built on the foundation of the apostles and the prophets, Jesus Christ Himself being the chief corner stone? How compactly it is built? How perfectly it is joined together?

My brethren how do you like it? Do you think it was well organized? Do you think they were perfectly joined together in the faith that was once delivered to Abraham? Did they believe that Jesus Christ was the seed of Abraham that was to bless the world? Did they believe that when Christ returned from heaven, having received the kingdom, He would raise the saints, and give them eternal life, associate them with Him in his throne, and then and not till bless the world? Will such a people as they were be worthy for such a position, and be qualified for such a work? Do I hear your hearty Amen? Shall we be worthy? Do we fill the picture as we ought to? Are we as well organized as we ought to be? Are we as much [illegible] for each other that we ought to? Do we contribute of our substance according as God has prospered us as we ought to? Do we strive together for this faith as we ought to? Can we not respond to these questions by a hearty renewal of the consecration of our life to God?

May it be so. Amen.

GRAND RAPIDS, MICH., July 1875.

A Personal Coming a Satisfying Hope.

Nothing less than a coming in person of the Lord Jesus can satisfy the earnest longing of the Christian literalist. Nothing short of this will meet the demand of his faith and hope. The teachings of inspiration shut him up to this. "Whither I go ye cannot come" was addressed as emphatically to the loving disciples, as to cavilling Jews. John xiii. 33; vii. 34. And "no man hath ascended up to heaven," (John iii. 13), stands against the notion that patriarch and priest, however good, had gone there, up to the time of this utterance.

That is a fair theory which pictures men scaling the heights of heaven and crossing the threshold of the great antitypical holy of holies.

The attitude of the true church is like that of ancient Israel standing without, waiting for the high priest to go, or with the blessing. With this type in view, Paul wrote: "Unto them that look for him, shall he appear the second time." Heb. ix. 28. The design of this appearing is the salvation of those looking for him—whose sins he bore. The supposed coming at the edge of Jerusalem (of Universalists) the coming in providences, or at the death, (of popular churches) and the coming in power and providence through all ages of the church, (of Bishop Hurd)—none of these answer the description of the apostle. Away with such allegorizing! The personal coming of Christ, as an antecedent event in the future drama of salvation, followed immediately by supernatural gifts and blessings to the church, is the style in which the New Testament especially sets forth the various phases of our glorious hope. All are contingent upon that event. It opens to us the exceeding riches of God's grace.

Do we hope for a resurrection. Paul couples it with the coming of Christ: "For the Lord himself shall descend from heaven * * * and the dead in Christ shall rise first." 1 Thess. iv. 16. "Afterward they that are Christ's at his coming." 1 Cor. xv. 23. All the the divisions of the blessed hope stand connected with that event—change of this vile body, eternal life, incorruptibility, crown of righteousness, rest, the kingdom, and glory—all are to be given to us then, not before. The plainly expressed hope of the church, touching the time when she shall enter into the enjoyment and realization of all these things, points to the Lord's coming. The faith and hope, the conversation and conduct, the attitude and bearing of popular Christianity, contrast strangely with that of the Apostolic church. Primitive believers found their only consolation, under bereavement, in the precious promise of the Lord's return. For it they watched, and waited, and prayed; looked for, longed for, and loved his appearing. It armed them for the conflict of life, and sustained them when persecution came in like a flood. Every humble and teachable child of God, to-day cries, come, Lord Jesus. This is the cry of faith. We want to see him, of whom we have read so much in the history of his early life, and of whom so much is predicted on the page of prophecy. We want to see that same Jesus who went up from Olivet. We shall, if faithful, see him who so loved us that he died for us. He loved us. We enjoy this love by faith; but we are anxious to feel, and experience, and come in contact with the acts and things which constitute the fulfillment of the promises in him. When here, he sent, by word or touch, the life forces dancing through the veins of the dead. We want to taste this power of the world to come, as it thrills through our whole being, disrobing us of the mortal, with all the ills and defects which belong to it, and investing us with the immortal and its accompaniments. Then beyond that, in the presence of Jesus, in the company of [illegible] The [illegible]

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....August 11, 1876.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ Young Joe Smith is down in Maine preaching the gospel of Mormonism to the Yankees. Young Joe believes that the prophetic spirit and mantle of his father fell on him. The Plano prophet would have made a fair farmer, but his prophecies are very much like his father's—they never come to pass!

☞ Proof texts for the immortality of the soul must be getting rather scarce, when a Presbyterian clergyman like Prof. David Swing, of Chicago, will offer $50,000 for one text to prove it. The offer is very liberal. Now let some man become a mighty hunter, like Nimrod, and find the text. We might state in advance that the supposed proof will be found in heathen mythology, but not in the Word of God. The resurrection of the dead is the Bible doctrine for a future life.

☞ A number of spiritualists have been laboring to prove, through the newspapers, that Robert Dale Owen's insanity was not caused by spiritualism. If they had kept still people would have forgotten all about it, but their zeal in behalf of "the cause" makes one think that there is much ground for the charge. If Mr. Owen were the only man who had become insane by dabbling with necromancy, these zealous friends might argue the case with more reason, but the cases of insanity are too numerous to be reasoned away. Spiritualism is not sound theologically, mentally nor morally.

☞ An imported clergyman, from New York, by the name of Carroll preached in Chicago on Sunday last, upon the immortality of the soul. This theological Solon, not finding any proof in the Old Testament, makes the following strange announcement:—

But let us here sum up in brief what we may have discovered concerning the faith of the Jew. We may use, in part the conclusions of others, and even their language, at least where our views coincide. We find then that "The future life, as a doctrine, occupies no prominent place in the religion of Moses and the prophets. The immortality of the soul is neither argued nor affirmed. The resurrection of the body is kept in the background. At first sight, and on a cursory examination, there seems to be no advance upon the Pagan systems, so far as the article of faith is concerned. In the near prospect of death the other world is given to the faithful, full of gloom and terror. The dead are without sensation and without hope, forgotten of God and unable to praise Him. It cannot be denied, then, that so far as any distinct knowledge of a future life went, the Jew had little advantage over the Gentile."

If Mr. Carroll will examine the New Testament with the same impartial care, he will find no evidence for the heathen dogma of natural immortality. It is a favorable sign of our times that many of the leading men in this country, and in Europe, are giving up the notion that the soul is immortal.

A Rare Offer.

We call attention this week to brother Wilcox's proposition which will be found in another column. He proposes to furnish the RESTITUTION for one year and SMITH'S BIBLE DICTIONARY—a valuable work—simply for the price of the book. We advise those who have not the book to avail themselves of this offer.

The Warring Elements.

The present year has been one of disasters. Fires, floods, failure of crops, shipwrecks, and financial distress. Men are laboring to devise schemes to prevent these things, but they continue to increase. The papers are burdened with tidings of woe from all lands. Read the following from the Chicago Tribune of Monday last:

What is the matter with nature? What has got into the elements? Every mail from Europe shows that the disastrous storms and convulsions of nature we have been experiencing, are not confined to us, but reach all round the world, with the possible exception of Africa. The Cologne Zeitung reports that the vineyards in that section are irretrievably ruined by the disastrous storms, which have not only destroyed the vines, but washed away the soil itself, leaving bare rock. On the 9th of July, the towns of Molsungen, Gonsungen, and Haven were visited by fearful rain and hail storms, which nearly destroyed them. On the same day, the Genova hail storm laid waste the entire harvest for miles around. Trees a century old were broken like reeds, and hundreds of birds were killed by the hailstones. A week later, a violent shock of earthquake was felt at Heckingen, Germany, and this was followed by destructive storms and floods. On the 5th inst., a waterspout burst over the town of Kiro, in Rhenish Prussia, inundating the whole place, sweeping away houses and bridges, and drowning thirty persons. A dispatch dated the same day from Calcutta says: "Disastrous floods have occurred in the northwestern provinces. Many of the dwellings of the natives have been destroyed, and it is feared that serious loss of life has occurred in the interior." The latest Chinese advices also report fearful storms along the coast, destroying much shipping. Why do not the savants explain this great commotion, and tell us when and where it will stop?

Death a Substitute.

It is remarkable that death is now considered the most important event in human destiny. Indeed death is the friend of man. One poet has said:

"Why should we mourn departed friends,
Or shake at death's alarms;
'Tis but the voice that Jesus sends,
To call us to his arms."

In the light of this sentiment, let us hear what the Bible says upon the subject of death. "Wherefore as by one man sin entered into the world, and death by sin; and so death passed upon all men, for that all have sinned." Rom. v. 12. "For the wages of sin is death." Rom. vi. 23. "The last enemy that shall be destroyed is death." 1 Cor. xv. 26. "And deliver them who through fear of death were all their lifetime subject to bondage." Heb. ii. 15. "The soul that sinneth it shall die." Ezek. xviii. 4.

The foregoing texts are sufficient to show that death is not the "voice of Jesus," neither is it a friend, but an enemy. It came into the world in consequence of sin, was ordained as a punishment upon those who violated the divine law and is represented as a judgment from God. Now in the light of all these facts, is it not most wonderful that professed teachers of the Gospel of life will refer to death as the best of friends, and claim that it is the doorway through which our friends pass into glory?

In the days of the prophets, the resurrection of the dead from the dominion of death, the coming of Christ, who is our life, and the final destruction of the grave were looked for with earnest prayer and hope. Why this, if death, which was introduced by Satan, and inflicted as a penalty, is the greatest of blessings and bestows the crown of glory without a resurrection? Death is now substituted for the resurrection. It is made to take the place of our Lord's coming, and does away with the necessity of a future Kingdom.

There is nothing in the Bible to justify those wild speculations, but much to condemn them. We are instructed to look forward to the coming of Messiah, the establishment of his kingdom and the re-living of the holy dead as the time of gaining the victory over death and the grave. If death is a friend how can the saints shout victory over it? If it is the "voice of Jesus," how could Paul exclaim: "O wretched man that I am! who shall deliver me from the body of this death?" The whole Bible is arrayed against the modern theory of death, and we look with confidence for a general abandonment of that system which makes death a substitute for the resurrection of the dead, and curing of our blessed Lord.

The Restitution.

Not having the time, through a pressure of business and cares, to write an article of editorial correspondence for this week's paper, we give place to an article from Brother Wilcox. The subscription list of the RESTITUTION should be largely increased. Many of its patrons could send out the paper for six months, or a year, to some relative, or friend, and thus benefit both the recipient of the favor, and the general cause of truth. Our tracts are running low, and donations to the tract fund, if only in small amounts, are very desirable, and much needed at the present time. Our stock of books ought to be increased to the amount of $500 dollars at least.

The destitution in Kansas was detrimental, to some extent, to the interests of the paper; as brethren then had all they could do to provide the necessaries of life, without paying for any periodical, and brethren elsewhere devoted surplus means to their assistance, that, in other circumstances, in part, at least, might have been appropriated to publishing the RESTITUTION, tracts, etc. The subscription list is slowly on the increase, but ought to be doubled at once. Times are hard, and it is only by each doing a little that we can hope for immediate success. If one half of our subscribers would, in addition to their own subscriptions, send a copy for one year to some friend, it would essentially assist the association.

It is so near the time for the paper to go to press that we have no time to make the start Brother Wilcox speaks of:—We present it to our brethren. The writer will carry one subscription for a friend, and pays in for this purpose one dollar. Many brethren have done all they well can in taking stock. Please, brethren, give this matter immediate attention. Where a friend can not do much, a small amount to the tract fund will be acceptable. A "young friend" has already started off in the line of donations. "God loveth the cheerful giver." S. A. C.

WILL YOU DO IT?

You have friends and relations out of Christ, many of whom are ignorant of the way, who would read the RESTITUTION if furnished to them, but who are too indifferent at present to pay for it; can you do them a greater favor or a more acceptable work for Christ than to send them the RESTITUTION a year?

Often, again and again, one single number contains enough truth to banish the gross errors of a life-time, and restore the reader to sound mind in Christ Jesus. Frequently a solitary article is worth more than the entire subscription price, and in its quiet access to the mind and attention of the reader will do more good than a dozen sermons. Many of us are indebted to a stray number of our paper, or a wandering tract, for our knowledge of the truth. God in his Providence sent it to us, and we are rejoicing in the light; now He asks you to become willing instruments in his hands for good in the same way. Will you do it? When Dr. Franklin did a man a favor upon a certain time, the recipient deplored his inability to return it. "It is a matter of no account," said the philosopher, "assist the first man you see in need, and tell him to do the same, and thus pass it around," in that way, one little act of kindness may be made to do immense service in the world. How many hearts may be made glad by the light of life, of all who have been instructed by the RESTITUTION, and its predecessors, will make a little effort for the salvation of their fellows, and send them the means to learn the way. A tract is often read, laid aside, and forgotten, where the weekly visits of our excellent paper, being a constant sermon, a continual reminder, a tireless instructor, will finally fasten the truth in the mind, and result in the salvation of the reader. You know of poor brethren and sisters whose hearts would be rejoiced if they could only have access to the paper. And such are generally good workers, too, and make the most of their means of good. They will read and then lend to their neighbors, and finally send to a distant friend the paper which you have, perhaps, not taken the trouble to read at all, and it lies to day with its "jacket" on in an old closet up stairs with plenty of other rubbish. But they can't pay for it. Will you do it? But you answer, "I can't afford it." I know better, and God knows better; and—you—know better. Come now, what does your tobacco cost you yearly? Not less than $10.00 if it does a cent. Just as likely as not $20.00, or even more. I have seen you spoiling a pure atmosphere by your odious smoke and defiling the virgin snow by your filthy spittle, and thought and sometimes said, (If God will forgive me for my neglect, I will say no more), that it was a shame for a steward of God to thus defile the temple of God, and waste the substance of God to the neglect of the cause of God and the disgrace of the name of God. Now, you have manliness enough to break away and devote the money thus saved to the truth in the way indicated. Will you do it? Do we not all know that our tea, coffee, tobacco, and other useless, if not sinful luxuries, and extravagance, cost us more as a nation, than our necessary food, clothing, schooling, etc., with religion and charity thrown in. Now, my brother, you know where you spend the most money for useless luxuries, will you use a little good Christian sound sense, and self sacrifice, and break off at once, using the means so saved to send the Gospel to perishing multitudes weekly, and by so doing, perhaps, save many an honest soul in the coming glorious kingdom; get to yourself a great blessing in the present and a crown of rejoicing in the world to come. Will you do it?

For myself, I say not another penny of useless expense, but the whole thus saved into the "Restitution Missionary Fund" hereby started with $1.00. Who will follow?

Your fellow servant for Christ's sake,
J. F. WILLCOX.

The Signs of the Times.

It is our purpose to commence this article where we left off in our last. In this discourse, Christ evidently uses the sun, moon and stars, and the powers of heaven synonymously. He also represents the anguish and despondency of the nations as a result produced by the shaking of the powers of the heavens. These two events, therefore, must sustain the relation to each other of cause and effect. What analogy between a disturbance among these heavenly bodies and a disturbance of the nations of earth. If Christ refers to calamities which will involve all men individually, why speak of them in a national capacity? But, if the powers of heaven are used as bold figures to represent the organized powers of earth, then the analogy may be easily understood, and appreciated. The commencement of those terrific judgments which shall result in the complete overthrow and destruction of Israel's enemies would be unmistakable signs that their emancipation was at hand. But if these signs are literal, then the literal heavens and earth must pass literally away; for Christ says that heaven and earth shall pass away. But if Christ used these terrestrial and celestial bodies to represent the great powers of earth, then all is plain and harmonizes perfectly with the same symbols so graphically described by Joel and the Revelation. According to the former these sublime symbols represent the Lord's army, before whose prowess all foes gather blackness; and the assembled nations, with their crowned heads are utterly destroyed, while the Lord is the hope of his people, and the strength of the children of Israel. And, according to the latter, the blackened heavens, the crimsoned moon, and falling stars, represent the kings of the earth and the mighty ones of the world, who call for dissolving rocks and crumbling mountains, not to hide them from these wonderful sidereal phenomena, but from the manifestations of the power and wrath of Him who sits upon the throne; for the great day of his wrath is come, and none except Israel of all the assembled nations will be able to stand.

According to Paul, heaven and earth (of course including the sun, moon and stars), represent the kingdoms of the world; and their terrible shaking represent revolution upon earth which will continue to shake until all movable kingdoms shall be removed; that Christ and his saints may receive an immovable kingdom, which having superseded all other kingdoms, shall stand forever. He says, "Whose voice then shook the earth, but now he hath promised, saying, yet once more I shake not the earth only, but also heaven. And this word, yet once more, signifieth the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that are made, that those things which cannot be shaken may remain. Wherefore we receiving a kingdom which cannot be moved, let us serve God with reverence and Godly fear: for our God is a consuming fire." Heb. xii. 26-29. Please observe

1. Heaven and earth are the things which are shaken.

2. The things which are shaken are removed.

3. The kingdoms of earth, in contrast with the kingdom of God, are the things which are removed: Therefore, the heavens and the earth represent the kingdoms of the world, and their being shaken, the removing of these kingdoms out of the way preparatory to the establishment of the kingdom of God upon earth.

That the "sun, moon and stars," or "the powers of the earth," or "heaven earth," which includes all these terrestrial and celestial bodies—we say that all these are symbols representing the governments of the world, whose overthrow will prepare the way for the establishment of the kingdom of the Messiah, is evident from the relation of these signs, as the cause, sustain to the expectation inspired in the minds of those who shall see them, that their deliverance is at hand. Christ says: "And there shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon and in the stars; upon the earth distress of nations, with perplexity; for the powers shall be shaken." Luke xxi. 25, 26. Notice:

1. The signs in the sun, moon and stars are the direct cause of the anguish and fearful apprehensions of the nations in reference to "those things which are coming on the earth."

Now that all these signs that portend the deliverance of Daniel's people relate

1. To fearful judgments upon the nations is evident from their anguish, perplexity, and despondency as the effects of these anticipated judgments; and

2. That the infliction of these predicted judgments upon the nations produces the two-fold results of filling the nations with anguish and despondency on the one hand, and of inspiring God's chosen people with hope on the other hand, that the time of their deliverance has come.

This is further manifest from the following prediction in which Christ adds, "And when these things begin to come to pass, then look up and lift up your heads; for your redemption (deliverance—Campbell.) draweth nigh. Verse 28.

And that these signs of their deliverance will involve the overthrow of all nations, assembled in Palestine at the appearing of Christ, Joel iii. 1, 2, 14-16, Zech. xiv. preparatory to the establishment of the kingdom of God, (the same as the quotation from Hebrews xii.) is clearly evident from the following prediction:

"So likewise ye, when ye see these things come to pass, know ye that the kingdom of God is nigh at hand." Verse 31.

"According to the foregoing, the heavenly bodies, or the powers of heaven, symbolize the nations, while the judgments upon these nations, which result in their final overthrow, are the signs to the Jews that their deliverance is at hand, and also that the kingdom of God will supersede the kingdoms of the world as the culmination of the hope of this long oppressed people.

Referring to the same great change in the administration of the affairs of the earth, or the passing away of the kingdoms of the world, preparatory to the establishment of the kingdom of God in their place, Christ says, "Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Verse 33. Thus Christ and Paul agree in representing the governments of the world by "heaven" and "earth;" and these being shaken until they shall be removed, according to the latter, or passing away, according to the former. The passing away of the old heavens and earth, as foretold by Peter, were designed to represent the same great change in the administration of the government of the world.

Heaven and earth are used as figures to represent the world of ungodly men who were destroyed by the flood, and the world of ungodly men who will be destroyed at the close of the present dispensation, preparatory to the establishment of a new order of things upon earth, or the creation of a new heavens and earth. The literal heavens and earth were not destroyed by the flood, nor will they be destroyed by the overwhelming judgments which shall be inflicted upon the world of ungodly men.

The creation of the heavens and earth commence with the restoration of Jerusalem and the Jews or the metropolis and the subjects of Christ's kingdom. According to the language of God himself, he creates a new heavens and a new earth by creating "Jerusalem a rejoicing and her people a joy." Please read Isa. lxv. 17-19. In Rev. xxi. 1, the old heaven and earth are represented as passing away to give place to the new heaven and earth. why do not our brethren who make the signs described by Christ literal, teach that the literal heaven and earth will pass away, and that the new heaven and earth will be made out of new material? Mr. Scott, with whom I debated at Coopertown, Ill., was consistent enough to take that position. It does not meet the demands of the language to affirm that great changes will take place in reference to earth and heaven.

It is affirmed by our God that heaven and earth shall pass away, in contrast with the word of God, which shall not pass away. It is also affirmed of them when thus removed that no place can be found for them. Such expressions must be taken in either a literal or a figurative sense. If the literal, then the literal heavens and earth must be annihilated. There is no avoiding this conclusion. But if we understand these expressions in a figurative sense, then the symbolic heavens and earth must pass away; and if the symbolic earth passes away, it must be the symbolic sea which passes away with it.

The first thing John refers to in his sublime description of the new heaven and earth is the metropolis of the kingdom, the same as the prophet Isaiah. And having described the capital, he represents the nations without as bringing their glory and honor to the metropolitan city.

There can be no doubt but what the new heavens and earth denote a new order or arrangement, and not the literal heaven and earth. At the conclusion of the thousand years we read that the nations of the earth are gathered around the holy city and the camp of the saints, and fire comes down and devours them. Rev. xx. 4-9. Here we find a graphic description of the last great destruction of the nations arrayed against Christ and his people. This destruction is described as a matter of fact transaction. the same as many accounts of the destruction of nations at the closing up of this dispensation. After the Revelator had seen the literal powers of earth literally destroyed, he next beholds the same facts in symbol by the passing away of heaven and earth. Thus he reclaims, "And I saw a great white throne, and him that sat on it, from whose face the earth and heaven fled away; and there was found no place for them." Rev. xx. 11.

There is a beautiful harmony. Thus we have seen a harmony and uniformity in Bible symbolism representing the glorious apocalypse of the Son of God, the overthrow of the assembled nations and crowned tyrants of the world, and the emancipation of Israel's enthralled millions.

Lord haste the day.

TO THE RESTITUTION:—

As an inquirer after truth as it is revealed in the Holy Scriptures, I desire to ask, and do request the writer of the article in No. 29, headed "Restoration of the Kingdom," and signed "Hope of Israel," if he can be induced to go a little further upon the same subject.

He has shown to my satisfaction that it was an organized kingly government, and that that kingdom and government had been overturned. Now the question which I desire to have answered is, To whom will it be restored?

1. Will it be restored to Israel as a nation, as it existed before its overthrow? or

2. Will it be a select few or remnant of the national Israel? or

3. Is it to be the righteous—spiritual Israel?

If to the last, who are to be the subjects ruled, as it is said that there will be kings and priests that will rule with Christ a thousand years.

Yours in hope of the kingdom.

PETERSBURG, Va., August 5, 1876

TO THE RESTITUTION:—

I drop a line out of a sort of a habit I have, and from a feeling that those who love the truth should communicate often with one another.

On a flying trip through the country, I stopped off at this place. On Sunday I searched out the church of our people. I found the building, but no people. The light seems to have gone out or to have been hid under a bushel. Over the silent house is painted "To the poor the Gospel is preached," but the voice was silent. The great synagogues were filled, and wealth and fashion were to be seen on every hand. It just seemed to me like the picture drawn in the Apocalypse of the Laodicean church, "I am rich, and increased with goods, and have need of nothing; and knowest not that thou art wretched and miserable, and poor, and blind, and naked." And because it is so, Christ says, "I will spue thee out of my mouth," and then I thought of that clause that follows—"Behold I stand at the door."

Just as in the days of his first coming the Jewish nation were deceived in the character of his coming, so will the world and the church of the present day be deceived in the character and manner of his second coming. The talisman with them is the word "spiritual." It is spiritual life, and spiritual existence, and spiritual being, and spiritual coming.

Blind leaders of the blind. Unless this ignorance and blindness were a matter of prophecy, we could hardly believe it, it is so dense. When I think of it I lose faith in all human thought and human capacity of reason.

How wonderfully prophecy is fulfilling, and how fast! Flood and fire, famine and pestilence, crime and enfamity, distress of nations, commercial paralysis, and every form and manner of public desolation. Men are waiting almost breathless for the next event, and at the same time prophesying "peace and safety."

Is it not glorious to be living in these days, and shall we be able to stand when He comes?

I spent some time in Erie, and attended the meetings of the little band gathered there. Brother John T. Ongley holds forth the Word of Life, to a little band of eight or ten. May God bless the efforts of the little flock there to the salvation of many.

Your brother, in the hope of life beyond this.

CLEVELAND, O., August 4, 1876.

—John Howard, the philanthropist, never neglected the duty of family prayer, though there were but one, and that was a servant, to join him, always declaring that where he had a tent, God should have an altar. Wherever he was when the time came, the duty was attended to. The presence of no one was allowed to interfere with it; and every call of business must wait outside the locked door till it was ended.

—Dr. Hunt's "Outline History of the Church" gives these figures: Adherents of christianity, 367,000,000; of Buddhism, 340,000,000; of Mohammedanism, 200,000,000; of Brahminism, 175,000,000; of Confucianism, 80,000,000; of Judaism, 7,000,000, of other religions, 174,000,000. Of the Christians he assigns 200,000,000 to Roman Catholicism, 121,000,000 to Protestantism, and 70,000,000 to the Oriental Church.

City of God.

My feet are worn and weary with the march
Over the rough road and up the steep hillside;
Oft'n at our God! I fain would see
Thy pastures green, where peaceful waters glide.

My hands are weary, toiling on,
Day after day for perishable meat;
O city of our God! I fain would rest—
I sigh to gain thy glorious mercy seat.

My garment travel-worn and stained with dust,
Oft rent with briars and thorns that crowd my way,
Would fain be made, O Lord, my righteousness!
Spotless and white in heaven's unclouded ray.

We eyes are weary, looking at the sun,
Impiously as I seem upon the earth:
O city of our God, within thy walls
All—all are clothed again with thy new birth.

My heart is weary of its own despair—
Sinning, repenting, sinning still again;
When shall my soul thy glorious presence seek,
And find, dear Saviour, it is free from stain?

Poor, poor, poor soul! the saviour's feet were worn
The Master's heart and hand were weary, too;
His garments stained and travel-worn and old;
His vision blinded with a paying dew.

Love thou the path of sorrow that he trod:
Toil on, and wait in patience for thy rest;
O city of our God! we soon shall see
Thy glorious walls—home of the loved and blest.

The Gospel of the Age to Come.

In the RESTITUTION of May 8th, Brother A. B. Clark concludes an article in these words: "If the gospel of the age to come is not for this age, let us wait till the time, and then will be time enough to preach it." I endorse the sentiment, for it is evident that if any one is preaching such a gospel, it must be "another gospel"—differing from the one Brother Paul preached. No such gospel is mentioned in the Bible as "the gospel of the age to come." Where did Brother C. get this phrase? What is meant by it? Many people use the phrase "age to come" without knowing its meaning. The Adventists of this section call me an "age to come preacher." One of their principal elders said to me one day, "I don't know what 'age to come' means." I remarked to him that he never would understand fully the revelation of God's word respecting the age or "world to come," without study. He then said he didn't want to know anything about it, and yet, upon every occasion, he is preaching against the "age to come doctrine" as he calls something, but what, he neither knows nor cares to know.

I hear many Adventists remark that they didn't want to hear about the "age to come;" but they want "meat in due season"—something about this age, how to live, etc., so as to be ready at the coming of Jesus. The only objection I have to this, is that it countermands the orders of the "the Captain of our salvation," who, through Peter, says, "Add to your faith virtue, (fortitude) and to virtue knowledge." Persons of this class virtually say, "We have the truth—all that is necessary to be known—and you must not dare to learn anything more than we have learned." But the greatest evil resulting from such a proposition is, that it induces its advocates to reject "the gospel." To illustrate. To the same effect I have alluded to, I quoted the text, "And the Lord God shall give unto him the throne of my father, David; and he shall reign over the house of Jacob forever; and of his kingdom there shall be no end;" and then asked, "Do you believe that?" to which he promptly replied, "No." "How then," I asked, "can you be a believer of the gospel and deny the words of inspiration respecting Jesus, 'the author and finisher of our faith?'"

"O," said he, "I believe what the Bible says about it, but I don't believe your construction of it." I had not construed it at all. I only read it as it is. But I presume that Brother C. believes that Jesus is to reign on the throne of David, and I simply ask: When? Is he reigning now? No. Will he reign in this age? No. Again I ask, When will Jesus "come and reign?" I answer, In the age to come. Hence no man can preach "the gospel"—"this gospel of the kingdom"—without speaking of the "age to come," and a man who does not want to hear of "age to come," simply don't want to hear "the gospel;" and when a man willfully and knowingly rejects "the gospel," "it were better for him that a millstone were hanged about his neck, and that he were drowned in the depth of the sea," before he ever heard of "Christ, and him crucified." I join Brother Clark in saying: "Brethren let us be careful what we do.

THE IMPENDING CRISIS.

Indications of the Approach of a Religious Crisis.

No one who is acquainted with the present tone of thought in Christendom can hide from himself the fact that an intellectual, a religious crisis is impending.

In all directions we see the lowering skies, we hear the muttering of the coming storm. In Germany, the national party is arraying itself against the ultramontane; in France, the men of progress are struggling against the unprogressive, and in their contest the political supremacy of that great country is well nigh centralized or lost. In Italy, Rome has passed into the hands of an excommunicated king. The sovereign pontiff, feigning that he is a prisoner, is fulminating from the Vatican his anathemas, and, in the midst of the most convincing proofs of his manifold errors, asserting his own infallibility. A Catholic archbishop with truth declares that the whole civil society of Europe seems to be withdrawing itself in its public life from Christianity. In England and America, religious persons perceive with dismay that the intellectual basis of faith has been undermined by the spirit of the age. They prepare for the approaching disaster in the best manner they can.

The most serious trial through which society can pass is encountered in the extirpation of its religious restraints. The history of Greece and the history of Rome exhibits to us in an impressive manner how great are the perils; but it is not given to religions to endure forever. They necessarily undergo transformations with the intellectual development of man. How many countries are there professing the same religion now that they did at the birth of Christ?

It is estimated that the entire population of Europe is about three hundred and one million. Of these, one hundred and eighty-five million are Roman Catholics, thirty-three million are Greek Catholics. Of Protestants there are seventy-one million, separated into many sects. Of Jews, five million; of Mohammedans, seven millions.

Of the religious subdivisions of American accurate numerical statement cannot be given. The whole of Christian South America is Roman Catholic; the same may be said of Central America and of Mexico, as also of the Spanish and French West India possessions. In the United States and Canada the Protestant element predominates. To Australia the same remark applies. In India the sparse Christian population sinks into insignificance in the presence of two hundred Mohammedans and other Oriental denominations. The Roman Catholic church is the most widely diffused and the most powerfully organized of all modern societies. It is far more a political than a religious denomination. Its principle is that all power is in the clergy, and that for laymen there is only the privilege of obedience. The republican forms under which the churches existed in primitive Christianity have gradually merged into an absolute centralization, with a man as vice-God at its head. This church asserts that the divine commission under which it acts comprises civil governments; that it has a right to use the state for its own purposes, but that the state has no right to intermeddle with it; that even in Protestant countries it is not merely a co-ordinate government but the sovereign power. It insists that the state has no rights over anything which it declares to be in its domain, and that Protestantism, being a mere rebellion, has no rights at all; that even in Protestant communities the Catholic bishop is the only lawful spiritual pastor.

It is plain, therefore, that of professing Christians the vast majority are Catholics; and such is the authoritative demand of the papacy for supremacy, that, in any survey of the present religious condition of Christendom, regard must be mainly had to its acts. Its movements are guided by the highest intelligence and skill. Catholicism obeys the orders of one man, and has therefore a unity, a compactness, a power, which Protestant denominations do not possess. Moreover, it derives inestimable strength from the souvenirs of the great name of Rome.

Unembarrassed by any hesitating sentiment, the papacy has contemplated the coming intellectual crisis. It has pronounced its decision, and occupied what seems to it to be the most advantageous ground.

This definition of position we find in the acts of the late Vatican Council.

Pius IX., by a bull dated June 20, 1868, convoked an Ecumenical Council to meet in Rome, on December 8 1869. Its sessions ended in July, 1870. Among other matters submitted to its consideration, two stand forth in conspicuous prominence—they are the assertion of the infallibility of the Roman pontiff, and the definition of the relations of religion to science.

But the convocation of the Council was far from meeting with general approval.

The views of the Oriental churches were, for the most part, unfavorable. They affirmed that they saw a desire in the Roman pontiff to set himself up as the head of Christianity, whereas they recognized the Lord Jesus Christ alone as the head of the church. They believed that the council would only lead to new quarrels and scandals. The sentiment of these venerable churches is well shown by the incident that, when, in 1867, the Nestorian Patriarch Simeon had been invited by the Chaldean Patriarch to return to Roman Catholic unity, he, in his reply, showed that there was no prospect for harmonious action between the East and the West; "You invite me to kiss humbly the slipper of the Bishop of Rome; but is he not in every respect, a man like yourself—is his dignity superior to yours? We will never permit to be introduced into our holy temples of worship images and statues, which are nothing but abominable and impure idols. What! shall we attribute to Almighty God a mother, as you dare to do? Away from us, such blasphemy!"

Eventually, the patriarchs, archbishops, and bishops, from all regions of the world who took part in this council, were seven hundred and four.

Rome had seen very plainly that science was not only rapidly undermining the dogmas of the papacy, but was gathering great political power. She recognized that all over Europe there was a fast spreading secession among persons of education, and that its true focus was North Germany.

She looked, therefore, with deep interest on the Prusso-Austrian war, giving to Austria whatever encouragement she could. The battle of Sadowa was a bitter disappointment to her.

With satisfaction again she looked upon the breaking out of the Franco-Prussian war, not doubting that its issue would be favorable to France, and therefore favorable to her. Here, again, she was doomed to disappointment at Sedan.

Having now no further hope, for many years to come, from external war, she resolved to use what could be done by internal insurrection, and the present movement in the German empire is the result of her machinations.

Had Austria or had France succeeded, Protestantism would have been overthrown along with Prussia.

But, while these military movements were being carried on, a movement of a different, an intellectual kind, was engaged in. Its principle was, to restore the worn-out mediæval doctrines and practices, carrying them to an extreme, no matter what the consequences might be.

Not only was it asserted that the papacy has a divine right to participate in the government of all countries, co-ordinately with their temporal authorities, but that the supremacy of Rome in this matter must be recognized; and that in any question between them the temporal authority must conform itself to her order.

And, since the endangering of her position had been mainly brought about by the progress of science, she presumed to define its boundaries, and prescribe limits to its authority. Still more, she undertook to denounce modern civilization.—Jewish Chronicle.

Will the Earth be Burned Up?

"But the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night; in the which the heavens shall pass away with a great noise, and the elements shall melt with fervent heat, the earth also, and the works that are therein, shall be burned up."—2 Peter, iii, 10

This text of scripture is understood by some as teaching that the earth and all the planetary system will be totally obliterated in the great final conflagration, when this beautiful system of ours with all its suns, planets and satellites, shall roll in one grand oblivion, and pass away in one awful flame, and the space which is now filled with these grand spheres, shall roll in the blackness of darkness for ever and ever.

Will this earth, in which its author displayed his mighty power, goodness and wisdom in its formation, and after pronouncing it "very good," with one blast of his nostrils, be totally annihilated?

Those who advocate this "do greatly err not knowing the scriptures nor the power of God." There is no element in this Scripture that shows that the earth is to be reduced to nothing. The earth-burning theorists use the term "burn up," in the sense of annihilate when the term implies no such thing. These teachers ought to be informed that fire cannot annihilate anything. It may change the exterior or corporeal form of matter, but the matter itself will remain in no less or no greater quantity. Suppose that the earth will burn and burn till it goes out of its own accord, what will become of its decomposed elements? Will they fly at random throughout the universe of God? Let reason and natural philosophy answer. These decomposed elements will be controlled by the law that governs matter which fire cannot consume, and by this law these elements will gradually assume their original form. Hence this globe will still remain; but it may be qualified by the adjective "new," according to Peter.

I admit that Peter has the earth "burned up," but I deny that he means by this term the common interpretation. In verses 5, 6, 7, we have the following declaration:

"For this they willingly are ignorant of that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water: whereby the world that then was being overflowed with water, perished. But the heavens and the earth which are now by the same word are kept in store, reserved unto fire against the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men."

By this Scripture we learn:

1. That certain parties were willingly ignorant that by the word of God the heavens were of old, and the earth standing out of the water and in the water.

2. The heavens and the earth which are now are kept in store.

The phrase, "The heavens and the earth which are now" is in contrast with "the heavens and the earth which were then." If the adjective "new," modifying heavens and earth proves that a new sphere is to be brought into existence, the adjective "old" modifying heavens and earth proves that the heavens and the earth which are now are not the heavens and the earth which were then.

Peter does not mean by the term "heavens" the starry realms that girt our earth. I understand him to mean the political divisions and institutions of the earth. To understand him to mean the literal heavens, we run ourselves into an inextricable difficulty. For the "heavens," modified by the adjectives "old" and "new," are to be understood in the same sense; and if a literal "new heavens" are to be brought into existence, then the literal "old heavens" were swept away by the flood waters.

Gleanings.

A recent letter from Brother John Poore, of Galesburg, Neosho county, Kansas, states that he is still in the field evangelizing, with success and many more calls than to which he can respond. He desires to continue his labors as Evangelist, but fears that he cannot without some assistance from abroad.

Bro. Amos Sanford will commence a meeting in Moberly, Mo., the 12th, and continue as the occasion may require. He writes that thereafter he will be ready to attend to calls in Northern Missouri, wherever Bible meetings are desired. Bro. Sanford will in his travels solicit subscriptions for THE RESTITUTION.

Sister Mary Cooper, of Ripley, Brown county, Ill., calls for aid. She says by letter that her husband has had recently a stroke of palsy, and is entirely unable to do any work for the support their family; and any aid would be thankfully received. Any one who can aid them, can send addressed P. A. Cooper, Ripley, Brown Co., Ill.

Smallpox in Jerusalem.

For more than a year smallpox has been exceedingly prevalent in Jerusalem, Jaffa and other towns in Palestine. There are unfortunately many native customs and prejudices which militate against a cessation of the epidemic. In the first place, vaccination is almost entirely neglected. There is no attempt to isolate smallpox patients while the sufferers are carefully guarded against the access of fresh air, by which means the atmosphere in the apartments and the clothes of the persons therein become saturated with the poison, thus greatly facilitating the communication of the disease. Again, the prejudice against adopting medical treatment is almost universal, while the general insanitary condition of the towns and villages is notorious. On the whole the mortality does not seem as great as might have been expected, if we desire the instruction we shall give, or if he would convey it to others, we shall gladly enter into same upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

CONFERENCE NOTICES.

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in the state of Iowa will be held near Pleasant Hill, Boone county, commencing on Thursday evening at 7 o'clock before the second Sunday in September, 1873, and close with the Sunday following.

Brother Dains will give notice at what railroad station brethren and friends will be met and conveyed to the place of meeting.

All are invited.

A. BROOKS, P. C.

AMES, Iowa, July 31, 1873.

The Michigan Church Conference will hold a grove meeting in Jonesboro, Calhoun county, Michigan, one and a half miles west of the Union, commencing on Friday, Aug. 29, in the new tabernacle, and hold over the following Sunday.

A cordial invitation is hereby given to all brethren and churches to attend, and exchange visits so as to prepare ourselves and exhortations before the Lord.

Bro. Wilcox is expected to be with us in the meeting.

Also the executive committee, and all who have an interest in the spread of the Gospel should be in attendance to consult upon the propriety of the employment of an Evangelist.

Friends coming from the south should come on the Grand Rapids and Indiana Railroad to Grand Rapids, and take the C. & K. R. R. to Hickson Station, where I shall be in waiting. Those from the west should come on the C. & I. R. R. to Hudson. Those from the east should come on the D. & M. to Jackson & Grand Rapids Railroad.

Let there be a grand rally from all parts of the state of those who are looking for the return of the Nobleman.

E. HOTT, Sec.

On August 28, 1873, the brethren of the Church of God will hold a series of meetings at Emporia, Kansas. The brethren far and near, and especially all preaching brethren, are invited to attend. Brethren Adams and others come if you can. Bro. John Poore has been engaged.

By order of

O. W. SMITH.

The Lord willing, a general meeting of the brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith, will be held near Brother Henry H. Cook's residence, two miles west of neighbor Springs, Williamson county, Ill., commencing Friday, September 12th, at 7:30 p. m., and continuing over the following Sunday. All the friends of Jesus, who "love his appearing," come to this first conference in Southern Illinois. Advocates of all others are especially invited.

AMOS SANFORD.

The Annual Conference of the state of Indiana will convene at Somerset, Fayette county, Thursday, August 21 1873.

A hearty welcome is extended by the brethren of Fayette and with whom the Conference is to be holden, to all who desire to be present at this yearly convocation.

JOHN L. WILSON, Secretary.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Notice is hereby given that a meeting of the Stockholders and Board of Directors of the Christian Publishing Association will be held at Rensselaer, Indiana, on Saturday, August 16, 1873. A general attendance of all interested is earnestly desired.

H. H. DWIGGINS, President.

Attest: D. MCDANIEL, Sec.

I am ready and willing to go anywhere in "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and bear me "at the time appointed."

Having no means of my own, my travelling expenses will have to be met from some other source. Let the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, and at accessible points in Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, who desire a course of Biblical Lectures, address me each at Anna, Union county, Ill.

AMOS SANFORD.

OUR REST:

A Magazine bearing on the questions of Salvation, and Prophetic Inquiry.

EDITED BY T. WILSON, AND H. V. REED

"There remaineth therefore a Rest to the people of God. * * * Let us labor therefore, to enter into that Rest."—Heb. iv. 9, 11.

PROSPECTUS.

The object of this Magazine will be to present in as clear a manner as possible, things concerning the Kingdom of God and the Name of Jesus Christ, together with such expositions of prophecy as will be profitable to the reader. The object is gratis: detail may be stated as follows:

1. To introduce Bible testimony as to the nature occasion and subject of the Kingdom of God.

2. To point out its intimate connection of the Name of Jesus with our salvation.

3. The past, present and future mission of Christ as the Savior, Priest and King.

4. The Restoration of Israel from their long dispersion, and their re-settlement in the land of Palestine.

5. The Destruction of the Wicked, as well as the Bible teaching concerning Hell.

6. The Nature of Man, and his entire dependence upon God for Eternal Life.

7. The word of prophecy as fulfilled in the past, and as it is now being fulfilled before our eyes, pertaining to the return of Jesus to establish his Kingdom of Righteousness and Peace on the earth.

Such is a brief outline of the design of "OUR REST." It remains for the reader to say whether or not he can consistently assist in its circulation. If so desires the instruction we shall give, or if he would convey it to others, we shall gladly enter into same upon our list upon receipt of the subscription price.

Annihilation and Retreat of Future Punishment. By Henry Constable, A. M. This is an able and clearly written argument. We recommend it to those who wish to learn what the Scriptures teach upon the subject. Fifty-seven pages. Octavo. Price 25 cents.

Nature's Mirror. A book of proverbs, or short comprehensive sentences, a very fine collection of original matter. By J. H. Wilson. Eighty pages. Price 25 cents five for $1.00.

BOOKS.

Orville's Concordance to the Bible. Of course no student of God's Word can do without it. Cloth binding $1.00, sheep $1.25, half calf $1.75.

Life and Death. By Jacob Blain. This is not a new publication, but bears the name for being old. It is full of argument and Scripture quotations upon the subject treated of, and in many respects is a useful campaign document. Price 25 cents.

English Bibles, with marginal readings and references between the verses. They are printed on clear, strong paper and well bound. Plain Roan Binding, gilt edges, $1.50. Full Turkey Morocco, gilt edges, $2.00. Another one with larger type, beautifully printed and easily read by failing eyes. Roan binding $3.75. Turkey Morocco $4.00.

The Doctrine of Immortality. By James H. Whitemore. This is a work that has been in demand several years. But is an exhaustive treatise upon the subject of immortality, and sets forth the Bible view in a masterly manner. Every student should have it in his library for reference, as well as one in handing to those who are feeling after truth. It contains 340 pages. Paper covers, 50 cts etc.

Kingdom's Kingdom containing the original Greek Text of what is commonly styled the New Testament, according to the Recension of Dr. S. P. Tregelles, with Interlineary Word for Word English Translation; a new Emphatic Version, based on the Interlineary translation, on the recension of eminent critics, and on the various readings of the Vatican Manuscript (No. 1209 in the Vatican Library) together with illustrative and explanatory foot notes, and a copious selection of references to the whole of which is added a valuable Alphabetical appendix, 442 pages, 12mo, bound really in muslin. Price $2.00. Extra binding $3.00.

THE RESTITUTION.

The Bride's Petition.

Come, Lord, and tarry not;
Bring the long looked-for day:
Oh why these years of waiting here?
These ages of delay?

Come, for thy saints still wait;
Daily ascends their sigh:
The spirit and the bride say, Come!
Dost thou not hear the cry?

Come, for creation groans,
Impatient of thy stay;
Worn out with these long years of ill,
These ages of delay.

Come, for the foe are strong;
With taunting lip they say,
"Where is the promised advent now,
And where the dreaded day?"

Come, for the good are few;
Thine are the voice in vain:
Faith wanes fainter on the earth,
And love is on the wane.

Come, for the truth is weak,
And error goes abroad
Its subtle poison o'er the earth—
An earth that hates her God.

Come, for the grave is full;
Earth's tombs no more can hold;
The sated sepulchre cries,
And groans the heaving mould.

Come, for the corn is ripe,
Put in the sickle now:
Reap the great harvest of the earth;
Sower and Reaper thou!

Come, and make all things new.
Build up this ruined earth,
Restore our faded paradise,
Creation's second birth.

Ballooning.

On Thursday, July 15, 1875, Prof. Donaldson and Mr. Grimwood, accompanied in the balloon P. T. Barnum, from Chicago. The wind carried them N. E. over the lake at twenty miles an hour. At 8:20 P. M. they met a violent storm in mid-lake which undoubtedly destroyed them. The ascension was grand beyond description. Gracefully and majestically the balloon rose skyward with its precious cargo of human freight, while anxious thousands watched it with prayerful interest from below. But alas! it was a fatal voyage. No more will Donaldson sail through aerial space, sustained by treacherous gas, and guided by uncertain winds. The elements have overcome his brave soul, and without doubt he has sunk in Lake Michigan. Perhaps with his balloon riven by a thunderbolt, he was precipitated from a great height into a watery tomb. In which case he was killed by the fall. Or, perhaps, his gas having failed, and coming to the surface of the water, he was destroyed by the fury of the wind and the waves. In either case, horrible must have been his death. While we can but admire the bravery and daring of this intrepid man we must believe that the enterprise of navigating the air is largely one of foolhardiness, unwisdom and impracticability. It seems like tempting and daring Providence. But there is no cure. Even the tragic fate of Donaldson puts no quietus on the work. The very next day another balloon went up from this port, through wind and flood, with a human on board. And the papers bring us word of an ambitious German, who has invented an air ship in which he hopes soon to sail across the stormy Atlantic, with fifteen passengers and several bags of U. S. mail. Woe be to rail and steam ships if this enterprise proves successful.

A matter worthy of mention in connection with the sad fate of Donaldson is the utter failure that noted spirit mediums have made in their attempts to give reliable information as to the manner of the balloon's destruction. One medium brought from the spirit of the departed aeronaut this message:

"The balloon will be picked up and you will hear from it to-morrow. All hands are lost. Write to the Chicago Times and Journal, that the balloon is lost, and we are lost. Also that we threw out ballast, supposing we were near the land, when we suddenly dropped into the lake and could not rise the second time."

It is a little queer that casting out ballast should cause a balloon to sink. Donaldson has doubtless learned many new things since he has fallen into the hands of spirit mediums. In another seance, it was shown that the balloon had been torn to shreds in the tree tops of the Michigan pineries and the passengers met thus a horrid death. Another represented them as alive, wandering in these pineries, living on berries, and said they would soon be found alive and well, except a slight scratch which one received as their air ship was descending. It is strange that Donaldson's spirit should give so many differing accounts.

But this shows that J. G. Saxe was right when he penned the following pithy advice to spirits:

"If in your new estate you cannot rest,
But must return, grant us this one request:
Come with a noble and celestial air,
And prove your titles to the names you bear
Give some clear token of your heavenly birth;
Write as good English as you wrote on earth;
And what were once superfluous to advise,
Don't tell, I beg you, such egregious lies."

There is some difference of opinion as to the value of aeronautical voyages. Some regarding them as of vast importance to the human family, others looking upon them as useless and dangerous, and yielding no good result. I incline to the opinion expressed in the following paragraph from the N. Y. Times of a recent date:

"But, for all practical purposes, the information is as valueless as would be the anatomy of the minutest animalcule. Indeed, one of the ablest and most thoughtful aeronauts, Mr. Glaisher, admitting the practicability of aerial navigation, says that the usefulness of the balloon is chiefly that of an observatory so far removed above the ordinary disturbances of earth that the phenomena of the atmosphere may be scanned with an exactness nowhere else attainable. What value these observations may have is quite another question.

When we consider the problem of navigation of the air, however, we find absolutely nothing gained in all the experiments of centuries. The flying machine is apparently as far from realization as ever. Inventions numberless and promising have been brought out, but failure has overtaken them all. To be sure, a ship to voyage the skies would not seem to us a greater wonder than the inventions of Watt, Fulton, and Stephenson would have to the early settlers of this continent; and we are continually reproached by hair-brained inventors, with being as stupid sceptics, as those who derided Morse, Brunel, and all other daring inventors. The success of these men continually beckons on the dreamers who lumber the patent office with models which have no working counterpart in science or mechanics."

The following on the history of ballooning is of interest:

The first balloon was sent up by the brothers Stephen and Joseph Montgolfier, June 5, 1783. It was not long before men were found to venture their lives on such a journey into the air; even to the year of its discovery there were several ascents made by different persons, and with safe results. The balloons used were at first the ordinary hot-air Montgolfiers; but a few months were necessary to utilize the hydrogen gas, whose superiority was evident, on account of its greater lightness. In 1785, occurred the first fatal accident from the use of a balloon. Two young men attempted to cross from France to England in a hydrogen balloon to which a hot-air balloon was attached. The latter took fire, both were consumed, and the two men fell on the coast of France and perished.

The most eminent aeronaut was an Englishman named Green. His career extended over thirty-six years, during which time he made 1,409 ascensions, crossing the North sea three times, and falling into it twice. On one occasion he traveled a distance of 500 miles in eighteen hours. This was, however, surpassed by Wise and La Mountain's great trip in 1859, when they passed from St. Louis to Henderson, N. Y., a distance of about 1,500 miles, in less than twenty hours, or at an average velocity of a mile per minute. This was, we believe, the longest aerial voyage ever made, while the highest ascent was made by Glaisher and Coxwell, who reached the remarkable elevation of 37,000 feet, or about seven miles above the earth. They were soon disabled by the intense cold prevailing at that altitude, lost the use of their limbs, and Coxwell was obliged to pull the valve string with his teeth, in order to release the gas and return to a warmer region.

Certain emergencies have occasionally made the balloon very useful. It was employed during our civil war to watch the motions of the enemy in and around Richmond. Gen. Porter was once watching the rebels from a captive balloon, when the cable broke and he was carried over the confederate lines; but on pulling the valve the machine descended, and a favorable wind took him back to his own forces.

The most notable use ever made of balloons was during the siege of Paris by the Germans, in the last war. When the city was completely invested, the project of sending out a mail balloon was conceived and put in execution, the first one leaving Paris Sept. 23, with 227 pounds of letters, and descending at Evreux. Until the close of the war balloons were constantly being dispatched, some carrying letters, others passengers. More than sixty in all were sent out, most of which were utilized by the postoffice department, which forwarded in all about 2,500,000 letters. Among those who took this means of escaping from the devoted city was Gambetta. Many of these ballons were carried far beyond the French boundaries, one landing in Norway, 800 miles north of Christiania, while some fell into the hands of the Prussians. One, in passing over the Prussian lines, was fired at so often, that the aeronauts became much alarmed, and were forced to ascend several hundred feet to escape the balls which whistled around them. It is difficult to conceive a more frightful situation than that to which those travelers were exposed.

As to accidents by ballooning, the following from a veteran aeronaut is of interest:

It may be deemed a hazardous mode of investigation to sail up into the air three or four miles high, but when we take into comparison the number of air voyages made, and the accidents related to them, we shall find as favorable results as in sea voyages. I have accounts of thirteen balloons that exploded while high in the air with their occupants, two of them with myself, while above the clouds, and in none of these was any one injured. The law of atmospheric resistance is as certain as the law of atmospheric buoyancy. I even controlled the collapsed descending balloon from falling into a piece of woodland, by lightening the weight in the disposal of ballast, and thus skirted beyond the trees.

So far as I have investigated accidents with balloons, not a single case occurred from any intrinsic principle of danger connected with the art. Not so with the sea-ship. These two elements, wind and water, coming in conflict, cause the destruction of the vessel. Water, nearly a thousand times denser than air, and the air moving against the ship with the velocity of a hundred miles per hour, and the immense mast leverage, must necessarily bring a tremendous force upon its framework. Not so with the air-ship. It has but one element around it, and, once free in the air, it matters not, so far as its ability to stand the strain is concerned, whether the wind moves one mile or one hundred miles per hour. Even with the latter velocity, your vessel glides along so smoothly and gracefully as not to ruffle a cob-web suspended from its flagstaff. Did you not perceive objects on the earth receding and approaching, it would be impossible to discern that you were moving at all. I traveled forty miles in forty-eight minutes in the midst of a cloud stratum, without being aware that I had moved forty rods before landing.

When accidents have occurred with balloons, they were always attributable, either to defective construction or a want of ordinary skill in the persons operating them. It is a deplorable truth that many, if not most, persons who use balloons are not scientific. And yet, this class have generally the most marvellous stories of blood oozing from their finger ends, and the balloon turning topsy-turvy, and the miraculous escapes they have made, to relate.

Prof. S. A. Wise in a paper read before the Franklin Institute claims that:

"The phenomena of the clouds are full of interest. Some are dense, and some are attenuated. Some are warm, and some are cold. Some are light and some are dark. Some are charged with ozone. Passing through an ozone cloud causes hoarseness; it acts upon the mucous membranes, and is first perceptible by smell, and the twinging sensation it produces upon the cuticle of the hands and face.

When it is considered that we do not know, to this day, from whence the source of electricity in cloud phenomena—whether in storms it is a primary or a resultant; whether there is one kind or two kinds developed in a thundergust; whether the thunderbolt makes its detonation forcing its passage through the air, or in its percussion upon more solid matter; whether the bolt darts from one cloud to another, or whether it invariably darts to the earth—we should see all reasonable means to find out. The European scientists shot arrows into the air to learn something of atmospheric electricity. Franklin, always practical, not being able to get up into the clouds himself, set up his representative, the kite, and, in a moment, demonstrated a fact, which, for a thousand years, had been held in abeyance—the identity of cloud and machine electricity. The great philosopher, fearing the ridicule of the unlearned over a man flying a kite, went clandestinely out to Bush hill, under cover of his son, to try the mission of his aerial messenger, and it proved and settled the long mooted question."

Respectfully submitted.

CHICAGO, ILL.

—A resident of Pottsville, Pa., has a coin which has been decided to be a Hebrew shekel of the date of 335 B. C. It has on one side a representation of Aaron's budded rod, and on the other a priest's censer with incense. The same gentleman has an old Saxon coin, an Elizabethan shilling of 1601, and an English coin of 1623.

More Words to Preachers.

Speculation is poor stuff for the pulpit. "It is possible that this may be true," can be offset with, "It is possible that it is not true." What would have taken place if certain things had not happened, is nothing to anybody; for they have happened, and, therefore, what has taken place is what is to be considered. Men who are in danger, or who require instruction in righteousness, are in infinitely too great peril and have far too urgent need of knowledge, to hear a palaver about whether the stars are inhabited or not. Don't propound theories and bewilder souls. Don't, by philosophy (falsely so called), make more protracted or difficult the settlement of the question, "What is truth?" You call yourself a preacher, then preach. Proclaim. Stand and cry facts. Do not let your ingenuity turn and twist, and adapt, and accommodate Scripture until people lose sight of its primary meaning. Use the Book fairly. Do not phantomise the promises until all the reality is gone from them. When people cry for bread, they do not want the corn served up to them in distilled-spirit form.

When we say preach, we do not mean screech. As for whining and intonations, they are both unmanly. A dreadful face is repulsive. Business men hate cant and shuffling; and be sure, if you are up to either of these things, they will know it. There is much talk in the counting-house about the affectation of Parson So-and-so. Preach naturally; and be earnest in speech, because you feel earnest at heart.

Be informed. There were good preachers in the world before Will Shakspeare came upon the stage of life; so that he is not indispensable. The guesses of the old Grecian philosophers and the subtilities of mystics are so much refuse to one who is determined to preach the preaching which God bids.

Have something to say before you begin to make a say. It is astounding impudence for a man to rise to talk life and death matters, and not know what he will advance. To get up unprepared, cloudy in one's own understanding, augurs badly for the congregation who must sit and listen while you stammer out some strange incoherencies, with no logical consistency. Trusting to the Spirit when you do not know the letter of Scripture, is pious folly. If you would be informed for yourself, "Seek ye out of the Book of the Lord, and read." Give attention to your reading. Meditate upon the Scriptures day and night. Compare spiritual with spiritual. Interpret words in their philological sense. Use a classical dictionary if you do not understand certain Hebrew or Greek idioms. Avoid theological dictionaries, for in some cases they give senses to words which have been coined for them to suit error that has arisen. Give every man who may proffer you assistance in your studies credit for good will; but remember that good intention does not ensure absolute truth; so test all you hear by the Word of God.

Declare your convictions boldly. Mix prudence with courage. Who would thrust his head between the jaws of a lion, and risk its loss, without a contra possibility of gain? But do not excuse yourself from ever speaking what you believe to be important truth, because Jesus said to his disciples, "I have many things to say unto you, but ye cannot bear them now." If you dare not speak the truth, come down at once from the rostrum, and let a better man take your place. In all things, "Trust in God and do the right."

Personally, be generous in all your business transactions. Do not give men reason to say that the minister is the least satisfactory of his customers. Live by principles, and walk according to the Scriptural rule. Don't do what you condemn. Observe every plain commandment of Jesus; and don't say of any, "It is unimportant." Have your own house a model, wife and children all in subjection to Divine principles,—all in harmony with you. Hear, as a son of Abraham, what was spoken to your father in faith: "Walk before Me, and be thou sincere." Pray with implicit trust in God. Do not ask God for things contrary to his promises and the very opposite of his predictions. Sing joyfully to God, with soul and understanding. Beware of countenancing the worse than trash that is at present so captivating.

Do nothing purposeless. Do everything thoughtfully. Be completely ruled by the will of God. Live the same kind of life upon earth as Jesus lived.

In all matters of food and clothing study health rather than taste and custom. Be sensible first; and fashionable or unfashionable, as the case may be.

And as you may pursue the way of righteousness in word and behavior, we wish for you "God speed."—Bible Echo.

The Higher and the Highest Life.

We are discussing the question of holiness and consecration. Some of us use one class of terms and similes, and others a different phraseology. The most common is called the higher life. There are two kinds of "higher life" people—the one we like, and the other we dislike. Those who boast much of the possession of it, who run about with a Bible conspicuously in their hand, forcing their ecstatic experience upon people on all occasions, ever on the search for meetings and Bible readings, impatient with ordinary Christians, are to us more and more and more distasteful. We do not find them engaged in Sunday schools, or regular at prayer meetings, or to be depended on for help in church movements. It is their religion to feel good and to tell others how good they feel. We would not give the shoes of one of the old-fashioned Christians for fifty of these religious gad-abouts. Their coming is to us a grief, their departure a rapture.

The "higher life" which we admire is that which, putting full trust in God, goes out to work for him; does not talk much about itself, but a great deal about Christ and the attractiveness of his religion. We know scores of them, hard at work. You may always depend on them. They are ever to be found at the devotional meetings. They contribute liberally of their money instead of taking their service out in talk and prayer. The enthusiasm and perpetuity of their Christian doing tells their elevated experience more than though their lips announced it. That is the kind of "higher life" we admire—yea, that is the highest. We have but little interest in Christian people who go about telling how much they have of the love of God, yet doing little or nothing to evidence that fact. We have heard of half-grown schoolboys who boast of how many slices of bread they have eaten—some of them ten, some of them twenty-four. We have more admiration for a man who will eat two or three slices, and put the strength derived therefrom into practical effectiveness. There are many persons in this day advocating what they call the "higher life." We advocate the highest.—Talmage.

Our Department.

The Christian has a noble calling and a glorious destiny; and his department should correspond with the sublime idea of Christianity. Like a mirror, our lives may reflect the light of God's word. We have a rule of life in the Bible, and our department should correspond with this. The Bible teaches us to be a meek and lowly spirit; and so, by the help of the Lord, we should fashion our lives. The Bible teaches us to be humble; therefore humility should crown our lives, and all pride and self-esteem should be banished from the heart. Pride is one of our most deadly enemies, from which we should flee for our liver. Revenge is a part of fallen human nature, and has no part in a Christian life. To forgive, to return good for evil, is to love our enemies, and to pray for those who despitefully use us, often seems very hard for many people; yet it is a grand and beautiful part of the Christian system, and a glorious proof of its divine nature. When a person objects to this principle of Christianity it is an evidence that they have formed no correct idea of God-nature. Love for our enemies and the forgiveness of injuries is very hard, we may say impossible, if we trust in our own strength, but easy if we trust in a higher power, and rely upon the grace of Jesus.

As the crowning glory of the Christian character, we should cultivate in our lives the Christian virtues, such as righteousness, godliness, faith, love, patience, meekness, temperance, and brotherly kindness.

Do we want a pattern for our deportment in life? Let us follow Jesus; the department of Christ, while among men, both in the presence of his friends and bitter enemies, strikes our minds with its beauty. How pure and gentle and kind, yet firm and often startling in the rebuke of iniquity. We have the example of many good men whose deportment in life was in harmony with the divine word, and whose influence lives to-day, though they have long ago gone to their reward.

Our example and our influence will live when we have passed from mortal life. As an image of every object that falls upon the chemically prepared plate of the artist is left there; so our lives will leave an image in the hearts of those with whom we associate. Though the images we leave in the hearts of men may sometimes be invisible, yet subsequent events will cause them to flash forth; and their influence will be there for good or for evil. How important that our deportment in life should leave its influence for good in the hearts of all with whom we associate. Let godliness and purity of heart beam forth from the life of the Christian, and leave their blessed influence in the hearts of men.—Golden Censor.

Catholic Apostolic Church.

It is understood that the Catholic Apostolic congregation of London will soon leave its present room in the Opera House building, for one more convenient and accessible in Spring street, near Asylum avenue. This religious body has some practical methods which may be worthy of general adoption. All the expenses of worship are met by tithes and offerings; the former being put into a common fund, and applied to the support of the ministry; the latter are used for all other outgoes. No solicitation for pecuniary aid are ever made outside of the body it self, it being a principal acted upon that whatever is given to the Lord should be given voluntarily and of good will. All the customary means of raising money by fairs festivals, subscription papers, and the like, are rejected; nor is there any sale of slips or pew rents. The seats are free to all. All tithes and offerings are specially dedicated to sacred purposes before being used. The services of worship in the congregation here have necessarily been very imperfect, but will, its members hope, be enlarged as their number increases and the requisite ministers are set in their places. A full service can be only where there is a full organization, and in that case there would be service of prayer morning and evening each day of the year. Whether the change of location is to bring any immediate enlargement of the worship is to be determined.

Then and Now.

One of the most interesting features of the excavations in the buried city of Pompeii is the discovery of many homely domestic articles, of which we have counterparts. It is astonishing how many things in common use now were in use then. Here you see almost every kitchen utensil—portable cooking-stoves, jelly, cake and butter molds in the imitation of birds and bowers, pots, kettles, crocks, dishes, cups and saucers, spoons, knives and forks, dippers, skimmers, sauce-pans, frying-pans, lamps, lamp-stands, flesh-hooks, braziers for charcoal—in a word, pretty much every kitchen, dining-room, or chamber article found in modern use, entered into the economy of the daily life of Roman antiquity. All the articles of a lady's toilet, including jewelry of all kinds, gold and silver ornaments, corals and precious stones, were found in the houses of Pompeii. Taken from the retail shops were steelyards, balances, weights and measures. From a doctor's office were recovered a full set of surgical instruments, including "pullikans" for extracting teeth, and trepans for drilling holes in the skull. There are any number of shoemaker, tailor, carpenter, and blacksmith tools, and, indeed, implements of almost every present mechanical operation. The collection of articles taken from the dead city is a surprising revelation to everyone showing that the ancients invented and perfected 10,000 implements and articles of common life which we still use with little improvement thereon, and without giving them credit for.

Translation.

DEATH OF GEN. BLAIR.—At half past eleven o'clock, last night, all that was mortal of Francis P. Blair, Jr., passed from the earth to the better land.

This record of the "death of General Blair" is from the St. Louis "Democrat." But what a fearful mixing up of things we have in this paragraph. First it is the "death of Gen. Blair," then "all that was mortal passed to the better land." We are left the conclusion from this that after death Gen. Blair was transported to heaven. It certainly must have been that which is mortal that died, and that part went to the better land, according to the account. This editor find better read his Bible a little, and he will find that death and translation are not interchangeable terms. The doctrine of translation we find illustrated in three distinct cases. But the parties did not realize it by "tasting death," but the contrary—by being immortalized.

Transmigration.

The Hindoos still believe extensively in the transmigration of souls, that is, that when a person dies his soul passes into the body of another animal. The Maharajah of Cashmere was informed by the priest some time after the death of his father, Golab Singh, that the soul of the deceased king had passed into a fish. On hearing this the Maharajah decreed that no fish should be caught or eaten in his dominions. As the people of Cashmere live largely on fish, this was a great calamity. The priest therefore soon announced a new discovery, viz: that the soul of the late king had now migrated from the fish into a bird, and the Maharajah was relieved from the fear of eating his father.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.

All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

Letters for the Editor should be sent to the same place.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the wording of any writer is not endorsed, all article setting forth the views of the party differing may be furnished. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of rejecting those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Galileo.

When Rome raises her treacherous hand to strike down our common schools and offers us in their stead her own parochial schools, as superior by reason of combining the truly religious with the truly scientific it is well to remember that Rome has shown herself in the past to be the bitterest enemy of both, and Rome never changes. She is to-day the same uncompromising foe of progress she ever was; and for the best of reasons, intellectual and religious liberty, by which alone progress is possible, is the inveterate foe of Rome. Heaven and hell are not more opposed than Rome and freedom of thought. Her motto is "Ignorance is the mother of devotion." She well knows that the only safeguard of Rome lies in the impenetrable ignorance of the masses. Hence she first declaims against the use of the Bible in our common schools under the specious pretence that its use there favors sectarianism. By this cry she enlists sympathy and aid from a class of shallow pates who are unfriendly to the Bible, and are unable to penetrate the designs of this arch plotter against the liberties of mankind.

Having rid the schools of the Bible, she next claims, with admirable consistency and incredible impudence, to a portion of the school fund for the establishment of her separate parochial schools under the claim that our common schools are infidel in their tendency, as they do not combine religious with scientific instruction. Her evident aim is to overthrow all public instruction of the masses, and dole out to our children her driveling insultins instead.

It is not real instruction of any kind that she wants; she would catechize our children in her abominable creed, and in a single generation reduce America to the condition of Spain, Portugal or Mexico,—bound hand and foot and lying helpless at her feet. Let the Bible be excluded from our common schools, and in another generation she will be imprisoning our Galileos and burning our Brunos. Our land will be filled with spies and informers, the holy inquisition will be in full blast, and the blood of the friends of the Bible and of science will mingle in a common stream which will flow to the horses bridles.

Little do the sceptical and indifferent class who join in the outcry of Rome against the use of the Bible in our schools realize how completely they are playing into her hands and assisting in the ruin of our country. Let the friends of human freedom then, rally round our common schools, and the free and unsectarian use of the Bible therein. And for want of a better let the name of that remarkable man which stands at the head of our article be their watchword and battle cry. Rome bound and imprisoned Galileo, and in so doing she warred on all subsequent human progress. The world is more indebted to the genius of that wonderful man that is generally known or recognized.

"There is scarcely a branch of mechanical labor that has not felt the influence of his practical skill, or a modern inventor that has not owed something to his creative power. Of the vast network of machinery that sustains the fabric of modern civilization, there is no part that has not its trace of the labors of Galileo. He invented, improved, or embellished the barometer and thermometer, the pendulum and the magnet, hydraulic and military machines, the compass, the telescope and the microscope. A throng of less renowned instruments and engines, prepared by his delicate touch and unprecedented skill, flowed from his workshop. His treaties on mechanics, fortification, and the law of motion excited the emulation of Europe, and it was by his rare accomplishments as a practical mechanic that he was enabled to create that wonderful instrument whose revolutions have founded a new science, and penetrated the starry heavens."

When Rome raises the standard against the Bible in our common schools, let the battle cry of the friends of human freedom and progress be "Remember Galileo!"

J. F. WILLCOX.

"There is a Flaw."

BROTHER REED:—

In the RESTITUTION of July 28, there is an article written by J. F. Willcox, of Wisconsin, in which he seems to feel there is no flaw, and wishes if there is, it may be "pointed out at once."

His article opens as follows:

A MAJOR PROPOSITION AND ITS RESULT.

"Where no law is, there is no transgression."—Rom. iv. 15.

All arguments when stated in regular form, according to the rules of logic, require three things, viz: A major proposition, a minor proposition and a conclusion. As for instance,

Major P.—Everything that has life, sense and motion, is an animal.

Minor P.—This fly has life, sense and motion.

Conclusion.—Therefore this fly is an animal.

He then uses these propositions to prove that all men are sinners, without regard to any circumstances of unavoidable ignorance, so that all heathen of every age are sinners.

Without going into discussion with our friend on that point, suppose it is granted; does his conclusion follow?

Here it is:

The conclusion is, therefore, irresistable, that from Adam to Moses, from Moses to Christ and from Christ to the end of the world, those who have only the light of nature, as it is called, i. e., the whole antediluvian, patriarchal and heathen world who have not had God's revealed Word, but who have, nevertheless "sinned without law," shall never be raised from the dead. They are not entitled to life, nor worthy of the second death. Hence, God does not hold them amenable to a future judgment, but "as natural brute beasts they utterly perish in their own corruption."

What shall we think of a "conclusion" which, so far as relates to the heathen, overlooks and ignores the whole scheme of human redemption by Jesus Christ? Where does this writer see or take any notice of that illustrious personage who came "into the world, not to condemn the world: but that the world through him might be saved?" John iii. 17. Where in his article and "conclusion" shall we find any place for the apostle's declaration, "Where sin abounded, grace did much more abound?" Rom. v. 20. The main reason why the ignorant heathen all utterly perish, it would seem by our friend's mode of argument, is because their sin did not "abound more;" as it would have done had they possessed the "written law."

The question is not how much or how little men have sinned; but, Has God provided a remedy for sin? and has He determined to make known that remedy to all sinners? At this point our friend has made a tremendous "flaw:" he lost sight of love and mercy in Jesus Christ in giving his son to be "the propitiation for our sins; and not for ours only, but also for the sins of the whole world." 1 John ii. 2. He lost sight of "the Lamb of God which taketh away the sin of the world," (John i. 29,) and of the fact that "Jesus Christ gave himself a ransom for all men," (1 Tim. ii. 6,) and that God has pledged himself, by the mouth of the apostle, that this fact shall "be testified in due time" to all men. "The times and seasons," for this work, "the Father hath put in his own power;" and it is not for us to say that He is confined to this age or life to do the work which He has sworn to do in his own time.

Let us now show our friend's "flaw" by the use of his syllogistic method of major and minor propositions and conclusions:

1. "In due time Christ died for the ungodly."—Rom. v. 6.

All the heathen have been and are ungodly.—J. F. Willcox.

Therefore.—Christ died for them.

2. "Behold I bring you good tidings of great joy, which shall be to all people."—Luke ii. 10.

The heathen go to help make up "all people."

Therefore.—The heathen must hear the good tidings.

3. "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."—Mark xv. 15.

The heathen are included "among every creature."

Therefore.—The Gospel is to be preached to them all.

4. "The Son of God was manifested that he might destroy the works of the devil."—1 John iii. 8

Sin and death are works of the devil.

Therefore.—Sin and death will be destroyed.

5. "In thee and in thy seed shall all the families of the earth be blessed."—Gen. xii. 3; xxviii, 14.

All the families of the earth have never yet been blessed in Abraham and his seed.

Therefore.—It remains that they shall be in the future.

6. "Look unto me, and be saved, all the ends of the earth; for I am God and there is none else. I have sworn by myself, the word has gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return; that unto me every knee shall bow and every tongue shall swear."—Isa. xlv. 22, 23.

Every knee has never yet been bowed, nor every tongue confessed to God.

Therefore.—It shall be done in the future.

7. "God hath highly exalted Christ, and given him a name that is above every name; that at the name of Jesus every knee should bow, of things in heaven, and things in earth, and things under the earth; and that every tongue should confess that Jesus Christ is Lord to the glory of God the Father."—Phil. ii. 9-11.

But this has never yet been done.

Therefore.—It remains to be fulfilled.

8. "God so loved the world that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth in him should not perish, but have everlasting life."—John iii. 16.

Faith in Christ is absolutely essential to an endless life.

Therefore.—An opportunity to exercise faith is secured, by the plan of redemption, to every man that is born into the world.

9. Multitudes of the human race have never yet had an opportunity to believe in Christ.

"God will have all men . . . . . to come unto the knowledge of the truth." 1 Tim. ii. 4.

Therefore.—The Gospel shall be preached "to every creature," that all may have an opportunity to gain an endless life by faith in the Redeemer.

According to friend Willcox, the whole heathen world is to perish hopelessly. He says:

"The whole antediluvian, patriarchal and heathen world who have not had God's revealed Word, but, who have nevertheless 'sinned without law,' shall never be raised from the dead . . . . . as natural brute beasts they utterly perish in their own corruption.

In the previous part of this article he said:

"The death of Christ removes the Adamic sin and its penalty, unconditionally, absolutely, and universally. It is not affected by our faith or unbelief, by our knowledge or ignorance of its provisions."

Which of the above statements shall be believed? One or the other would seem to have a "flaw" in it, and a bad one too. Again he says:

"It was for a world of sinners that Christ died: to a world of sinners that He is preached. The things revealed in God's redemptive plan, as historically laid down in Holy Scriptures, are absolutely necessary to relieve man from not only the Adamic penalty, but also from the consequences of his own personal transgression."

How true the first sentence of this extract; let it ever be kept in mind. And shall the vast portion of the "world of sinners, that Christ died for," "perish utterly, as natural brute beasts," as my friend says they will—without ever having had an opportunity to know that Christ died for them?

The last sentence of the extract, above, seems to make a large "flaw" in his conclusion at the end of his article. If the "things revealed in God's redemptive plan are absolutely necessary to relieve man from the consequences of his personal transgression," then they must be "revealed" to all men, or made known to them, or Christ's dying for them was in vain, and God's love for them was not sincere: and his providence in keeping the knowledge of the fact that "Christ died for a world of sinners" is too dark to be explained; for, He allows "the whole heathen world utterly to perish, like natural brute beasts," says our friend. So they perish for the lack of knowledge which God did not and would not give them, notwithstanding He loved them so much as to give his Son to die for them.

I think my friend must be quite willing to mend some, if not all of these apparent "flaws" in his position; and if he will join in the first petition in the Lord's Prayer, viz: "Hallowed be thy name," he will strive with us to show our fellowmen that God's love for "the world of sinners", will not let them perish utterly like natural brute beasts till He has at least made known to them how great his love is, and given them an opportunity to accept that love by accepting Jesus Christ as their redeemer from sin and death. But few for whom Christ died have ever had such an opportunity; but God is pledged, that "in due time," —his own time,—they shall have one; and a "multitude, which no man can number, of all nations, kindreds, people, and tongues," will be seen "before the throne, and before the Lamb," who "have washed their robes, and made them white in the blood of the Lamb." Rev. vii.

This innumerable company is not the "little flock" to whom the kingdom is promised as "heirs;" but as such as have been brought to the service of God by the manifestation of Abraham and his seed, chosen out of the world, in the present and past dispensations, to be laborers in God's great redemptive plan; in the working of which, "Christ "will see of the travail of his soul and be satisfied." Isa. liii. 10. Then will the "serpent's head be crushed," and "the works of the devil be destroyed;" evil will have an end.

This great work is to be accomplished in the ages to come, after God has prepared his workmen, and the marriage of the Lamb has taken place; then "the Spirit and the Bride say come," and "whosoever will," may "take of the water of life freely."

As to Sodom, etc., let my friend read Ezek. xvi., and learn that Sodom's final destiny is not fixed, any more than Jerusalem's. But on this point I must not now dwell. God's promises must all be regarded as truth.

GEO. STORRS.

BROOKLYN, N. Y.

Money on Interest.

Can a Christian lend money on interest? See Ex. xxii. 25; Lev. xxv. 36, 37.

INQUIRER.

What is interest? Webster defines it to be "Premium paid for the use of money." In the texts referred to, the word usury is used in the sense in which interest is now understood. Webster defines usury as follows:

1. Formerly, interest; or a premium paid, or stipulated to be paid, for the use of money.

Usury formerly denoted any legal interest; but in this sense the word is no longer in use.

2. In present usage, illegal interest; a premium or compensation paid, or stipulated to be paid, for the use of money borrowed or returned, beyond the rate of interest established by law.

3. The practice of taking interest.—[Obs.] Bacon.

A Bible Dictionary says: "Usury, as employed by our version of the Bible means only interest. When our translation was made, the word usury had not assumed the bad sense which it now has."

In a Bible sense, usury is only interest and interest is usury. Let the question then be stated, "Can a Christian lend money on usury?" and who will take the affirmative? The Hebrew law declared: "Thou shalt not lend upon usury to thy brother; usury of money, usury of victuals, usury of anything that is lent upon usury. Unto a stranger thou mayest lend upon usury; but unto thy brother thou shalt not lend upon usury." Deut. xxiii, 19, 20. The texts cited by "Inquirer" positively prohibited usury among God's people. "But I say unto you which hear, Love your enemies, ... give to every man that asketh of thee, ... and as ye would that men should do to you, do ye also to them likewise . . . . and if ye lend to them of whom ye hope to receive, what thanks have ye? for sinners also lend to sinners, to receive as much again." Luke vi. 27-34.

How superior the words of Jesus to those of the law! Is there any doubt He prohibited all usury or lending upon interest among his followers? I think not.—Amos Sanford, in Bible Banner.

"The Coming Man."

It is something over forty years that I have been a tolerably diligent reader and competent judge of what is going on in the world. But if this expression, which is now so common, is not of comparatively recent date, it has entirely escaped my observation, and I should be indebted to any reader of the Record who could date it very far back.

If this is the case, then men have recently begun to turn their eyes towards some one who is coming—some particular one—some great one—some one who is to do some great things above and beyond anything ever yet done—perhaps put an end to all strife and corruption and abuses of all kinds—drive sin and sorrow from the earth, and bring man back to the state in which God created him; such a man would be worth looking for.

Now there are one or two curious things to be noted in this connection; just such a state of things obtained more than 1800 years ago. All men were looking for and talking about the "coming one," and finally, one appeared whose course seemed to show that he was something more than man, so that on various occasions the question was put to him: "Art thou the Coming One?" And he clearly admitted that he was, especially when he rode in triumph into Jerusalem and permitted the multitude to proclaim before him: "Blessed be the Coming King."

Another fact in this connection: No sooner had this "coming man" disappeared, having ascended in a cloud to heaven, than it was announced that he "shall so come in like manner as ye have seen him go."

Now, lastly, some think, and the number is increasing, that the "coming man" is this very same one who is to come the second time, and no more so far as we are told—that he is to come suddenly—as a thief in the night—that when he comes there will be no time to prepare to receive him—that those who are not ready, whether in the church or out of it, will be great losers.

These views are confirmed by what is said of him in the closing pages of Scripture where he is repeatedly spoken of as he "that was, and is, and is to come;" i. e., "the coming one," or "the coming man," the very same expression used concerning him before his first coming.

These things being so, whenever we hear or read of the "coming man," should we not say to ourselves, "Be ye also ready," and heartily add, "Even so, come, Lord Jesus?"—Footmilling's Record.

—The love of money made Ahaziah unite with the enemies of God, to his destruction; it made Achan violate an express command of the Almighty, which occasioned both his own death and that of all his family; it occasioned the fatal lie of Ananias, and under its influence Judas betrayed our Lord.

Hints on Preaching.

If a minister, through the blessing of God, would be powerful in converting men, let him abandon the idea of preaching for the mere purpose of preaching. Let him prepare and preach his discourses with a straight aim! Prettiness is not in place in the pulpit; certainly not in a revival. It is not the highest ideal of a sermon that it is precise and dignified and offends nobody's taste! Foster complained of Blair that he kept his thoughts so long standing to be dressed, that they were chilled through before leaving his hands. Sermons may be elaborated until they are spoiled. They may be so "perfect" as to be perfectly worthless! Some sermons appear to be

"—correctly cold, and correctly dull,
Faultily faultless, icily regular, splendidly dull."

Tholuck would call these literary properties "dried sweetmeats in a glass jar." Such sermons are good enough to lay away as embalmed beauties, but they are totally unfit to be preached to a living congregation. Souls never cry out under them. When ministers are full of the Holy Ghost they do not preach thus. The moment they are in earnest they preach in any way rather than this. And many a revival has been checked, and prematurely brought to a close, by not preaching plain and homely and solemn truths in a weighty and downright earnest manner. How few of us preach as if standing on the brink of eternity, with a God-given message for death-doomed sinners!

Imputed Righteousness.

If Christ's righteousness is imputed to fallen men to their salvation, could not the sins of the world be imputed to Christ as an exchange?

N. F. NASON.

The hypothetical part of the query contains a false assumption, which vitiates the entire sequence of the argument. It is not true that the righteousness of Christ is imputed to believers. The doctrine is found in the Westminster confession, but there is not a word of it in the New Testament. As this is not true, of course the conclusion drawn from it, that the sins of the world could be imputed to Christ in exchange, does not follow, neither is it taught in the Scriptures. —Bible Banner.

Correctly answered. The only means through which any of the benefits of Christ's atonement are to be obtained, is by believing what he has said, and obeying what he has commanded.

Jesus has brought life and immortality to light, through the Gospel.

He that believeth on me hath (prospectively) eternal life. Jno. iii. 36.

He that seeks for glory, honor, and immortality, God will render to him eternal life. Rom. ii. 6, 7. These affirmative declarations logically have their corresponding negatives. Therefore let no one depend upon the imputed righteousness of Christ, but upon his promises. M.

The Inexhaustible Book.

What a wondrous book this Bible of ours is! When you have read it through a score of times, you may have only strolled over the surface, looked at the land, or ploughed at most the upper soil. If you take one passage and dig deep for the treasure that coucheth beneath, you will find it inexhaustible. The Book has in it a matchless fulness. It were as possible to measure space, or to grasp the infinite in the hollow of your hand, as to investigate the entire compass of Holy Scripture. It is high; I cannot attain unto it. It is broad; I cannot reach its boundary. But oh, what an abundance of provision, and what a fullness of comfort there are stored up in the promises of God's Word.—Spurgeon.

Six hundred thousand dollars have been subscribed to start a paper in Vienna, from the editorial departments of which all Jews or "persons of Israelitish extraction" are excluded. All the other Vienna papers are, in a great degree, in the hands of this race.

A copy of the edition of the Bible printed by Guttenberg, at Mayence, between 1450 and 1456, recently discovered in the vestry of a church in Saxony, has been purchased by an English collector for £450. It is printed partly on paper, partly on parchment. It was presented to the church in 1072, and had lain nearly 200 years among the psalm-books and Bibles, being mistaken for a manuscript Bible.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....August 25, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ We are to spend next Sunday with the society in Plymouth. Preaching morning and evening.

☞ J. M. Stephenson is expected to be in attendance at the Northern Illinois and Wisconsin Conference, to be held at Union meeting house, Winnebago county, Ill., Sept. 10.

☞ A man in Massachusetts has written a book to prove that there will be two heavens—one for the women, the other for the men. The writer says nothing about two hells for the rest of folks.

☞ We spent last Sunday with the church at Goodland. The interest in the word of the kingdom remains unabated. Arrangements have been made for a series of meetings following our next appointment in four weeks from Sunday last.

☞ H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, published in Boston, has been preaching in London for some two months. The Bible Echo reports favorably of his labors, and says that he has won many friends by his visit to England. The Echo states that he will soon return to America.

☞ Just published at this office! a tract of sixteen pages, entitled "THE NEW BIRTH," or "A BIRTH OF WATER AND OF THE SPIRIT," by Josiah Pierce, of West Liberty, Ind. In this tract is found some good thoughts upon this subject. It can be had at this office at five cents per copy, or six copies for twenty-five cents.

☞ Our stock of leaflet tracts has been running low, until the last few days. We now have just had about fifteen thousand printed and are prepared to fill all orders. Distributing these tracts into the world is a cheap and an effectual way of preaching the truth, and brethren who are able to do so ought not to neglect sending in for them to hand out to their neighbors.

☞ Ira Fancher, an Adventist of Sandy Hill, N. Y., claims that the expression in Isaiah lxv. "A child shall die an hundred years old," refers to the American Republic, and that it will collapse on the day of the centennial, July 4, 1876; at which time the age will close. Seventh day Adventists claim that our government is the beast with two horns spoken of in Rev. xiii. A Methodist clergyman has written a large book to prove that the Mississippi valley is the Armageddon of prophecy. And still another speculator claims that it is the "land shadowing with wings beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." There seems to be no end to wild speculations among those who are unacquainted with prophecy.

☞ Just received from London, a supply of the work entitled "Bible Triumphant," by Mrs. H. V. Reed. Being a reply to a work entitled "One hundred and forty-four self-contradictions of the Bible," published by the Spiritualist, Andrew Jackson Davis. Of the merits of the work we give the following, in the words of Henry Constable, M. A., late Prebendary of Cork, Ireland. He says: "I have read 'The Bible Triumphant,' by Mrs. H. V. Reed, and considers it a very valuable work. It shows conclusively that the infidel boasting over the alleged 'self-contradictions of the Bible,' is without foundation. To all who may be troubled with doubts upon the subjects of which it treats, I cordially recommend this little volume. I would also recommend it to parents, to place in the hands of their children in these days of daring unbelief."

The World to Come.

But few people have any correct ideas of the Bible phrase, "The world to come." It is generally thought to be a vague realm, wherein intangible spiritual entities exist, having nothing especial to do but to sing and pray. the following lines, perhaps, express it better:

"Where congregations ne'er break up,
And Sabbaths have no end."

Everything literal and tangible has been reduced to mere figure, by this system, which deals merely in poetic fancies, and with the imagination.

The world to come, as revealed to us in the prophets, in no way resembles such a world as is alluded to above. They speak of realities. A city having foundations, was looked for by Abraham, a landed inheritance was included in the everlasting covenant, made with the fathers.

In that prophetic sweep of vision, which took in the everlasting kingdom of God, the prophets spoke of Zion and Jerusalem, of crowns and thrones, of hills and rivers, of trees and fruits. Names made sacred during the ages of suffering, are written on the gates of God's city and engraven on the foundations of its walls. Shall we have all the sufferings literal, and the glory nothing but metaphors? Was not paradise, wherein man was placed after his creation, a perfect type of that future kingdom promised all who overcome? And is it not promised that he who shall overcome shall eat of the tree of life in the midst of the paradise of God?

That view of eternal life which converts heaven into a big meeting-house with all the solitude of the Jewish Sabbath around it, is not desirable. The Psalmist informs us that at the right hand of the divine Father there are "joys and pleasures forevermore." He expected something more than a mere ecstasy of vision. His hope was that he would live in the presence of God's Anointed One, have all the blessings and immunities incident to a kingdom of peace. Indeed the promise is, that those who suffer with Christ are to reign with Him. In view of associations like these there is meaning in the words: "I shall be satisfied when I awake in thy likeness."

"The world to come," literally means in the Greek, the age to come; in other words it is another dispensation beyond this, wherein the church, which has been bowed down under the weight of the cross shall be exalted to wear the crown and share the honors of her Lord's kingdom. To see Abraham and all the prophets in the kingdom of God, as promised by Christ, is not a mere dream. To see the King in his beauty, to be in his city, and to enjoy companionship with angels, cannot be considered as mere fancies of the imagination or figures of speech. If the promised exaltation and blessings of Christ are worth anything they must be received as realities, as something tangible, otherwise the language is illusive, and the hope of the Gospel a mere speculation.

Particular Notice.

The success of the designs of our association absolutely demands the utmost prudence and economy in the management of its financial department. Some of our subscribers are getting so far in arrears that we shall reluctantly be compelled to part company with them, and drop their names from our mailing list, unless we hear from them without delay. Each one of our subscribers can easily ascertain the time to which his subscription is paid, by examining the date on the small directing slip attached to each paper. We shall revise our list before another issue. The names of those who have become remiss or neglectful in remitting dues, must of necessity be erased from our books. All who desire a continuance of the paper can at least prepay for the short term of three months, after paying past dues. We wish to do all we possibly can for our brethren and friends, but our expenses must be carefully provided for. Will all give this their speedy attention.

The Baptism.

The great things spoken of in prophecy, embracing the Gospel plan of the resurrection, the kingdom of God under the whole heaven, and the peculiar honors of the princely priesthood in the ages to come, were some of the interesting topics discussed by the proclaimers of God's Word, at Rensselaer, during the session of the late annual conference at that place. With all the impressiveness and authority of inspired truth, they addressed these themes to the assembled multitudes, who listened with the most profound attention, to a delineation of the promised blessings which all God's children are to inherit when the resurrection of all things spoken of by the prophets shall have been accomplished.

Those ministers spoke of the church in its resurrection glory; of the earth's re-genesis; of its surpassing beauty and loveliness when all shall be made new; of its fruitfulness when the tree of life shall once more blossom, and bear its monthly harvests. In a world-wide paradise; of the good government of King Messiah, when each shall sit under his own vine and fig tree, and none to molest or make afraid; of the preciousness of the promises made to Abraham and his seed; of the way by which the Gentiles might become fellow-heirs with the once suffering, now exalted, and soon coming Christ of God.

Under the exhibition of these sublime doctrines some hearts were touched. They learned that those that walk in the ways of righteousness, and love wisdom shall INHERIT SUBSTANCE. The substanceless bauble of an immaterial heaven vanished away. The irrepressible desire to become an heir of God, and a joint heir with our Lord Jesus Christ, to an inheritance so heavenly, brought some mentally to make the solemn inquiry: "What must I do to be saved?"

The invitations to yield the obedience of faith, as discourse after discourse was preached to listening audiences, were complied with on the part of a few, as the solemn praises of concluding hymnals ascended heavenward. The good confession—that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of God, and Savior of all who trust in Him—was made before many witnesses. They fully recognized in Him the one all-sufficient sacrifice for sin, and the one through whom God is to fulfill all the promises. They professed an entire willingness to become his disciples, and to commend themselves wholly to his guidance and keeping until the day of redemption.

The Lord's day dawned upon the world, and a crowded congregation convened at the house of worship. The minister spoke on the subject of the conversion of the Philippian jailor with pathos and effect. The morning services closed, and the crowd wended its way to the banks of the Iroquois, a tributary of that great Father of Waters, the mighty Mississippi. Nature's groves in their brightest robes of green foliage, shaded the multitude, and hung out their branches dependent over the river. The day was one of that tempered harmony of light and shadows, emblematical of the joys and sorrows of human life, and so prophetically representative of that sky, part clear, and part clouded, that overarches the desert pathway of pilgrims journeying toward the heavenly country. During a preparatory delay, the easy terms of acceptance and reconciliation were ably and feelingly set forth. At length the form appeared upon the margin of the stream, who had determined to enter into the divine relationship, to lead the God-like life, and wait for the coming and kingdom of Jesus Christ.

Robed for the watery burial was a young sister, who, in the bloom and beauty of youthful prime, had determined to consecrate herself to One, who, when he loves his own, loves them to the end. The administrator led her down into the flowing current, and, repeating the formula of the great commission, in its relation to that only name given under heaven by which we must be saved, the name of Jesus, placed her under its cover, for the remission of sins, and a translation into the church of the living God. Noble daughter of the Lord Almighty! She was the first to heed the heavenly call at the meeting. May it be hers to sing among the morning stars, amid the grandeurs of the new creation.

The next was a young man who had learned that God would bring about a restitution of all things, and grant a resurrection to eternal life, to all the holy dead. He was desirous to be numbered among the faithful here, that he might inherit with them hereafter. He too was placed under the merciful atoning name to wait the coming of the world's Ruler and Deliverer. Another came forward; a venerable man upon whose temples the snows of age had fallen. He had been connected with one of those denominations who look for a heavenly bliss in that far-away region beyond time and space. But he heard of Immanuel's land; the Abrahamic inheritance; of earth made new, and filled with the glory of God, and he felt a desire to go in with all the children. He too was buried in the waters of holy baptism and came into the name of the confirmer and fulfiller of God's covenanted blessings. The whitening locks of age were a needed set off to youthful loveliness.

Then came one in manly strength, in all the robustness of middle life. In symbolism and modal representation, he obeyed a form of doctrine significant of the Redeemer's resurrection, and of the future great out-rising of the saintly dead.

At length all stood on the shore. The tributary of the river of men*, in its passing waves, rolled onward to the great water, the father of floods.† After receiving the welcome and congratulations of the brethren and sisters of the Great Father's household, the assembly dispersed. The day, like all other days, retreated into the shadowy past, to be lost in the gone-by eternity, like the years beyond the flood.

The maiden, the young man, the man of years, and the man of middle life, have separated to meet beyond the vale of tears. When the fadeless crowns shall be given, in the kingdom to be established under the whole heaven, may they and we share in the undying life and honors of the world to come. Some others were almost persuaded to become Christians, but they went away from that meeting unsaved and in their sins. The Gospel message will soon find a wearer for the last crown of glory. Whose will it be?

Paul's Logic.

There is not a single example, in Paul's writings, of a formal statement of a syllogism. He sometimes deduces a conclusion from the premise in a logical form; but he generally affirms the premise and conclusion, without the process of inductive reasoning. He frequently affirms a premise which is axiomatic. No argument or logic can make such statements plainer or more cogent. Such is the case in the passage before us. Assuming as a fact that that there are men without law, he deduces the conclusion that such have not transgressed law. He continues repeating the same asseveration to the close of his great argument. Thus he says: "For as many as sinned without law shall also perish without law: and as many as have sinned in the law shall be judged by the law." Rom. ii. 12. Here it reads "without law" and "in the law." The contrast is between law and no law. The qualifying phrase "as many" demonstrates that not all who were without law disobeyed; and that not all with law obeyed. Why use the phrase "as many as sinned without law," if all without law sinned? In that case there would have been no "as many" about it.

Where we read that "As many as were ordained to eternal life believed," are we to understand that all men were ordained to eternal life? But the following text just as clearly proves that one class obeyed without law, as the foregoing proves that another class sinned without law. It reads, "For when the Gentiles, which have not the law, do by nature the things contained in the law, these having not the law, are a law unto themselves: Which shew the work of the law written in their hearts, their conscience also bearing witness, and their thoughts the meanwhile accusing or else excusing one another," verses 14-15. Please observe:

1. To do the things contained in the law was certainly to obey the law.

2. The class of men who did the things contained in the law did not have the law.

3. "As law" is spoken of in contradistinction to "the law."

4. The phrase "the law" in every occurrence relates to the written or revealed law.

5. It was the law that was written in the hearts of the Gentiles. They showed forth "the work of the law written in their hearts." The work was not written in their hearts; it was written in their actions. "The law," which related to and determined the quality of their works, was "written in their hearts." The subject of the verb written, is law, qualified by the definite adjective "the." Both of these classes of Gentiles, to whom the apostle refers in these passages, were instructed in reference to the law, having learned the principles and precepts of the law from the Jews.

Thus the apostle continues in an unbroken chain of argument: "Behold, thou art called a Jew, and rested in the law, and makest thy boast of God; and knowest his will, and approvest the things that are more excellent, being instructed out of the law; and art confident that thou thyself art a guide of the blind, (Gentiles) a light to them which are in darkness. An instructor of the foolish, a teacher of babes, which hast the form of knowledge of the truth in the law. Thou, therefore, that teachest another, teachest thou not thyself? Thou that preachest, a man should not steal, dost thou steal? Thou that sayest that a man should not commit adultry, dost thou commit adultry? Thou that abhorrest idols, dost thou commit sacrilege. Thou that makest thy boast of the law, though breaking the law, dishonorest thou God? For the name of God is blasphemed among the Gentiles through you as it is written. For circumcision verily profiteth, if thou keep the law; but if thou be a breaker of the law, thy circumcision is made uncircumcision. Therefore, if the uncircumcision keep the righteousness of the law, shall not his uncircumcision be counted for circumcision? And shall not uncircumcision which is by nature, if it fulfill the law, judge thee, who by the letter and circumcision dost transgress the law." Rom. ii. 17-27.

In summing up the foregoing testimony of the apostle, we wish it distinctly understood that the phrase "the law" invariably refers to the Jewish law:

1. "To do the things contained in the law." ver. 14.

2. To "keep the righteousness of the law." ver. 26.

3. To "fulfill the law," ver. 27.

4. To "have the law written in their hearts." ver. 15.

The foregoing phrases denote the knowledge, the love and obedience, by the Gentiles, of the law which was "written law." The foregoing texts cannot be reconciled with any position except that the Gentiles, to whom the apostle refers, had been taught the principles and precepts of the law; and that the knowledge of these principles and precepts had been written in their hearts, in contrast with the letter of the law written in the book. (ver. 27, last clause.) And when the circumcision "did by nature the things contained in the law," "kept the righteousness of the law," or fulfilled the law written in their hearts," they should be justified; but when the circumcision, or Jews who had the letter of the law (ver. 27) should transgress, they should be condemned. vers. 22-23.

2. According to the foregoing quotations, the Jews were the "teachers," "instructors," "teachers" from whom the Gentiles learned the law, which was written in their hearts. Among the moral lessons which the Jews had taught the Gentiles, was one teaching that it was sacrilege to worship idols, also that theft and adultry was heinous sins. But the glaring inconsistencies of these teachers in practicing the same vices from which they taught the Gentiles to abstain, had caused the name of God to be blasphemed among these Gentiles. ver. 24.

We have an extract from history, stating that in the days of the apostles the Jews were settled among all the nations of earth. They were the nucleus of every church founded by the apostles. They had prepared the Gentiles, through the teachings of their Scriptures, to receive the preaching of of the apostles wherever they should go, so that they could understand the apostles' appeals to the law and the prophets. Upon any other hypothesis, the constant appeals of the apostles to the Old Testament Scriptures to confirm their testimony, would have been as meaningless, as appeals to the Koran among a people who had never heard of such a book. That the Gentiles had been thus instructed is further evident,—

1. From the declarations of the apostle that they held "the truth in unrighteousness," Rom. i. 18.

2. For "when they knew God, they glorified him not as God * * * they were vain in their imaginations, and their foolish hearts were darkened," ver. 21.

3. They had "changed the truth of God into a lie;" and for this cause God had "given them up unto vile affections." vers. 23-24.

4. Did uninstructed heathen "know the truth and righteousness of God?" Had they forgotten God? Had they "turned the truth of God into a lie?" Did they have "the law of God written in their hearts?" If they had the knowledge of God, the truth of God, and the law of God written in their hearts, they knew enough to save them if they lived up to all this light, or if they rejected it, to make them amenable to the second death. They were more enlightened than ninety-nine hundredths to-day, who have the Bible.

But according to the position of some, relative to the law to which the Gentiles were amenable, the evidence is just as clear that one class obeyed the law, as that the other class disobeyed it. If to sin is to transgress the unwritten law, then to "do the things contained in the same law, is certainly to obey that law; and if non-resurrection is the penalty for sinning without the written law, then resurrection must be the reward of obeying without the written law. Or will it be claimed that the same penalty will be inflicted upon obedient Gentiles that shall be upon the disobedient? If this position is true, all the heathen, and all the infants, will suffer the same penalty that those who reject the gospel shall suffer; for everlasting destruction, or everlasting death, can have no degrees. In misery there may be degrees, but in death there can be no degrees. The mere incident of man having died one death previously, will not change the nature of everlasting death. Those who sin in "the times of restitution" will only die one death for their personal sins; and yet they will suffer the same penalty that those who die the second death shall suffer. All that our opposers say about men being saved in ignorance of God, or the Bible, or independent of the death of Christ, or in reference to a "second death" is purely ad captandum. They ought to know that we advocate but one fair chance, and that through the faith and obedience of the gospel. They teach a second chance for all to whom the gospel has been preached in every age. According to their position, the race have had a fair chance, independent of the knowledge of Christ, the atonement, the gospel, or Bible. If this is so, has not God given billions a second chance by giving them his revealed will? Did not the apostles give the heathen world a second chance by preaching the gospel to them? Will not the heathen world have a second chance during the coming age? Either the position that the light of nature has given the heathen world a fair chance, is true, or it is not true. If it is true, then the revealed word of God, seers, prophets, angels, Christ, his apostles, the spirit, and all gospel preachers, have given unnumbered billions a second chance. There is no avoiding this conclusion. All the logic in the world cannot deliver the opposers of the fair chance theory from this dilemma. And what is the most unfair and palpably partial, is that this second chance offers eternal rewards for loyalty, whereas the first chance offers no rewards at all; but condemns infants, adults, young and old, good and bad, to one common end. For argument sake we will concede his right to coin any word or words he may choose, and read them into Paul's major propositions, and into his minor propositions, and the conclusions deduced therefrom; but he must abide the consequence of reading these same qualifying words in wherever the law occurs qualified by them, from the beginning to the ending of the apostle's argument, and especially in the passages he quoted, refering to one and the same law. To accommodate our opposers, we will read in the qualifying adjective written or revealed: "But sin is not imputed where there is no written or revealed law." Thus, where there is no written or revealed law, there is no transgression. Why is there no transgression where there is no law. Answer—sin is not imputed where there is no revealed law. Infants and heathen have no revealed law; therefore no sin is imputed to infants and heathen. Thus, those who sin without "written or revealed law shall perish without written law; and those who do the things contained in the written law shall be justified." ver. 13. At least they shall not be condemned; for "where there is no written law, there is no transgression;" because sin is not imputed where there is no revealed law. Thus, the qualifying words, revealed or written, condemns the theory they are quoted to sustain. But nothing is clearer than the fact that Paul refered to a class of apostate Gentiles.

Waiting.

Long for my Savior I've been waiting,
Long time have watched by night and day,
Feared lest my faith and hope abating,
I should lose courage by the way.

CHORUS:
Jesus soon is coming,
This is my song,
Cheers the heart when joys depart,
And foes are pressing strong.

Here in this vale of sin and sorrow,
I have been wandering many years,
Still looking for that happy morrow
When God would wipe away my tears.

Oft times the tempter comes in power,
Fain then would lead my steps astray;
But when the clouds begin to lower,
Hope turns the darkness into day.

Oh, it will be but little longer,
I shall these many woes endure,
Then be my faith and hope grow stronger,
My Father's promise still is sure.

Something for Thought—Especially for Bible Men.

Some brethren, whom I have known only to love and admire for their manly and Christian qualities, seem to me to be living now under a strong bias of mind, that leads them to reject the great "burden of the word of the Lord," in promise and prophecy."

And as I remember how blind I have been, and "slow of heart to believe all that the prophets have spoken," I wish to consider myself, and do for them as I would have them do for me. That is, be patient, speak the truth in love, and let all be done in charity.

Brother N. Fields, in a private letter opens his heart so frankly that it seems nothing ought to be needful but that the truth be made plain, as to his theme, touching Israel, to insure its reception by him.

Indeed, our best Advent brethren,—editors and preachers,—seem never to have reached the subject of Israel except as cast away everlastingly; and with the mistake that the gospel age is final, and that all mercy proper circumscribed to the church within it.

A cluster of such misapprehensions was nourished in us all. So that the gospel of the kingdom was narrowed down to the gospel of the church.

Then the second advent was to crush out all HOPE to Jew and Gentile, and all hope of life beyond! It was reversal from salvation to destruction. It was made not to fulfill the law or the prophets, but to destroy (subvert) them. The Redeemer was to come to Zion, not to turn away ungodliness from Jacob, but to blast them out of being at once! The great sabbath, the 1,000 years, the Lord's day, was lost or evaporated into eternity! Thus the first fruits were taken for all the harvest.

My paper might be filled with statements of such profound contradictions of the truth and grace by Jesus Christ; but enough if I have arrested attention to some primal parts of the gospel system that seem thus to have been overlooked, in their essential features, as they apply to "Israel and the left of the nations." Zech. xiv.

To these brethren I confess that if I occupied their position as to the finality of the gospel system in this present evil world, I should be compelled to their low and lean views, of course. But as they need the "law and the testimony" further to enable them, "in God's light to see light" beyond; I now waive the direct assertions of inspired men, and ask a hearing to what seems unmistakable truth as it is interwoven into the primal and most profound facts, and phrases, and figures, and illustrative personages throughout the Bible.

I. The Redeemer of the New Testament has no name that is more endearing to the mind and heart of these brethren. But we trace this charmed title of Jesus back to all that is most attractive, most winning, most humane and most divine in the character and good offices of God's ancient people. Read the book of Ruth.

Boaz was redeemer, deliverer, protector, friend and near kinsman to Naomi and Ruth. The tender affection, the loving care, the kind provision, the honorable guardianship and godly fidelity, to restore the family of the dead, transcends our present human nature, except as it was there enlightened and exalted to set forth the loftier theme of human redemption by Jesus, our Redeemer.

As this thought came, and I read the book of Ruth, and the law of redemption, my heart melted to tears. I felt like weeping aloud with many fears of loving trust in God, who hath ever loved us with an everlasting love, and sent Jesus to be above Boaz in his yet unfolding purpose of love to man; and earth his inheritance! "Herein is love, not that we loved God, but that He loved us," and sent us a Savior, "to be the Savior of the world." 1 John iv. 10-14.

If this one sweet word and gracious office of Redeemer is appreciated, brethren, beloved!—if the primary office of redemption by Boaz did deliver and not ultimate in destruction to the family of the dead, how can the heavenly Redeemer fill his highest sphere, on his throne of power, by condemning the people! condemning the world he came to save!!

Note. The agonies of Israel under the Gentiles, Dan. viii. 11, Matt. xxiii. 37-39, the travailing groans of the whole creation, like those of Naomi's family by Boaz, are to end in the redemption of the purchased possession. Eph. i. 14, Rom. viii. 22; xi. 26-29; Mat i. 21; ii 6; xix. 28; Heb. viii. 1-12. The "Redeemer shall come to Zion (as deliverer,) and turn away ungodliness from Jacob: for this is my covenant with them, when I shall take away their sins." "Jesus died for that nation: and not for that nation only—in his days Judah will be saved and Israel shall dwell safely—His name is the Lord, our righteousness." Jer. xxiii. 5-6; John xi. 50-51; Isa. lx. 5-7. Balaam and Balak, with all their enchantments could not recall "the commandment to bless." Of course we should join in and work with God's purpose, and pray for the peace of Jerusalem, and accept the attendant promise. In the spirit of Christ I ask who can resist such redemption?

II. The first born obtained his official importance from his relation to the household, the people of whom he was the first-born. The birthright was Joseph's. 1 Chron. v. 1-2.

Did not Joseph forgive his murderous brethren, and act the part of shepherd to all his father's house? And can we deny the hundred fold assurance that Jesus will act a corresponding part toward those he stands pledged to redeem? "O that the salvation of Israel were come out of Zion! When the Lord bringeth back the captivity of his people, Jacob shall rejoice and Israel shall be glad." Ps. xiv. 7. The person of Jesus and Israel and Zion must be alike real or nothing.

III. The first fruits sustained the like relation to the harvest. It was the pledge of blessing, and the earnest of the harvest. A mere reference should suffice to carry the Christian's head and heart into cordial co-operation with the primary idea, and the all-pervading doctrine as to Christ the "first fruits of them that slept," and his saints "the first fruits of God's creatures." Jas. i. 18. The entire scope of all such scriptures has but one significance—which forestalls your doctrine of "condemning Israel," &c.

IV. The Judge was the vindicator, deliverer, and sovereign of Israel. Judges ii. 16-18. Thus our Lord, the Faithful and True in righteousness, will judge and make war—Rev. xix. 1-11 to xxi. 5—to overcome obstacles to his blessing.

The king was only the more permanent and hereditary sovereign, to reign, deliver and bless. David against Goliah may illustrate the great king to come against the pope—the grand Turk and the devil! But the fundamental doctrine is deliverance. Zeph. iii. 8-9; Ps. cii. 13-23; He overcomes in order to bless.

V. The high priest, at the annual atonement, did "put away sins" representatively, and then culminated his official service, not by cursing, but by his three-fold blessing. Numbers vi. 22-27.

Jesus' closing and crowning work "within the veil" fills salvation with the glory of his reign with his saints 1,000 years, &c.

Thus all these primary forms of truth teach one prolonged lesson of mercy, and forbid your final outcome in condemning Israel and the world. The sin and the curse are to cease, and his glory fill the earth.

The sum of the seed; Gen. xxii. 17-18; Gal. iii. 26-29; the perfect (new) man; Eph. iv. 12-13; the climax of the Christhood; 1 Cor. xii. 12; the unity of of the Godhead, in sanctified humanity; John xvii. 20-24, should fill their place here to our minds in order to see the fulness of the first fruits, and their official agency to close and crown the gospel plan with God's abounding blessings!—with unmingled mercy!

Your mental horizon is wrath, the outcome of sin! But which is rather incidental to God's ulterior object! My horizon is in the cloudless glories of Messiah's almighty and everlasting triumph. Amen and amen. Psa. lxxii. Rom. xi.

Much is omitted.

Brooklyn churches, it is said, spend $170,850 annually for music, average $750 to each church.

The church of Rev. De Witt Talmage of Brooklyn, has the largest membership of any Presbyterian Church in America.

The Sultan of Zanzibar has been presented with a copy of the Bible in Arabic by the British and Foreign Bible Society. In expressing his gratification, he said that he was aware of its contents, and that the words of Jesus were always acceptable to his people.

An encouraging letter from Mrs. Ann E. Guerin, of Myers P. O., Howard county, Mo., has just been received. Brother Myers, on his way from Kansas to Plymouth stopped at that point—his old home—and made two discourses, and since his arrival here has sent several papers back there. This letter speaks of a general interest as having been aroused, several now advocating the mortality of man and the doctrine of the future kingdom of Christ on earth, and a general call for more papers.

The following report of labor from brother Hatch will be encouraging to many. He says:

I left home July 2, visited brother Messimore's neighborhood, in Kosciusko county, held meetings some days, with good attention. During the meeting there were two immersed into the name of Jesus Christ; others I think will obey soon.

From there I visited brother W. T. Gullin's part of the country; held meetings a few days with good attention, and think there are some who will obey the Gospel soon. I found brother and sister Gullin warm in the truths of the Bible. May God bless them in their efforts to keep up an interest in their place.

The church near brother Messimore's now numbers eleven, when I visited them something over a year ago, there were but three in that part of the country that had obeyed. May God bless them, and may they be faithful unto the end. J. S. HATCH.

The following letter from Brother Wright speaks of his firmness in the cause:

Myself and wife are alone in the faith in this place, but we are doing what we can to hold up the truth. Next Sunday I am to speak in the M. E. Church upon the promise made of God unto the fathers, or the better day that is coming.

We have been expecting and still hope that Brother Degger or some other able speaker will visit us before long.

We are well pleased with the RESTITUTION. We would have been glad to have met with the brethren at Rensselaer, as I have enjoyed those meetings in days that are past; but hope we may all meet soon in the kingdom of God.

Yours, in hope,

THOS. WRIGHT.

RIVERTOWN, Iowa, August 17.

The following letter from a section of the country from which many will like to hear is so comprehensive that we give it entire:

BRO. MYERS:—Your card of Aug. 5th, is received and in reply will say: The cause of the glad tidings of the coming kingdom of God is prospering in this part of Kansas.

One year ago there were ten believers here in this part; now we number thirty. Brother Wilkins preaches regularly for us. Bro. John Foore will be with us the 4th of September to hold meetings one week. We had made up our minds to get you to come to our meeting with Bro. John Foore when we learned through the RESTITUTION that you had left Kansas. We formed your acquaintance at the Linn Co. conference, Aug., 1874. Bros. G. W. Smith, H. Updegraff, Norberry and myself were there.

Grasshoppers have done but little damage in this part of the State. The wheat, corn, oats, and potato crops are good. We have had heavy rains all through July; for the past two weeks pleasant dry weather.

Yours, THOMAS PEYTON.

HARTFORD, Linn Co., Kan., Aug. 16.

The following letter speaks for itself, and tells of the work the RESTITUTION is doing, and furnishes an argument to the brethren in favor of its wide circulation. The following is the letter:

ED. RESTITUTION:

I am a constant reader of your noble paper, and feel that there is great virtue and power in the doctrine it promulgates. I feel as though it was my duty to do all I can to spread its truth. I have never heard a Christian sermon preached. But I did not know this until the RESTITUTION came into my hands through the influence of a friend. I thank God for the light it has given me in understanding the word of God, which I could not do under the prevailing theories of the day. I had almost come to the conclusion that the word of God was a fable, but now I glory in its truths.

But I cannot write for want of education; but you can see from what I have said that I have more hope than one entirely without light and knowledge.

You will please send the RESTITUTION to my brother living at Bethany, Harrison county, Mo. I want him to know the truth as it was taught by the apostles of Christ. He has enough of man-made theories, and must learn something of God's will.

Yours in hope,

J. A. WILSON,

Correspondence.

DEAR BRETHREN:—

I am involved in debt considerably on account of sickness in my family of late, and of last winter's distress, so that I can hardly get along in this life's affair. Will any brother open up his bowels of mercy to assist me in my distress in the way of money? You have helped me some two years ago, and some last year, which relieved my wants for the time being. May the Lord grant his mercy in time of need, and in the end eternal life to inherit the earth forevermore in the everlasting kingdom of Christ, and of God. Who any one assist me?

Yours in the hope of eternal life in God's everlasting kingdom.

DANIEL W. FIKE.

CRAWFORD POST, Iowa, Aug. 16th, 1875.

BROTHER REED:—

For a good while I have contemplated writing a word of acknowledgement of your kindness in continuing to me the RESTITUTION. I have had an interest in its contents, which has steadily increased as I have become more acquainted with its contributors. I designed continuing my contributions to its columns, but various things beyond my control have prevented.

I have now been prostrated and confined to the house nearly two months with a paralytic affection of the back, suffering in no small degree, being unable to exercise much mentally or physically. But I am now improving, though slowly, and am much interested and edified in reading up the back numbers of the RESTITUTION. Especially have I been interested in the articles touching the future of Israel and the nations. The near future looms up gloriously before me, and I long for the times of restitution to commence, and the great and blessed work of the ages to come be inaugurated. Then will our sufferings be ended, and our hope be turned into endless reality. Then truly shall we be "workers together" with Christ in blessing "all the families of the earth." My hope embraces nothing short of the consummation of that Abrahamic promise, the substance of which has been so often repeated in the pages of inspiration. And my heart burns with joy that evidence is so abundant and conclusive that we are in the closing hours of the times of the Gentiles, and the morn of the times of restitution will soon dawn, and the Bright and Morning Star rise upon our sin-cursed world. Let us haste the glad hour with our prayers. May I have your prayers in my present affliction?

Yours in Christ,

WM. H. SPENCER.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., Aug. 24, 1875.

TO RESTITUTION:—

Looking abroad on the state of things in these days, it seems to me that all the world is out of joint; in words, religion, nature, science and government, all seems in commotion, strife and contention. When and how it will end, God only knows. Surely we must be in the last days of this groaning earth; were it not for the Bible and its prophetic declarations, we should be indeed in the dark as to the future, and be ready to give up all hope for better days in despair. I have for many years felt great interest and affection for what is called the Advent cause, but of late years there has been such discord, bigotry, malice and uncharitableness in many of its leaders, that the very name is become a reproach amongst the people in the churches and in the world. This state of things has driven many to give up all faith and trust in the cause, and go back again either into the orthodox churches, indifference to all religion, or to stand alone as a mere spectator of the storms and tempests that shake the foundations of the churches—happy to be free from the trammels of sectarianism.

Another great hindrance to the Advent cause is, the frequent failures of the definite time movements. The natural result of this is to shake the faith of many in all the peculiar doctrines of the party, and involve the whole system in ridicule and contempt. I see there is a new movement in this direction that appears to me the most weak and foolish of any yet invented. "The child shall die one hundred years old." This child, it seems, is the United States, and it is to be destroyed, and all the world with it, on the 5th of July, 1876!! Psa. xxvii. 22.

Dr. Barber endorses all time movements; the resurrection is now in progress, but nobody knows anything about it. How came he to know? When our Lord comes, will he find faith on the earth? Not much I fear; these are the days to try men's souls. Oh for faith and patience to wait the Lord's time—we know it not, and therefore, must ever watch and pray. come Lord Jesus, come quickly.

Yours in hope,

T. PARRY.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

Quarterly meeting in Elkhorn, Pennsylvania, on Saturday and Sunday, September 11th and 12th, 1875. Love Feast, 9 o'clock A. M.

A full attendance of the brethren on Saturday afternoon I especially desire, as important business will come up.

G. W. STATTON, Pastor.

The Annual Conference of Northern Illinois and South-ern Wisconsin will meet at Rockford (Union two miles west of Rockford), in the township of Burritt, county of Winnebago, and state of Illinois, on the 10th day of September, 1875, at 2 o'clock P. M., to continue over Sunday.

I would suggest that those who wish to be met at the railroad should drop a line, directed to Brother H. P. Hastly, Rockford, Illinois, to that effect, that he can make arrangements to meet them. They should state to what place they will come, whether to Rockford or Pecatonica. Those coming on the Galena Union will stop at Davis, and those coming on the North-Western will stop at Pecatonica.

J. S. ARNOLD,
In behalf of the Congregation.

To all the Brethren who attend the Iowa Conference:

The Conference will be held near Pleasantville, Marion county, Iowa, on Thursday, September 30th, 1875.

Those coming by railroad will please come on Thursday, the 9th, and stop at Otley on the R. V. R. R., Marion county, Iowa, where there will be conveyances ready to take them to the place of meeting. Trains arrive from the west at 9 o'clock A. M.; from the east at 2:15 P. M.

N. B.—Those coming by railroad would confer a favor if they would drop a line to my address a few days before the meeting.

JAMES M. HAYNES,
Pleasantville, Marion County, Iowa.

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in the state of Iowa will be held near Pleasantville, Marion county, commencing on Saturday evening at 7 o'clock before the second Sunday in September, 1875, and hold over the Sunday following.

Brother Haines will give notice at what railroad station brethren and friends will be met and conveyed to place of meeting.

All are invited.

A. HUTCHER, P. C.

AMES, Iowa, July 24, 1875.

The Lord willing, a general meeting of the brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith, will be held near Brother Henry M. Cockle's residence, two miles west of Sulphur Springs, White county, Ill., commencing Friday, September 10th, at 7:30 P. M., and continuing over the following Sunday. Let all the friends of Jesus, who have his appearing, come to this first conference in southern Illinois. Adventists of all classes are especially invited.

AMOS SAFFORD.

There will be a meeting of the brethren at Maudlin's grove, eight miles south of Mt. Ayr, Ringold county, Iowa, commencing on Friday, September 3d, 1875.

Brother J. H. Bitner, of Kansas, is expected to be in attendance.

Persons attending and desiring information, enquire of Eli. Maudlin, or Nathaniel Miller.

H. J. MILLER.

I am ready and willing to go anywhere in "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and hear me "at the time appointed."

Having no means of my own, my traveling expenses will have to be met from some other source. Let the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, and at convenient points in Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, who desire a course of Biblical Lectures, address me and I will come. Address, Anna, Union county, Ill.

HIGH SCHOOL,

PLYMOUTH, INDIANA.

The fall term of the Plymouth High High School will open on Monday, September 6, 1875.

A superior corps of teachers has been engaged, with a single exception those teachers were selected on account of long and successful experience.

The following kinds of work will be done:

1. Preparatory for College.
2. Normal training. Special advantages offered in this department.
3. High School Proper.
4. Commercial studies.

5. For the benefit of those who wish to attend but a short time, or for the purpose of reviewing. No pains will be spared to adapt the classes to the convenience of those who have had inferior advantages and are somewhat backward in their studies.

The High School was ordered by the State Board of Education, as one whose certificate of examination will be accepted by the State University.

New and magnificent building.

MOUNT UNION COLLEGE,

Late Achievements—The Museum and Other Extraordinary Enterprises—Economy of Living—Estimates of Property Benefiting Students.—Remarkable Advantages to Teachers—A College for the People—The Centennial Offerings.

The following was adopted at the recent annual meeting of the Trustees:

Resolved, That we increase college property to over a million dollars, by securing five hundred and fifty thousand dollars as the American Centennial offerings.

The late Chief-Justice Chase, as Trustee, touched the key-note: "Mount Union, being among the best colleges in the land, should the most freely and widely extend its superior advantages equally to our country's worthy poor as well dependent."

College year just closed shows remarkable progress. Graduates in science, literature and arts, 28; freshmen college, 51; Music, 21; fine arts, 21; Master of Arts, 5; one in Master of Philosophy, and one in Bachelor of Arts, per saltum; three in Science of Nobility, per saltum. Students in College Department past year, 1,217; different students from first, 10,737, as whom 1,719—one third ladies—have taught public schools; of these, 1,114 are graduates of Normal Department; total graduates in Baccalaureate degree, 373. Over 2,000 commercial students now all good situations. The Faculty numbers twenty-seven experienced professors. The college, by liberal credit and furnished good buildings, keeps loans with a room, at about $2 per week—self and fuel found much less. Tuition but a trifle in any department; no contingent or extra charges. Apparatus and Specimens worth over a quarter of a million of dollars to illustrate science. Students enter at any time in term at proportional rates. College property, including museum, worth four hundred and fifty-one thousand, two hundred and seventy-six dollars; income last year, twenty six thousand, five hundred and forty dollars, also aids students. Many students, without failure behind their classes, earn their college expenses of teaching during winters, attending the regular college year of fall, spring and summer terms, beginning last Tuesday of August, and February, and middle of May. The special winter term, beginning last Tuesday of November, accommodates students not teaching, &c.—all-a healthy, moral, accessible,—15 railroads deliver by omnibus from Alliance Union Depot,—the junction of the Pittsburgh, Ft. Wayne & Chicago Railroad with the Cleveland, Wheeling & Pittsburg, and the Lake Erie, Alliance & Wheeling Railroads.

For descriptive catalogue, address Pres. O. S. Harshman, D. D., Alliance, Ohio.

Bayard Taylor recently said: "The museum of Mount Union College is among the best I have visited anywhere, and the natural specimens are the most select and valuable I have seen in any country." Others are taking to buy the superb Alliance College cabinet; also to erect a capacious museum to fill it.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞ We are to spend next Sunday with the society in Plymouth. Preaching morning and evening.

☞ J. M. Stephenson is expected to be in attendance at the Northern Illinois and Wisconsin Conference, to be held at Union meeting house, Winnebago county, Ill., Sept. 10.

☞ A man in Massachusetts has written a book to prove that there will be two heavens—one for the women, the other for the men. The writer says nothing about two hells for the rest of folks.

☞ We spent last Sunday with the church at Goodland. The interest in the word of the kingdom remains unabated. Arrangements have been made for a series of meetings following our next appointment in four weeks from Sunday last.

☞ H. L. Hastings, editor of the Christian, published in Boston, has been preaching in London for some two months. The Bible Echo reports favorably of his labors, and says that he has won many friends by his visit to England. The Echo states that he will soon return to America.

☞ Just published at this office a tract of sixteen pages, entitled "THE NEW BIRTH," or "A BIRTH OF WATER AND OF THE SPIRIT," by Josiah Pierce of West Liberty, Ind. In this tract is found some good thoughts upon this subject. It can be had at this office at five cents per copy, or six copies for twenty-five cents.

☞ Our stock of leaflet tracts has been running low, until the last few days. We now have just had about fifteen thousand printed and are prepared to fill all orders. Distributing these tracts into the world is a cheap and an effectual way of preaching the truth, and brethren who are able to do so ought not to neglect sending in for them to hand out to their neighbors.

☞ Ira Fancher, an Adventist of Sandy Hill, N. Y., claims that the expression in Isaiah lxv. "A child shall die an hundred years old," refers to the American Republic, and that it will collapse on the day of the centennial, July 4, 1876; at which time the age will close. Seventh day Adventists claim that our government is the beast with two horns spoken of in Rev. xiii. A Methodist clergyman has written a large book to prove that the Mississippi valley is the Armageddon of prophecy. And still another speculator claims that it is the "land shadowing with wings beyond the rivers of Ethiopia." There seems to be no end to wild speculations among those who are unacquainted with prophecy.

The Impending Crisis.

INFALLIBILITY OF THE POPE—THE ITALIAN GOVERNMENT — AFFAIRS IN PRUSSIA—ACTION OF THE PRUSSIAN GOVERNMENT—THE CHURCH A POLITICAL POWER—DUAL GOVERNMENT IN EUROPE—INTENTIONS OF THE POPE.

(From "History of the Conflict between Religion and Science.")

On July 19th, the votes were taken. Of 601 votes, 451 were affirmative. Under the majority rule, the measure was pronounced carried, and five days subsequently the pope proclaimed the dogma of his infallibility. If has often been remarked that this was the day on which the French declared war against Prussia. Eight days afterward the French troops were withdrawn from Rome. Perhaps both the statesman and the philosopher will admit that an infallible pope would be a great harmonizing element, if only common sense could acknowledge him.

Hereupon, the king of Italy addressed an autograph letter to the pope, setting forth in very respectful terms the necessity that his troops should advance and occupy positions "indispensable to the security of his Holiness, and the maintenance of order;" that, while satisfying the national aspirations, the chief of Catholicity, surrounded by the devotion of the Italian populations, "might preserve on the banks of the Tiber a glorious seat, independent of all human sovereignty."

To this his Holiness replied in a brief and caustic letter:

"I give thanks to God, who has permitted your majesty to fill the last days of my life with bitterness. For the rest, I cannot grant certain requests, not conform with certain principles, continued in your letter. Again, I call upon God, and into his hands commit my cause, which is his cause. I pray God to grant your majesty many graces, to free you from dangers, and to dispense to you his mercy which you so much need."

The Italian troops met with but little resistance. They occupied Rome on September 20, 1870. A manifesto was issued, setting forth the details of a plebiscitum, the vote to be by ballot, the question: "the unification of Italy." Its result showed how considerably the popular mind in Italy is emancipated from theology. In the Roman provinces, the number of votes on the lists was 167,548; the number who voted, 135,291; the number who voted for annexation, 133,681; the number who voted against it, 1,507; votes annulled, 103. The Parliament of Italy ratified the vote of the Roman people for annexation by a vote of 239 to 20. A royal decree now announced the annexation of the Papal States to the kingdom of Italy, and a manifesto was issued, indicating the details of the arrangement. It declared that "by these concessions the Italian Government seeks to prove to Europe that Italy respects the sovereignty of the pope in conformity with the principle of a free Church in a free state."

In the Prussia-Austrian War it had been the hope of the papacy to restore the German Empire under Austria, and make Germany a Catholic nation. In the Franco-German war the French expected ultramontane sympathies in Germany. No means were spared to excite Catholic sentiment against the Protestants. No villification was spared. They were spoken of as Atheists; they were declared incapable of being honest men; their sects were pointed out as indicating that their secession was in a state of dissolution. "The followers of Luther are the most abandoned men in all Europe." Even the pope himself, presuming that the whole world had forgotten all history, did not hesitate to say, "Let the German people understand that no other Church but that of Rome is the Church of freedom and progress."

Meantime, among the clergy of Germany a party was organized to remonstrate against "a man being placed on the throne of God," against a vice-God of any kind, nor would it yield its sentitle convictions to ecclesiastical authority. Some did not hesitate to accuse the pope himself of being a heretic. Against these insubordinates excommunications began to be fulminated, and at length it was demanded that certain professors and teachers should be removed from their offices, and infallibilists substituted. With this demand the Prussian Government declined to comply.

The Prussian Government had earnestly desired to remain on amicable terms with the papacy; it had no wish to enter on a theological quarrel; but gradually the conviction was forced upon it that the question was not a religious but a political one—whether the power of the state should be used against the state. A teacher in a gymnasium had been excommunicated; the government, on being required to dismiss him, refused. The Church authorities denounced this as an attack upon faith. The emperor sustained his minister. The organ of the infallible party threatened the emperor with the opposition of all good Catholics, and told him that, in a contention with the pope, systems of government can and must change. It was now plain to every one that the question had become, "Who is to be master in the state, the government or the Roman Church? It is plainly impossible for men to live under two governments, one of which declares to be wrong what the other commands. If the government will not submit to the Roman Church, the two are enemies." A conflict was thus forced upon Prussia by Rome—a conflict in which the latter, impelled by her antagonism to modern civilization, is clearly the aggressor.

The government, now recognizing its antagonist, defended itself by abolishing the Catholic department in the ministry of public worship. This was about mid-summer, 1871. In the following November, the Imperial Parliament passed a law that ecclesiastics abusing their office, to the disturbance of the public peace, should be criminally punished. And, guided by the principle that the future belongs to him to whom the school belongs, a movement arose for the purpose of separating the schools from the Church.

The Jesuit party was extending and strengthening an organization all over Germany, based on the principle that state legislation in ecclesiastical matters is not binding. Here was an act of open insurrection. Could the government be allowed to be intimidated? The Bishop of Ermeland declared that he would not obey the laws of the state if they touched the Church. The government stopped the payment of his salary; and, perceiving that there could be no peace so long as the Jesuits were permitted to remain in the country, their expulsion was resolved on, and carried into effect. At the close of 1872 his Holiness delivered an allocution, in which he touched on the "persecution of the Church in the German Empire," and asserted that the Church alone has a right to fix the limits between its domain and that of the state—a dangerous and inadmissible principle, since under the term morals the Church comprises all the relations of men to each other, and asserts that whatever does not assist her oppresses her. Hereupon, a few days subsequently (January 9, 1873), four laws were brought forward by the government: 1. Regulating the means by which a person might sever his connection with the Church; 2. Restricting the Church in the exercise of ecclesiastical punishments; 3. Regulating the ecclesiastical power of discipline, forbidding bodily chastisement, regulating fines and banishments, granting the privilege of an appeal to the Royal Court of Justice for Ecclesiastical Affairs, the decision of which is final; 4. Ordaining the preliminary education and appointment of priests. They must have had a satisfactory education, passed a public examination conducted by the state, and have knowledge of philosophy, history, and German literature. Institutions refusing to be superintended by the state are to be closed.

These laws demonstrate that Germany is resolved that she will no longer be dictated to nor embarrassed by a few Italian noble families; that she will be master of her own house. She sees in the conflict, not an affair of religion or of conscience, but a struggle between the sovereignty of state legislation and the sovereignty of the Church. She treats the papacy not in the aspect of a religious, but a political power, and is resolved that the declaration of the Prussian Constitution shall be maintained, that "the exercise of religious freedom must not interfere with the duties of a citizen toward the community and the state."

With truth it is affirmed that the papacy is administered not sacramentally, not as a universal Church, for all the nations, but for the benefit of some Italian families. Look at its composition! It consists of pope, cardinal bishops, cardinal deacons who at the present moment are all Italians; ministers and secretaries of the Sacred Congregation in Rome, all Italians. France has not given a pope since the middle ages. It is the same with Austria, Portugal, Spain. In spite of all attempts to change this system of exclusion, to open the dignities of the Church to all Catholicism, no foreigner can reach the holy chair. It is recognized that the Church is a domain given by God to the princely Italian families. Of fifty-five members of the present college of Cardinals, forty are Italians—that is, thirty two beyond their proper share.

The stumbling-block to the progress of Europe has been its dual system of government. So long as every nation had two sovereigns, a temporal one at home and a spiritual one in a foreign land—there being different temporal masters in different nations, but only one foreign master for all, the pontiff at Rome—how was it possible that history should present us with anything more than a narrative of the strifes of these rival powers? Whoever will reflect on this state of things will see how it is that those nations which have shaken off the dual form of government are those which have made the greatest advance.

He will discern what is the cause of the paralysis which has befallen France. On one hand she wishes to be the leader of Europe, on the other hand she clings to a dead past. For the sake of propitiating her ignorant classes, she enters upon lines of policy which her intelligence must condemn; evenly balanced are the two sovereignties under which she lives, that sometimes one and sometimes the other prevails; and not unfrequently the one uses the other as an engine for the accomplishment of its ends.

But this dual system approaches its close. To the modern nations, less imaginative and less superstitious, it had long ago become intolerable; they rejected it summarily at the epoch of the reformation, notwithstanding the protestations of Rome.

Russia, happier than the rest, has never acknowledged the influence of any foreign spiritual power. She gloried in her attachment to the ancient Greek rite, and saw in the papacy nothing more than a troublesome dissenter from the primitive faith.

In America, the temporal and the spiritual have been absolutely divorced—the latter is not permitted to have anything to do with the affairs of state, though in all other respects liberty is conceded to it. The condition of the New World also satisfies us that both forms of Christianity, Catholic and Protestant, have lost their expansive power; neither can pass beyond its long-established boundary-line—the Catholic republics remain Catholic, the Protestant, Protestant. And and among the latter the disposition to sectarian isolation is disappearing; persons of different denominations consort together without hesitation. They gather their current opinions from the newspapers, not from the church.

Pius IX., in the movements we have been considering, has had two objects in view:

1. The more thorough centralization of the papacy, with a spiritual autocrat assuming the prerogatives of God at its head.

2. Control over the intellectual development of the nations professing Christianity.

The legal consequence of the former of these is political intervention. He insists that in all cases the temporal must subordinate itself to the spiritual power. All laws inconsistent with the interests of the church must be repealed. They are not binding on the faithful.

In the preceding pages I have briefly related some of the complications that have occurred in the attempt to maintain this policy.

I now come to the consideration of the manner in which the papacy proposes to establish its intellectual control; how it defines its relations to its antagonist, Science, and, seeking a restoration of the mediæval condition, opposes modern civilization, and denounces modern society.

Creeds.

Are "written creeds legitimate and essential to the greatest efficiency of an organized body?"

So say: Bro. Simonds.

As he has appealed his cause to the "candid attention of the Brotherhood," it becomes necessary to examine his logic and see if it is sound. Correct reasoning from a correct premise is sound, but if the premise is wrong a false issue is made, and the reasoning, however plausible, does not support the true issue.

Bro. S—— starts out with an incorrect definition of creed, and argues in favor of written creeds that nobody is opposed to. Nobody objects to his writing out a brief summary of what he believes. But when he presents that brief summary of his belief to me and demands my assent to it, as an inexorable condition of Christian fellowship, or admission into his new church or sect, I shall firmly ask to be excused, "world without end." Let us then keep in sight the real issue at stake, which is, an uninspired summary of doctrine that is made the basis of a church organization and which all its members must subscribe or solemnly assent to in order to be members. Bro. S—— has written such a creed, organized a church on such a foundation, as its chief corner stone, with a 1 per cent. —3 per cent. money basis for the other corner. All who could climb over both these walls have arrived safely in his church, and he represents them as peacefully and lovingly feeding in the new pasture, or resting in the fold.

Let us look on both sides of this matter.

It is true, we had not made much progress, for reasons similar to those which have hindered the truth in many other places, especially in large towns. Our hall was inconvenient and far away from most of the church, so that they could not well attend. Our congregation was made up in part of Seventh-Day Baptists, who sympathized with us in much of the truth. We never celebrated the Lord's death as a church. After a considerable time the Baptist friends dropped off—could not rest two days—had to do their washing and other work on Sunday. Several families that met with us moved away. Bro. S—— proposed an end of the meetings. I appointed meetings in a grove near the residence of a large part of the brethren. They, with many others, attended with interest through the summer. Although we did not make much progress in persuading men to believe the gospel, we held up a light as the Savior commands, and it may appear at the last day that some good was done. We recommenced meetings where the brethren lived and their constant attendance was secured before they were organized into a new sect. Since that we are told that they are interested in paying their monthly dues, and Kansas has reaped the benefit of $12.50, the conference $5, and certain families supplied with the RESTITUTION. Allow me to say that one of the outsiders, not rich, has sent nearly fifty dollars to Kansas, paid for his own RESTITUTION, and assisted other brethren more than five per cent. required, in fitting up a home for a poor and aged brother with his blind wife.

But the dark side of the picture is, that the body of Christ has been divided by the creed and money test about in the middle, and Christ has been crucified afresh in the house of His friends. Much backbiting and sectarian feeling has resulted.

A tree that bears such bitter fruits ought to be cut down. Four, leading brethren in Jamestown have adopted the money scheme merely, while some 30 or 40 other brethren and sisters can not conscientiously adopt either of the schemes.

There is a solemn responsibility resting upon the real author of these divisions. An attempt is made to shift it on to the mother church. "It is not the written creed that makes division, but the corruption of the mother church," he says, and appeals to history. History shows that the Catholic church, after becoming in a measure apostate, made the first authoritative creed, at the council of Nice, A. D. 325, and excluded all who would not bow the knee to the doctrine of the Trinity. The Protestant sects have followed the example of the "holy mother," church in excluding those who would not bow assent to their creeds.

Now, if we, as a people, had assembled at some modern Nice, and, by the combined wisdom of all the elders and brethren, had framed a creed for the Brotherhood, that progressive brethren or any others could not adopt, then they would have been justified in remaining outside, a sect by themselves, and, if established on the Bible alone, they would be the old "sect of the Nazarites." And they could justly throw the responsibility on the "mother church" of division with all its evils, and we should be humble imitators of the Catholics and Protestants. But what is the fact in this case? The son has excluded his mother, instead of the mother her son.

Bro. S—— has had full liberty to write and preach his peculiar views, and no one has sought to abridge his liberty in the least. "It is not the creed that makes division, but the corruption of the mother church." Does he mean to say that the rest of us are corrupt—that he must rally what he can around him and his creed and leave? This is the argument. If the brethren of the one faith throughout the land are corrupt, he is doubtless justified in launching a bull of excommunication against all who will not sign his creed, and all the division he can make is perfectly right on his part.

If the fact is otherwise, and if others have the gospel as well as he, then he is in the wrong.

All the talk about written or unwritten, a false or a true creed, has nothing to do with the question at issue. That question is, whether a human creed, imperfect at best, shall supplant or be tacked on the divine, perfect creed, and thus be made the instrument of dividing the "church of the living God."

It is alleged that we do test a man by his faith, whether written or spoken—"the written creed is more powerful." In reply, I allow a man's character is to be tested by his creed in the sense of belief, as well as by his works, and one may properly withhold fellowship from one whose creed is fundamentally wrong. But suppose he is a believer in the great truths that constitute the gospel, and yet does not agree with me exactly in reference to the resurrection of the wicked, or the great burning day, or the birth of children to all eternity, or the second death, or a dozen other questions I may think of considerable importance, and essential to my system of theology, but not to his salvation; shall I therefore disfellowship him whom the Lord received? Shall I write out a creed and make him acknowledge it, putting in what I know he does not believe, or debar him from church fellowship? But suppose I am more liberal, and put in the creed only what all Christians believe; then the creed is entirely unnecessary.

The only proper test, of any authority, is the Revealed Word, interpreted according to the settled laws of language. We can test a man's faith without a human creed. If it were said the written creed shaped into an "iron bedstead" is more powerful than the unwritten to cause alienation and division among brethren, it would be perfectly true. It is not true that we "can take the Scriptures as our only rule of faith and practice, and have a written creed" adopted also as a rule of faith and practice, unless our creed is the Bible, or of equal authority.

He says "some of our brethren have not been known to take one step of progress in the last 20 years." Well. If these brethren have been "steadfast and immovable"—"not moved away from the hope of the gospel" embraced 20 years ago, it is better than to be blown about by every "wind of doctrine."

But the creed policy is a long step backward, as far at least as the beginning of the dark ages.

Again it is said, "what a man believes is just as really a creed before it is written as afterwards." True, it is just as much a belief unwritten as written.

"There is no reason why a written creed should be more sectarian in its influence than an unwritten one." True, in the sense of mere belief.

"The written form is no more opposed to investigation or progress than the unwritten." Not unless the written form is made a test of church membership. It is not expected that the articles of any church or sect will be called in question, and a member is hustled out who dares to do it. We had just a little experience in that line. To be turned out of the church onto the "devil's common" with heathen and publicans pasted on your back for embracing the blessed hope, is not without some sacrifice.

Again he writes, "it is no more a yoke of bondage, or the cause of division, or a test of fellowship, than is the unwritten creed." The sophistry of all these assertions is in dodging the true issue. It is admitted every time, that a creed in the sense of mere belief is no more a test or yoke written out, than a belief which is simply spoken. But when a man writes out his belief and demands my submission to it in order to the privileges of the church it becomes more of a test than the unwritten creed, and if I am foolish enough to yield to his demands, it becomes what all creeds have been, "a yoke of bondage."

"What is the chaff to the wheat?" saith the Lord, "To the law and the testimony, if they speak not according to this word it is because there is no light in them." The word is nigh thee, even in thy mouth and in thy heart, that is the word of faith which we preach, that, if thou shalt confess with thy mouth the Lord Jesus, and shalt believe in thine heart that God hath raised him from the dead, thou shalt be saved." Rom. x. 8.

"Hold fast the form of sound words, (inspired words,) which thou hast heard of me, in faith and love which is in Christ Jesus." 2 Tim. i. 13.

Yours, for the Word and union,

Three Thousand Years Ago.

Mr. Conway tells, in a recent letter, of a gentleman of Halifax, England, who, being in Egypt a few years ago, brought back for its museum a number of Alexandrian mummies—a mummied Ibis, cat, and several heads taken from human mummies. These heads were brought in separate small boxes, and one of them some way got soaked in salt water on the voyage. When it was opened by Mr. Layland, a distinguished antiquary of Yorkshire, in the presence of a number of other gentlemen, they were startled—even astounded—to find that the flesh on the face had recovered its outline, the cheeks and chin were plump and rounded, the open eyes looked upon them, and even seemed to move. The gentlemen hastened to call others from all parts of the museum to observe this wonderful phenomenon. For a few minutes they beheld an unmistakable Egyptian countenance, with a pleasant, composed expression—the face of a man who lived at least three thousand years ago. They could only conclude that the powerful aromatic gums which had been used had arrested the decay which the salt water had now rendered possible, and which speedily set in after the head was taken from its box and wrappings. But several gentlemen who saw it have assured me that they can never forget the life-likeness of the face before the swift decay of flesh which followed. The skull was shown me, and the bones of it were remarkably white and clear, in strong contrast with the darkness of other mummy heads beside it.

The Word of God.

The late Mr. Wm. Greenfield was once in company, at the house of a friend, with a gentleman of deistical principles, a stranger to him, who put to him the following among other questions: "Can you give me the reason why Jesus Christ is called the Word? What is meant by the Word? It is a curious term." Mr. Greenfield, unconscious of the motive of the skeptical inquirer, replied, with his usual simplicity and decision of character: "I suppose, as words are the medium of communication between us, the term is used in the sacred Scriptures to demonstate that He is the only medium between God and man. I know of no other reason." The deist's mouth was shut.—Gray.

There are 1,900 convents and monasteries inhabited by 21,000 monks and nuns in Belgium. The income of the religious orders in that kingdom is one hundred millions of dollars.

THE RESTITUTION.

"THE RESTITUTION OF ALL THINGS WHICH GOD HATH SPOKEN BY THE MOUTH OF ALL HIS HOLY PROPHETS SINCE THE WORLD BEGAN."

EVERY WEDNESDAY AFTERNOON
By the Christian Publishing Association.

H. V. REED, Editor.
S. A. CHAPLIN, J. M. STEPHENSON, THOMAN WILSON, } Corresponding Editors.

TERMS:—$2.00 PER YEAR,
Payable invariably in Advance. Subscriptions received for three and six months at the same rate.

HOW TO ADDRESS LETTERS.
All business letters, or communications must be addressed as follows:—
THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.
Letters for the Editor should be sent to the same place.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.
THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with its Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

CORRESPONDENTS.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not understood, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of criticising those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

The Spirit.

Whenever the word spirit is applied to man in the Bible, it refers to that part of him which was breathed into him by Jehovah, who is the only source of all bodily and mental life to all men, and of spiritual holy life to the regenerate. When this spirit is looked at as to its source, it is called "the spirit of God!" but when looked at as as dwelling in man, it is called "the spirit of man."

This spirit of Jehovah is the sole author and sustainer of all life, whether animal, vegetable, mental or spiritual. Wherever he is there is life though the manifestations of it may be various, without him and his immediate workings, not one of operations and laws of nature could be counted on: were he to withdraw his spirit to himself, so to speak, and be as he was before anything or person was created, all nature would be at a stand still; there would be no motion, no cohesion, no attraction; no life anywhere in nature. Whenever he is pleased to withdraw his spirit from any living thing or person, the material part of that thing or person falls into its original state of unorganized matter. To every living thing he imparted a portion of his spirit, according to the necessity of each, and when his spirit leaves it, death necessarily ensues. Now, this portion of God's spirit thus imparted to each being, thing or person, can never die, until his spirit leaves the thing or person in whom it has dwelt. It returns to God who gave it, because man made in the image of God was capable of a portion of his spirit or life which was imparted to him, and per consequence, made him a living soul, knowing and loving him of almost indefinite progress, and of union and communion with him, therefore that large portion of God's spirit which he imparts to every man, as much allies him to the deity as his body does to the earth. It is this spirit of man and not his soul, that returns to the God who gave it. When his body returns to the earth as it was, each goes to its own source, earth to earth and spirit to spirit.

But let any one find out the many passages parallel to 1 Cor. ii. 11, where there is so much distinction made between the spirit of man and man himself, as there is between the spirit of God and God himself, and yet we know the spirit of God and God himself do not make two spirits; so man and the spirit of man do no constitute two men.

WARREN, ILL.

WE ARE THE BUDS.—A Sabbath school teacher was trying to make his class understand the dependence of the branch on the vine. He said:

"Jesus is the vine, we are the branches; we get all our life and happiness from him."

"Yes," said a little fellow, "Jesus is the vine, grown-up people are the branches, and we are the buds."

An Honest Confession.

In one corner of the Investigator, an infidel paper published in Boston, we find the following sad truth:

"Because it is not possible that we should arrive at the good of knowledge without having surveyed the nature of things: but as children in the dark tremble and are afraid of nothing, so we, miserably groping in the darkness of ignorance, fear phantoms that are but of fabulous existence, and fancy to ourselves notions of things that shall happen. It is necessary, therefore, that this terror and darkness of the mind should be dispelled by impressions derived from reason."

This is the spontaneous utterance of an aching heart groping in the darkness of unbelief, fearing phantoms and fancying things which may or may not happen. No ray of divine light illumines his pathway—no well founded hope of the future finds a place in his bosom—no anchor of faith holds his helpless bark from being dashed upon the rocks of despair. And what does he appeal to for help in his loneliness and danger? Not to the pitying eye and outstretched arm of the eternal Father, for he recognizes no such power. Not to the golden promises that reach from earth's heartaches into the haven of rest, for he ridicules the only chance of salvation that is offered him; but he says "It is necessary that this terror and darkness should be dispelled by the impressions derived from reason." Reason alone is cold and pitiless—aside from christianity it is as utterly helpless as man himself.

The writer of the above sentiment is adrift upon a sea of speculation—the cold waves of unbelief beat against his aching heart, and the clouds of oblivion are fast closing around him. The life-boat is hovering near, willing and glad to bear him to the shores of life, but he scorns its aid and appeals to reason to dispel his fears and bring relief. And thus he will probably continue to reason until the weary brain fails, and the helpless hands fall and the dark waters sweep him down into the halls of death.

And yet in the face of all this, a writer in another column declares that "the believer in infidelity has the advantage over every man in the world. He is filled with joy and peace. Death he looks upon as a deliverance from all care." Infidelity is a religion without a faith—a system of worship without a God—a philosophy without logic, and its advocates are preachers without a message, and yet its believer is said to be filled with joy and peace. Is he rejoiced because earth's problems await a glad solution—because He who seeth the end from the beginning holds evenly the scales of justice, and right at last shall triumph? Is he rejoiced because his beloved dead shall be gathered back from the land of the enemy, and he shall meet them beyond the reign of death and suffering? Is he rejoiced that his pilgrimage is almost done—that he shall soon lay by his battle-stained armor and wear the victor's crown? Ah no, but because he looks upon death as a deliverance from all care. And this is the hope he offers us—eternal death. This is the end of our hoping and loving—this is the result of our watching and waiting—this is all—only death, decay, oblivion. Earth's wrongs are never to be righted—innocence can never be vindicated—justice can never be crowned—truth can never triumph. Earth's heartaches can never be healed, the sin and woe of six thousand years can never be blotted out—the tears of the children can never be wiped away by the hand of infinite love. Crime hath no penalty and virtue no reward. Our loved ones are slipping out of our arms—forever. No hope illumines their graves—no promise hovers over the golden head—no resurrection can crown their brows with beauty and tinge their lips with love. Oh infidelity! is this the hope you offer? If this is your joy and peace where is your gall and bitterness? If this is hope what is despair? If this is happiness what is torture? Your very light is darkness compared to the Christian hope. You may spend your time if you will in pointing out the errors and inconsistencies of human creeds but it will avail you nothing. They have no place in God's book—no part in his plan. The Bible offers you a home beyond the wilderness of sin, and life beyond the reign of death. It offers a haven from the storm and an age of glory and peace when life's broken threads shall be gathered up and her silver cords renewed. It offers a bright solution to the dark problems of humanity—a smoothing of its tangled web, and the wing of the peace angel across its troubled waves. It flashes its ray through the darkness of the tomb, and gilds with glory the promised morning when the sleeper shall be called to life. It offers a crown of life and an entrance through the pearly gates of the city—it offers the wine of immortality at the marriage feast of the Lamb, the fruit of life's tree on the banks of the beautiful river.

MRS. H. V. REED.

Are the Two Witnesses of Rev. xi. Moses and Elias. No. IV.

With the promises now before us, let us see when these witnesses are to appear, and what at that time is the position of God's servants. Ever since Pentecost, God's people—the saints, (when there have been such), have been witnesses to the truth. The apostles "first," as Paul says, and afterward the saints. Everywhere, whether scattered abroad or in churches. But as we see in these times of the Gentiles, with but little success; it will so remain until the end. But as we learn from the blessed words, that in the days of Noah and of Abraham, and Lot, and in the days, too, of Israel, through the ministry of John, God always gave fair warning of his coming wrath, so that the wicked and rebellious might be without excuse for their impiety and iniquity when his just indignation should overtake them, so it shall be in the closing "times of the Gentiles." Jesus says, expressly "as it was in the days of Noah, so shall it be in (or as to) the coming of the Son of Man." As they did not heed the warning voice of Noah and Lot, and John, the baptist, so they have not heeded, so far, the word spoken through God's servants. To give the nations yet another and further demonstration of the truth and reality of God's impending vengeance, two special prophets, two eminent chosen witnesses shall be sent unto them—men of renown, men whose history they should know, even Moses and Elias shall appear in their midst, and bear their testimony amid the wonders and miracles they are commissioned to perform. "These have power to shut heaven that it rain not in the days of their prophecy, and have power over waters to turn them to blood," etc., 6th verse.

Moses is a most fit agent for such a work, by his former mission to Pharaoh, in Egypt, and Malachi expressly points out Elijah as destined for this work. Chap. iv.

These witnesses then are to appear in the world openly and visibly, and testify in Jerusalem among their countrymen when gathered into their own land and city. Verse 8. This necessitates a previous return, and in gathering of Israel and second exodus of the scattered people from the places of their previous long dispensation, doubtless, under the favoring auspices and assistance of the gentile powers of Europe, as we already see approaching under the rapidly developing policy of the Gentile rulers, rendered inevitable by the crumbling decrepitude of the Turkish empire which holds at present in its feeble grasp the tottering sceptre of power over that land. Turkey, we see, is rapidly passing away. Palestine cannot long be held by the Moslem. No one of the European powers will be permitted to hold it, but all will agree that the Jews, now rapidly coming into favor with the Gentile powers, and preparing to reconstruct their nationality, may occupy and possess it, under a joint protection, for all the powers will desire that a land and climate so fruitful and salubrious, as recent explorations have shown it to be, should be populated, filled up and cultivated, and all its resources developed for the general good. This will be the signal for many Jews to return to their native land and re-establish their long suspended nationality. Even now we see the movement inaugurated by Sir Moses Montefiore, with the sanction and approval of the Great powers. There is little doubt, that with the means and resources of rapid transportation and modern improvements in all the arts of civilization it will require but a brief time to re-people the land and with the great wealth of the Jews, speedily make it another "garden of the Lord," abounding in all the elements of abundance and prosperity. A few years only, will suffice for this purpose, with the facilities of steam and telegraphic communications with the broad highway of the Suez canal, and the railways to Cairo, now in operation, and one from Joppa to Jerusalem, now in contemplation, and which will soon be accomplished.

It will, no doubt, be objected to this view, that it postpones the coming of the Lord indefinitely, and thus takes away the hopes and consolation of the early deliverance of the saints from this present perishing state. Even if this result follow, it is not for us to force Scripture reasoning to suit our conclusions. If logically and Scripturally true and sound in our premises, no accurate reasoner draws back from results. "Let God be true, but every man a liar" saith the faithful and courageous apostle to the Gentiles. But this objection leads us to survey another part of the field of prophecy, in which the position and destiny of the saints at this rapidly approaching crisis of the world's history, are clearly stated and defined.

As this, however, requires a full citation of the testimony, as the basis of our reasoning, we prefer to postpone the further pursuit of the subject to the next number.

A. B. MAGRUDER.

Faith.

"When the Son of Man cometh shall he find faith on the earth?"—Luke xviii. 8.

How often and how justly is this question asked. It seems that the love of self, and the desire of the present age for something new, has almost cast into oblivion the simple paths and true worth of the Scriptures.

Men are continually seeking for some new convenient method of doing everything. They must needs carry this into their religious life and belief in the Bible. If they can throw all responsibility from their own shoulders it will relieve them of a great burden. It is so much easier and more congenial to our depraved natures to have no restraint placed on our words and actions, than to live the life of a humble Christian.

Ignorant men, who only lack the brains to make them philosophers, finding no other excuse for their own misdeeds, are continually picking flaws and contradictions in the Bible. One believes that it teaches fore-ordination; therefore he cannot help committing sins, and argues from this that there is no need of religion, as it can do no good; and according to his logic and own inclination, degrades himself as much as possible.

All good people will concede there are discrepancies in our common version of the Bible. It is our duty and privilege to study and try to make them harmonize; not try to make defects more glaring by presenting them in a wrong light. If there are things in our Heavenly Father's plan which we do not fully comprehend, are there not enough plain declarations and promises which we cannot fail to understand? Are there not evidences all around us, in nature, science and revelation, to proclaim with unerring testimony, "The hand that made us is divine?"

Many of these difficulties would be solved if we had more faith in the atoning blood of our Savior. If we would only look to God as a Father and friend—one that looks with love and mercy upon his erring children.

More religion of the heart and not so much of the head, is the great need at the present time. We need more simplicity of faith. A religion that will manifest itself in deeds. "By their works ye shall know them." When we see men who profess godliness, following day after day in the steps of the destroyer, we are prone to doubt the sincerity of his pretentions. Rather would we take the place of the meek and lowly ones of earth, who, although they may be unable to clothe their thoughts in glowing language, have a simple relying faith in the love of Jesus, who has said: "Except ye become as little children, ye cannot enter the kingdom of heaven." He called the poor of this world, the rich in faith, fishers and men of low estate, rather than the rich and learned. He came to save publicans and sinners.

All through the trials and life of our blessed Savior, there is a vein of sympathy for the weakness of poor fallen humanity.

If we throw away this pearl of great price, what shall we receive in its place? What have the infidel and unbeliever to offer us? What reward do they expect to reap, who worship at the shrine of the god of nature? If we do not go to the true and living Fountain, what shall we have to support us on the desert sands? Let us go to the Bible as the source of life, and drink freely of its living waters.

Look Before You Leap!

I was standing on the banks of the river a few days ago, over the surface of which the flies were sporting; and ever and anon a fish would jump and catch an insect, and flash back into the stream. Presently a disciple of Izak Walton came, and throwing a fly dexterously into the ripples, soon hooked a fine bass, and after some good skirmishing landed him on the bank beside me. He brushed up his fly and made another cast, and soon another fish made a rush and snapped up the deceitful fly; but in his struggles the hook tore out of his lip, and he escaped. Again the fisherman cast his line, and no sooner had it touched the rippling surface of the water, than a large bass rose at it, and with one snap of his huge jaws, the line parted and he went off with the hook down the stream.

As I watched the proceedings with much interest, it struck me that those who are looking for the return of the Lord Jesus, are much like the bass who jumped at the flies.

Many of us have been looking his return, lo! these many years, and we have outlived in our minds what things and events must precede and accompany his coming. Such and such a combination of events must be necessarily effected, according to our teaching and understanding, before the Redeemer can come to Zion. Some of us have been foolish enough to set the time, and some are content to look for it any time; but all have been watching for the signs—as we ought—and we have jumped for anything that happened in the East, and many times have got the hook in our jaws.

When the Crimean war was declared, some jumped at the fly and swallowed it "hook and line, bob and sinker." The Lord was at hand surely, and "the time of end" had come. Alas! it was the fishermans fly we caught. The men in Europe, ever since, have been jumped at by more or less of us, as the last final struggle that should usher in the day of jubilee. The Austrian-Prussian conflict was a fly of large dimensions, and many got hooked with it, but Sadowa dispelled the illusion. The pope lost power, but was not overthrown. When Victor Emanuel and Garibaldi won Italian unity, we went into ecstacies, thinking our redemption was near, but the hook pulled out and left us still afloat in our natural element—speculation.

When France marshalled her hosts and boasted of her intention to make the Rhine her frontier, surely the grand upheaval had come then; but the Fatherland called her confederate sons together, and the Saxon banners flouted the skies, while the Gallic-lilies, were trailed in their native mud. No sister nation came to the help of poor France, and she was torn by war, and mauscled with debt.

The last "fly" that has been cast is the Right Hon. Gladstone's second pamphlet against the papacy, and the Italian elections. The ex-premier fancies he sees a tremendous endeavor in the Romish Church to foist and force its creed and authority upon England and the continent; and the Italian elections have resulted in a large clerical majority in the Italian Parliament. Cries came up from all over the land that the Ultramontanes had revolutionized Italy, and would, as Gladstone asserts vehemently, have things all their own way; but later dispatches show that the election issues were merely local ones about improvements and the consequent taxation, and so this fly has proved to be a hook, which has pulled out.

The figure has not been fully carried out, for while the fishermen did land one prize, no one of us has as yet been landed by any of our flies, though some, alas! have got away with the hook, and have been stranded.

Now, is it not time for us to be a little more careful, and like the fish in the middle of the stream, who caught the flies and quietly digested them, take those occurrences and scan them carefully, before we "hook" onto them, and swallow the whole thing? The fish that were hooked struggled terribly, and so do we when we find the barb in our jaws, and we get rid of it only with pain and mortification; and the more so as we have been more or less free in slicing our "fly."

It is possible that we may be looking for too much to occur before He comes, and that much we have been looking for to occur, is natural, and not political events. If so, we are bound to be disappointed in our expectations of seeing certain signs of his coming. We need to watch for the signs, and in my humble judgment, those who are really so watching, will not be mistaken when they do occur. I do not believe God will speak to his children in ambiguous terms, but will speak so plainly that all of them who run, may read and understand. Consequently there is no need of catching at every political upheaval in Europe, or turn of the party wheel, and say "Lo, here is the Christ!" but carefully noting the events both in politics and nature, let us be about our Father's business which is always near at hand, and heed the injunction, "Be kindly affectioned one to another with brotherly love; not slothful in business; fervent in spirit, serving the Lord." Then shall we be ready and waiting when the Lord does come, and go in with Him to the marriage supper of the Lamb.

Show.

The world is crazy for show. There is not one, perhaps, in a thousand, who dares fall back on his real, simple self, for power to get through the world, and exact enjoyment as he goes along. There is no end to the aping, the mimicry, the false and superficial airs. It requires rare courage, we admit to live up to one's enlightened convictions in these days. Unless you consent to join in the general cheat, there is no room for you among the great mob of pretenders. If a man desires to live within his means, and is resolute in his purpose not to appear more than he really is, let him be applauded. There is something fresh and invigorating in such an example, and we should honor and uphold such a man with all the energy in our power.

A Man Without an Enemy.

We believe in the man or woman who has enemies. This don't sound sound, but it is sound. Your milk and water people, who content themselves with doing no harm, at the same time never do any good. They are mere negatives in the world. Your man of force does not wait for a stone to get out of the way, but manfully rolls it over, may unintentionally hurt somebody's toes in the act; but thousands who have to travel that way will thank him for it. The man who has no enemies is generally a cowardly creature, caring for no one but himself—sniffing and creeping his unchallenged way to the obscurity he merits. He adds nothing to the common stock; does no good in the world, and and is lowered into his six feet of earth without one sincere regret from any one.—Banner of Holiness.

"Why," asked a governess of her little charge, "do we pray God to give us our daily bread? Why don't we ask for four days, or five days or a week?" "We want it fresh," replied the ingenious child.

Exercise.

The amount of exercise to be taken will always differ with various individuals. It should always be just sufficient to produce slight weariness. Exercise taken in this way is one of the most valuable means of securing rest at night. The reason why many people cannot sleep nights is that they have not done anything which entitles them to sound sleep. If a person wishes to rest, he must first get weary. One who will not exercise when able to do so, has no right to sleep.

God accepts man's hearty desire, and the will for the deed, when they have not power to fulfill it.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....Sept. 1, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞It is expected that Bro. D. T. Halstead will speak in Plymouth at the Christian Chapel next Sunday, Sept. 5th, at the usual hours in the morning and evening.

☞Wm. L. Himes, formerly editor of the A. C. Times, has turned a theological summerset, and joined the Protestant Episcopal Church. Hereafter he will wear long robes, sprinkle babies, and join the children on Easter in coloring eggs. William is a clever gentleman, and will be efficient in reading the prayer book. Exit, William.

☞Our meetings in Plymouth on Sunday, were well attended and a good interest in the Gospel of the kingdom was manifested. In the afternoon we repaired to Pretty Lake and baptized a young man by the name of Arthur Underwood, who has been connected with the RESTITUTION office as compositor, ever since the paper was published as a weekly. There are others, we trust, who will ere long become obedient to the Word of promise.

☞A correspondent in Colorado wishes to know our views upon the subject of dancing. It appears both from the Bible and profane history that dancing was quite generally practiced by all nations in ancient times. Among the Israelites, the men and women danced in two separate parties; there is no evidence of promiscuous dancing except at the erection of a deified calf or false god. The word "dance," in the original means a leap for joy, and was expressive of that feeling of ecstacy which characterized the people at their feasts and in the celebration of their victories. The allusions made to the subject in the Bible, would hardly justify modern frolics, where evil habits and bad associations frequently destroy what pleasure might be derived from an otherwise simple amusement. Cicero says, when referring to the Roman dances, "No one dances unless he is either drunk or mad." In view of this remark, dancing must have become associated with the lowest habits of the people of his times. It would appear from history that in proportion as people have become educated and christianized they have ceased to derive pleasure from such performances. Separately considered we can see no harm in the amusement, but when viewed in the light of the many evil associations now thrown around it, there can be no propriety in Christians seeking pleasure from it.

Spiritualism.

Spiritualism has assumed all sorts of phases since it put on its swaddling bands at Rochester, N. Y., 1848. Those who love the mysteries of the unknown, and are entertained by stories of haunted houses, have had their fill of spiritual revelations. Dark circles, table tippings, rope performances, trance speakers, and materialized ghosts, have had their day. Each one of these theories has been exploded, and the credulous multitude of hungry phantom hunters have been driven away unsatisfied. A new phase of the disease has now developed itself. A class of spiritualists claiming to be more advanced than the general mass, have adopted the name of spiritual scientists, and have commenced the publication of a weekly paper bearing that name. Hereafter, those who hold converse with ghosts, and perform tricks, and are led by spiritual impressions, will be known as scientists! This new class of spiritualists, however, set up the claim that nine-tenths of the pretended communications reported in the Banner of Light and similar publications are bogus. Seeing that these gentlemen are scientific and apparently candid, would it not be well to go the whole figure and denounce the other tenth? Until this is done, they will get but little credit as men of science. In view of the many changes through which spiritualism has past within the last few years, it reminds one of a rogue who makes frequent changes of garments to avoid detection.

The True Method.

It would seem from a casual reading of Paul's writings, that he felt much interest in the question of preaching. He told Timothy to "preach the word." If men in our day would only heed this command, much good would be the result. But they preach themselves too much, and the word too little. Some preach with abusive words, and, instead of preaching the truth in the love of truth, they spend their time abusing other people, showing up their errors, and using bitter invectives. All this may show that they have the "gift of tongues," but it will poison the very air, and ruin the preacher's influence. Men must be treated with candor, fairness, and respect. "Speaking the truth in love," is a divine maxim, and should be heeded by all who would save men. Broad-axes swords, knives and stones may do for those who are in error, but not for those who are preaching Christ. Remember that "he that winneth souls is wise." No soul can be won by cold abuse or ridicule. Men go to hear you preach, not to be abused. The commission to preach good news to the fallen, erring children of earth, does not mean "Go into all the world and abuse folks." If you would save men, preach the gospel as the power of God unto salvation, and prove to men that you are trying to better their condition, both morally and religiously. Let these principles apply to our whole life work and we shall see much noble fruit gathered in the golden harvest of God's day of peace.

The Altar.

"We have an altar, whereof they have no right to eat which serve the tabernacle." Heb. xiii. 10.

The world has its altar, where the rich pour out their oblations to the god of fashion and pride. The heathen have altars where they offer their sacrifices and make their vows. Indeed the world's history is but a history of altars and sacrifices. When the Roman legions invaded Carthage, two hundred children, of the first families, were offered to the god of war; but it staid not the hand of death. Hamilcar sacrificed himself to save Carthage, but ruin came. Altars of gold, of marble, and of wood have been reddened with the blood of victims slain. Noble soldiers, and beautiful maidens, and children, as well as the beasts of the field and fruits of the earth, have been offered to appease the wrath of offended deities, but the swift judgments came and the tides of war were not staid. Old Abraham stood upon Mount Moriah and erected an altar on which to slay his son. Noah made his offerings after the floods were abated. Jacob reared of stone an altar unto God, and called it "the gate of heaven." In the wilderness of sin, during Israel's sojourn in Canaan, and while the peerless temple of Solomon stood, altars were smoking with the blood of victims slain. But these altars are fallen down. Ages have swept between us and their times. Devastation sits where once the voice of song and praise was mingled with the evening sacrifice. The flocks no longer gather, the high priest has ceased to wear the breast-plate of judgment and forgiveness. Still we have assurance that there is an altar where the pure in heart may bring their offerings, and where the shekinal glory blazes in undimmed splendor around the throne of grace and truth. We need not come to this altar with hands wet with blood. No slain lamb, or turtle dove is required. The altar was made and the sacrifice provided, when the Son of God wet with his own blood the summit of Calvary, and wrought for us the crown of immortality. It is through the name of this glorious Christ, who stood as a brave knight to win for us the victories of faith and hope. He now stands as the great High Priest in the heavens, and will receive with love the offerings of earth's children. No walls bar our entrance, no creed can exclude us. It can be approached by night or by day, and he who stands in the presence of God for us, will ever bear our name before the Father and his angels. Blessed altar! Blessed sacrifice! Let us come boldly unto a throne of grace, that we may find help in time of need.

The Work of the Restitution.

Several months since a copy of the RESTITUTION fell into the hands of a young man living in Taswell county, Central Illinois, which gave him a glimpse of the truth, and interested him to the extent that he determined to see more, and subscribed for the paper. Since, it has made its weekly visits to him, and instructed him to the extent that he, following its directions resolved to attend the Rensselaer meeting, where he might for the first time in his life have an opportunity of hearing the ancient faith set forth by a living speaker. So according to appointed time for the meeting his resolution was put into action, and after a journey of 150 or 200 miles, he found himself at the appointed place, and his hopes realized in the meeting. And when opportunity was offered at the close of a discourse by Elder S. A. Chaplin, he confessed his faith in Jesus of Nazareth, and on Sunday in the hands of Brother D. T. Halstead, sank beneath the yielding waves, and arose to walk in an emblematical new life. May his faith never grow weaker, nor his hopes be darkened, but onward to the highlands of Eden and the kingdom of God with continued zeal move.

Aside from the interest of the scene above presented, and the young man's faith, this speaks a volume for the paper and its work, and tells us not to withhold it from the world. Brethren, step forward and put it into the hands of your friends and neighbors, and in days to come it will to your hearts bring joy and consolation.

His Name Shall be Called Wonderful.

Of all personages and names that figure in the world's history, the name of Jesus is most remarkable. No one like him ever appeared upon the stage of action before or since his times. He came into the world in the most humble and unostentatious manner, without any of the advantages of rank or wealth, and yet, by the simple force of his moral character and teaching, has won a distinction unapproached. For his condescending humiliation and obedience, God has given him a name surpassing every name in its glorious renown. On the world's roll of worthies it is the most exalted and honored. Wherever the name has been made known it has made its impression. Superstitious and apostate as his professed followers may have become, still the name Jesus is loved and adored; and the fondest associations and traditions cluster around it. It is a name that stands alone in all that constitutes true excellency of character. In unwearied earnestness, in disinterested benevolence, in unfaltering forbearance, in perfect righteousness, in guileless innocency, in kindest condescension, in spotless purity, and in perfect submission to the Divine will, the name of Jesus pre-eminently out-ranks every other name.

The Mohammedan reverees as sacred the name of Issa.

It is a wonderful name. It is a name that makes itself felt—a name that impresses the human mind as no other name ever has. On some it has a melting, subduing, transforming influence. Go into that house of Christian worship. There is a simple, plain table spread. There is nothing upon it but a white unleavened loaf, and a vessel filled with the red juice of the grape. Men and women of different ranks and conditions in society are gathered around that memorial repast. Some of them are persons of singular culture and refinement. Some of them possess worldly wealth. Some of them are the poor of this world. Tears are coursing down the saddened cheeks of all. Some one, in fervent and earnest diction, is calling the name of Calvary's Sufferer to remembrance. The world's history records instances of many who have suffered and died horrible deaths in the interests of their people, but the human heart wells over in tears only at the recital of the sufferings of the Man of Sorrows. There is some mysterious connection between the once agonized Martyr, and the participants in the emblems on that board;—his name is felt. There is another gathering in another place. Some of these too possess scientific culture, and worldly wealth and distinction. It is an infidel club. A visitor discourses learnedly about Confucius, or Zoroaster, or Mohammed. He may praise the Chinese philosopher and teacher; may speak of the Magian, as did the Greeks of old, as the great Master of all human and divine knowledge; or may highly laud the Arabian prophet; and there will be no heart-feeling manifested. But let one give the simple narrative of Jesus of Nazareth, and all the depths of depraved nature are stirred. The spite and hatred of the heart be-cloud the countenance with frowns. The name is felt,—but in another manner than by those around the sacramental emblems. Wonderful name! The French infidels themselves felt that it had some mysterious linking with human destiny;—for life—or for death.

In that room, where noise is hushed into stillness, is one who is very far gone into the death state; the pale cold hands can no longer respond to the grasp of nearest friend; the name of son and daughter is spoken into the ear of that father whose heart the names of children once thrilled; the parent hears not; the loved name of wife is addressed to the failing senses; its mention once stirred central emotions, but the laboring heart is too near standing still to be quickened by human love; the name Jesus is finally breathed into the ear of the dying Christian; the heart pulsates with joy at the sound, and the pallid countenance gleams once more with a smile that the ecstasy of love causes to play, for the last time, over the features. The name was felt, and life went out in sunset radiancy. There was another death-bed scene; the horrors of a night of despair were shutting down on the closing day of one who had lived in pleasures and been wanton; with his boon companions he had derided the name of earth's Savior; the grim spectre stood at his bed-side, and, with skeleton finger, pointed to an open tomb; the dying dissolute writhed in agony; one spoke of the Blessed Redeemer; "Hold, you wound me; that is the rock on which I split; I denied his name!" exclaimed the dying man. Poor Altamont; in death he felt the power of the name that he had despised through life. That name has affected the weal and woe of nations. For its rejection Judah was broken and dispersed, but, under its redeeming influence, all Israel shall one day be gathered, and rejoice as the first of nations.

European civilization owes all its ameliorating influences to the blessed name of the Christ of God. But the great blessedness of all nations, in this name above every name, is to be realized in the ages to come. When Paradise is world-wide, and the city of gold, pearls and gems, towers in Divine magnificence, as Earth's metropolis; then will the Bride, the Church, steal the eternal honors of that name for which it has borne reproaches here. The cross here—the crown hereafter.

The Signs of the Times.

"Now learn a parable of the fig tree; when his branch is yet tender, and putteth forth leaves, ye know that summer is nigh. So likewise ye, when ye shall see all these things, know that he (margin) is near, even at the door? Verily I say unto you, this generation shall not pass, till all these things be fulfilled. Heaven and earth shall pass away, but my words shall not pass away." Matt. xxiv. 32-35.

1. If the signs referred to in the foregoing language of Christ, are to be understood as relating to the literal sun, moon, and stars, and the literal earth, then these celestial bodies, and this terrestial body must literally pass away; because heaven and earth shall pass away. And as shown by the Revelator "no place can be found for them." Or according to another description, they pass away with a great noise. Also, according to Paul, heaven and earth are shaken, and the things shaken are moved out of the way. It will not do to affirm that these bodies are simply changed, and not literally moved. As well may it be claimed that a man is literally banished from his country when his many colored jail clothes are changed for the purple robes of royalty, while he still remains in his own country. To change the surface or dress of the earth, and for the earth to pass away is quite another thing. This is equally true of the heavenly bodies. No law of language, except that which governs symbols and highly wrought figures, will license any such use of terms. But as clearly proven in former articles, the signs of the deliverance of the Jews; and the cause of the anguish of the desponding nations, or the deep wail which shall ascend from the tribes of earth, will be the Lord's army, or the great white throne and him who sits on it, and the overwhelming wrath of the Lamb of God.

Or, according to Paul, the shaking of heaven and earth (including, of course, the sun, moon, and stars) represent the whirlwind of revolution which shall remove from the territory of Messiah's kingdom, the assembled kingdoms of the world, preparatory to the establishment of a kingdom which never can be moved. Thus, the Bible being its own expositor, the signs in the sun, moon, and stars, the shaking of heaven and earth; and the passing away of heaven and earth, represent the complete overthrow and extirpation of "the kingdom of men," to make way for the deliverance of Israel and the establishment of the kingdom of Messiah. The coming of Christ, the restoration of Israel, and the overthrow of the nations arrayed against them, are events inseparably joined together, in the conclusion of our Lord's discourse on the Mount.

2. The fig tree belongs to the Jews and their holy land. It is a beautiful symbol of their nationality. Christ cursed the Jews, and as a nation, they perished. But they were only to perish for the age. They did not perish without a sweet promise that they should see him again, and hail him as their long expected Messiah and Deliverer. Matt. xxiii. 39. When he comes the second time, he will come as they expected him at his first advent. He will come not as the babe of Bethlehem, and the despised Nazarene, but as King of kings and Lord of lords. Not in the oxen's manger, wrapped with swaddling clothes, and associated with the beasts of the field; but vested with the royalty of heaven and earth, with all the holy angels, and all the redeemed of earth as his associates. Not wearing the crown of thorns now, but many crowns will be seen gleaming on his brow, the glorious insignia of his rightful position as the universal sovereign of earth. The very same reason the Jews refused him at his first advent, will be the reason they will receive him at his second advent. They rejected him because he did not come with the pomp and pageantry of an earthly potentate, to abase with the dust imperial Cæsar, and deliver his chosen people. The death and revival of the Jewish nation is beautifully symbolized by their own native fig tree. Christ cursed the fig tree, and it withered and died. Again, he will bless the fig tree, and the tender leaves and buds will indicate its restoration and fruitfulness.

4. When the Jews shall see all the signs of Christ's coming and deliverers, they may know that their deliverance is at hand, with just as much certainty as they might know that summer was nigh, when they should see the fig tree putting forth its branches and leaves.

3. The generation which shall see all these signs, shall not pass away until Christ comes and delivers Israel and establishes his kingdom. Some render the original word translated generation, race. To this we object,—

1. Because it implies that when all these things are fulfilled, the Jewish race will pass away. The Bible teaches the entire perpetuity of the house of Jacob. Luke i. 32-33. The ordinances of heaven and earth will sooner pass away, than that the seed of Israel should cease to be a nation forever. Jer. xxxi. 31 37.

2. The generation living cotemporaneously with these signs is not to pass away until all be fulfilled.

3. The first of these signs will not appear until subsequently to the times of the Gentiles, as has been clearly proven.

4. The generation which is not to pass away until all these signs are fulfilled is to be eye witnesses of all these signs; it cannot, therefore, relate to a generation who will have lived antecedently to the first of these signs, i. e. the termination of the Gentile times.

5. There would be no object in presenting the signs of their deliverance to any generation except the one that shall be subjects of this predicted deliverance. The generation living cotemporaneously with Noah and the flood were warned. The generation cotemporaneously with the destruction of Judah and Jerusalem saw the signs of judgments and deliverance. Just so in the case before, the generation living and seeing the signs immediately preceding Christs coming and kingdom, will not pass away until all these things shall be fulfilled.

6. The demonstrative adjective, this, refers to the generation that sees these predicted signs, not the generation living when Christ uttered these predictions. Refering to the generation living cotemporaneously with Christ, he says, "this generation," because it was the generation nearest from his standpoint. But having traced the history of that people down to the termination of the times of the Gentiles, he plants his feet there and then describes the subsequent signs of the deliverance of the very people who had been held in slavery during that period of time. Standing right there and speaking concerning the generation living at this time, and seeing these signs, Christ says, "this generation shall not pass," etc. If, from this standpoint, he had refered to the generation living at the beginning of this dispensation, instead of its ending, he would have said that generation shall not pass till all be fulfilled. This, denotes the event nearest by, and that, the event most remote. Christ, as before said, was predicting events to occur at the close of this dispensation; when therefore he refered to the generation who should witness these events, he uses the adjective this, to point out this generation.

Thus, this generation—this ye—who shall see these events, shall not pass away until they shall be fulfilled. The generation who saw the first events described by Christ in this prophecy, passed away, so may the generation, who shall see the last named events pass away.

☞Bro. W. J. B. Fennimore, of Lincoln, wishes us to say that he will preach, as the friends may arrange, in Goodland, on Saturday evening before the second Sunday in September. We suppose also, over Sunday.

☞Bro. T. E. Adams, formerly of Kansas, gave us a call on Wednesday. He has concluded to settle at Argos, about nine miles from Plymouth. The church at Argos will now be able to have preaching oftener than heretofore.

A Singular Incident.

A curious incident is related by the Newport, R. I., postmaster. A few days ago a letter arrived there directed to a gentleman who owns a lock-box. Upon looking at it, without opening it the gentleman said that it did not belong to him, and it was advertised. By some means, however, the letter was again placed in his box; this time the owner opened the envelope, and found that it contained information of the sickness of a child who bore the same name as one of his children who had died some years ago, and the name of the writer was the same as that of his first wife who had also departed this life some time ago. In other particulars the letter would have been just what the first gentleman might have received years ago.

Can it be possible that the letter above referred to was written to the husband by the spirit of the departed wife. Many are the incidents given forth to the world by spiritualists less curious than this. This indeed would be a splendid text for them were it not for the following, which we have detached from the above extract and place below these remarks: "The letter has since been delivered to the rightful owner."

A Denomination.

The word, denomination, is not found in the common English Bible. Neither is the idea therein contained, except it be the "bundles" of Matt. xiii. 30. The "true vine" and "the branches," are clearly defined in John xv. 1-5.

A denomination cannot be a branch of the true vine—an individual way. "I am the vine, ye (the disciples) are the branches," says the "Son of Man."

Who will appeal from his decision? Many persons belong to a denomination without realizing it. Not long since a member of the Advent Christian Church, said to me, "You need not think you can draw us away from the Bible." "Bless your heart," I replied, "I don't want to draw you away from the Bible, I was only telling you as a reason why I don't join your Church here, that it has an unscriptural name like all other "denominations." "Denomination! We Adventists don't belong to any denomination. The Bible is our 'only rule of faith and practice,' for our covenant says so," was the rejoinder.

I have no doubt that many honest persons belonging to that class of Adventists represented by the World's Crisis, do not know that their "chief priests and elders" have labored for years to build up a denomination, which they now claim to have succeeded in doing. In that paper of the 10th of May, is an article by I. C. Wellcome, author of their leading denominational works, in which he quotes from Zion's Herald the following statement:

"From being a simple cry in the wilderness, 'Prepare ye the way of the Lord,' 'Second Adventism' has become a denomination, with its regular organization and established creed and ordinances."

Other quotations follow to prove that the "denomination" is becoming popular, and having the right hand of fellowship extended to it by the daughters of Apocalyptic Babylon. I once labored to build up "a denomination" in Kansas, known as the "Advent Christian Church," but as soon as I saw the truth I left all for Jesus, and then the "denomination" had no more use for me. I returned, in as good order as possible, and with the "sword of the Spirit" I have ever since been trying to be "a good soldier of Jesus Christ" in the grand army of the Lord. I am laboring now to get men and women to become disciples like those postles ones who were "first called Christians at Antioch."

O, that others of my Advent friends would do likewise and obey the warning voice of Revelation. "Come out of her, my people, that ye be not partakers of her sins, and that ye receive not of her plagues." This text implies that some of the Lord's people are in Babylon, and so I believe that many in the Advent ranks are of the "One Faith." But as the "denomination" draws from the world, its hold is loosed upon the "called and chosen, and faithful," who shall have "part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years" over "the nations which are in the four quarters of the earth" in the glorious age to come. So mote it be.

The Christian Watchman.

A HYMN.

Watchman, tell me, does the morning
Of fair Zion's glory dawn?—
Have the signs that mark its coming,
Yet upon my pathway shone?
Pilgrim, yea; arise, look round thee,
Light is breaking in the skies;
Gird thy bridal robes around thee,
Morning dawns! arise! prize!

Watchman, see! the light is beaming
Brighter still upon the way:
Signs through all the earth are gleaming,
Omens of the coming day.
When the Jubal Trumpet, sounding,
Shall awake from land and sea,
All the saints of God, now sleeping,
Clad in immortality.

Watchman, hail the light ascending
Of the grand Jubilatic year,
All with voices loud proclaiming
That the Kingdom's very near.
Pilgrim, yes, I see just yonder,
Quaint's glorious heights arise;
Salem, too, appears in grandeur,
Towering neath its cloudless skies.

Watchman, in that golden city,
Seated on his jasper throne,
Zion's King, enthroned in beauty,
Reigns in peace, from zone to zone.
There on spirit hill- and mountains,
Golden beams serenely glow;
Pearly streams and crystal fountains,
On whose bank- sweet flow'rets grow.

Watchman, see the land is nearing,
With its vernal fruits and flowers.
Oh! just yonder, O, how cheering.
Blooms forever Eden's bowers.
Hark! the choral strains there ringing.
Wafted on the balmy air!
See the millions! hear them singing!
Soon the pilgrims will be there.

Our Bible Class.

Lesson for Sept. 4th; Matt. viii. 10, 17.

Textual Language—When the even was come, they brought unto him many that were possessed with devils; and he cast out the spirits with his word, and healed all that were sick; That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sickness.

Leading Thought—Miracles.

ANALYSIS—Topics for Discussion:

1. What is a Miracle? Definition—Written by each member of the class.
2. By whom performed?
3. Have any now the power to perform miracles?
4. By what power performed?
5. In what does a miracle consist?
1. In the production of the effect? or,
2. In the acquisition of the power necessary to the effect?

Secondary Thoughts—1. Devils; 2. Infirmities borne.

Devils—1. Who or what were they?
2. How gain possession of the subject?
3. How cast out?

Infirmities—1. What are they?
2. Who bears them?
3. How transferred?

Human Physiology.

The great question proposed to the world by the Idumean sage, repeated by farsel' bard, and quoted by him who sat at Gamaliel's feet, and afterward thundered forth from Mar's Hill in the name of the unknown God, "What is Man," is not only a theological question, but it is a chemical question, and likewise a physiological question.

Then as a physiological question we propose offering, through the RESTITUTION, a few short articles for the consideration of its readers.

It is generally thought, and also taught, that the immortal soul, or spirit, is the organ of thought, reason, and all intelligence. This idea has been held and cherished so long, and so dear, that one is thought to be almost insane, and tending rapidly the downward road to infidelity, who dares to call it in question. But be the decision of the world as it may, in the absence of testimony to that effect, and in the presence of so much to the contrary, we must call the position in question.

And in support of our convictions upon this point, we quote from R. T. Brown, M. D., chemist in chief department agriculture, Washington, D. C. In his work on Physiology, published by Wilson, Hinkle & Co., Cincinnati, on page 90, he says: "The spinal cord and brain, considered as a single organ, performs at least three distinct and independent functions:

1. It is the source, either directly, or indirectly, of all muscular motion.
2. It is the seat of sensation.
3. It is the organ of thought."

With these statements before us, we will arrange them in the order of physiscar action. Then the spinal cord and brain considered as a sigle organ, is,—

1. The seat of sensation, receiving the impressions from the outside world through the sensory nerves.
2. It is the source either directly, or indirectly, of all muscular motion, after the reception of the sensations from without, in return sent out upon the motor nerves.
3. It is the organ of thought—taking these impressions from without, and combining them into one.

Since then we find, that the brain is the seat of sensation or impressions, and the organ of thought, combining two or more of these impressions into one, are we not warranted in arising one step higher, and taking the position that the brain likewise is the organ of reason, raising two or more thoughts, comparing, and combining them.

And again, since the reception of the sensational impressions, and the returned action upon the motor nerves are physical acts performed by the brain, are we not justified in the conclusion that thought and reason likewise are physical acts of the same organ. G. M. M.

Indiana Conference.

Notice of the annual meeting of the conference of the Church of God, in Indiana, on the 12th day of August, 1875, at Rensselaer, Jasper county, Ind., having been given through the RESTITUTION. Members began to arrive on said day, but for the reason that many could not get there until late in the day and night, the conference was not organized until 9 a. m. of the following day, when Br. S. Dwiggins was called to the chair, and the writer hereof appointed secretary. In a brief but pointed speech, the chairman thanked the conference for the honor conferred upon him, and declared the readiness of the meeting to transact business, and expressed the hope that all business would be transacted promptly and harmoniously.

On motion of Bro. D. T. Halstead, visitors from other states were invited to participate in the business of the conference. On motion, brethren Chamberlin, Taber, and Miller, were appointed as a committee to arrange the order of business and select speakers.

On motion of Brother Taber, a committee consisting of one or more from each church represented in the conference, was appointed to arrange all business which reference to evangelical labors.

Adjourned to meet at 9 a. m., August 14th, at which time the directors of the Publishing Association, being engaged in a meeting, it was decided to occupy the time in social worship and to meet again in conference at 2 p. m.

At 2 p. m. conference met as per adjournment, and the chair declared the readiness of the meeting to receive the report of the committee on Evangelical labors. The said committee then made in substance the following report: That Brother D. T. Halstead, state Evangelist for the past year, labored as such Evangelist for six months, during which time he immersed nineteen into the Christ, and that he received for his labors $434.35. That they approve the mode of Evangelizing here-afore employed, and recommend its continuance, and the appointment of solicitors, whose duty it shall be to solicit, collect and forward to the state finance committee, in quarterly installments, beginning October 1st, 1875, subscriptions to the Evangelical fund, and to report to the said finance committe by the 16th day of September, of said year, the amounts subscribed. This report and suggestions being approved, the following brethren were appointed solicitors: Plymouth, W. D. Thompson; Antioch, Israel D. Roberts; Argos, Wm. Bullshack; Tyner, Hugh Barnhill; German township, Marshall county, Hugh Barnhill; Fairmount, Mason Maxey; Windfall, A. M. Legg; Little Wildcat, A. J. Lyons; Burgetts Corners, Wm. H. Fryar; West Lebanon, J. W. Smith; Big Wildcat, A. McClellan; West Liberty, F. M. Roberts; Goodland, Wm. Mills; Salem, Geo. O. Pumphrey; Rensselaer, J. H. Willey; Rich Valley, Geo. W. Colder; Jackson township, Kosciusko county, J. L. Wince; Hartford City, Ira Casterline; Dunkirk, C. D. Daken; Dundee, Nathaniel Roby; Claysville, Huntington county, J. L. Wince; Cole Creek, Fountain county, S. J. Howard; Anderson, S. G. Clark; Lincoln, J. F. Wagoner; Indianapolis, J. Cox; Remington, H. M. Babb; Summerset, Josiah Miller; Sand Hill, Fulton county, Alphonso Drew.

The chair then declared the readiness of the conference to hear the report of the finance committee; and the following report in substance, was submitted and approved: Received $466.86; paid D. T. Halstead, $434.35; balance on hand, $31.50. Cyrus Taber, J. G. Roberts and Wm. Bullshack, were then appointed as the state finance committee for the ensuing year.

The conference then ordered that Bro. F. M. Roberts receive letters of recommendation as a minister of the Gospel.

The directors of the Publishing Association then gave through their president, a verbal report of their business, showing that the stock of the Association is not all taken; that the subscription to the RESTITUTION had been increased 600 copies, and is now nearly on a self-sustaining basis, and suggesting that an effort be made to secure increased subscriptions for stock, and also for the RESTITUTION. Fifty additional copies of the RESTITUTION were at once subscribed for.

It was then ordered that those who were appointed as solicitors for the Evangelical fund, also, solicit subscriptions for the stock of said Association, and for subscriptions to the RESTITUTION. It was then resolved that Brother Chaplain be appointed to solicit, collect, and disburse a fund for general Evangelizing. It was further resolved that a conference be held quarterly during the year, as shall be arranged by the finance committee. Adjourned to meet at the call of said committee.

Your secretary would say farther by way of remark, that the attendance was large, and that the greatest harmony prevailed in the transaction of all the business, and that the feeling of all present from a distance, was that the brethren and sisters of Rensselaer had done their utmost to render all present comfortable, and their stay as pleasant as possible; and were, therefore, entitled to the thanks of all who had enjoyed their kind hospitalities. May we continue to enjoy a recurrence of such meetings until the Master comes.

A. M. LEGG, Secretary.

Gleanings.

A good brother in New York city writes:

"I am confined very closely to my business, and can only preach through the RESTITUTION. If I had means I would pay for one thousand copies and circulate gratuitously."

This brother is already taking four copies.

Bro. D. C. Robison, of Ayersville, Putnam county, Missouri, writes from Havanna, Mo., as follows:

"We are having a grand meeting here at Havanna. Bro. Dugger is present with us. Bro. Orem was here and preached for us a few days ago. The people seem to be anxious to hear the truth preached.

"I live some twelve miles east of this in Putnam county. I am alone in the "One Faith" where I live, and find the RESTITUTION a great help and comfort to me. If any of the brethren pass this way, they are requested to call. I am surrounded by all the sects who are laboring to build up Satan's falsehood, "Thou shalt not surely die." We prefer to believe the truth which our Savior says will make us free.

Your brother in hope of eternal life,
D. C. ROBISON.

AYERSVILLE, Putnam Co., Mo.

The following letter from Bro. Jno. A. Thomas, of Silver Lake will be an item of news and interest to many of our readers:

Dear brethren and readers of the RESTITUTION, as we like to hear from each other, I thought I would write and tell you how we are getting along here. Bro. Hutch came here a year ago last February, and remained several days, and preached what the people called a new doctrine. He has visited us several times since, and the result is that some of the people have gladly received the word, and have been baptized into the Christ, and are now trying to follow "The Lamb that taketh away the sin of the world."

We met last Sunday at Bro. River's, and read and talked on the Christian hope. Bro. J. L. Winse will preach there next Sunday. The following are the names of the members of our congregation:

Henry Messmore and wife; Henry Tillman and wife; Samuel Briser and wife; Martin Deny and wife; Cyrus Musselman and wife; Cynthia Messmore, Osibed Thomas, and J. A. Thomas.

Bro. Eli and Sister Emma Stucker, of Malvern, Osage county, Kan., write that they cannot well do without the RESTITUTION, in their isolated condition, being twenty miles from the congregation, Indian Hill, Colfy Co., where their membership is. They write that there is a fine opening for good to be done in the neighborhood by a good speaker who will go in and present the things pertaining to the kingdom of God and the name of Christ. There appears to be a congregation of 1st day Adventists in this vicinity which need only to be taught a little more perfectly concerning the intervening age. Can some of our preaching brethren in Kansas visit them?

The following lines from Old Father Gower, formerly of Mapleton, Kansas, we publish, as they may prove to be interesting to many:

Now a few words to the readers of the RESTITUTION. I will start Monday, Aug. 23, for Texas, if the Lord is willing. If there are any readers of the RESTITUTION in Texas, please to write as quick as convenient to Farmington as I expect to be there a few days. I expect to make my home in Texas, and am going there with the expectation of making, as unpopular as it may be, a few "soul-sleepers." I can not tell exactly where I will locate, but I expect to leave here preaching and land there at the same business.

A few lines from Bro. J. C. Kimsey, of Prescott, Linn Co., Kansas, shows his faith still to be strong, and at work preparing for the press a small work on Prophecy. Bro. Kimsey has devoted much of his time for the last few years to the study of prophecy, and we are satisfied that his work will be a readable one.

Correspondence.

DEAR BROTHER REED:

Our unfortunate friend, (now a brother in the Lord), arrived safely yesterday morning, with your letter of introduction.

He expressed himself anxious to obey the requirements of the Gospel; so we repaired to the water in the evening, and Bro. James baptized him.

This morning he went on his way rejoicing—homeward bound. We furnished him with enough of the needful to see him home.

This evening we again resorted to the water, where I was afforded the extreme pleasure of baptizing into Christ a young friend here by the name of Albert L. Ordean, who is a worthy and exemplary young man. He took much interest in learning the truth. He has been a subscriber to the RESTITUTION for about a year. His accession to our small band will furnish us effective help.

So the good work is slowly but surely progressing—one by one God's children are being called out by the blessed Gospel, which serves as God's power unto salvation. Soon the last of the royalty shall have been called out, and the Saviour come to make up his jewels. May we be among that happy concourse is my humble prayer. Our faith and hope have the power to sullyen, and are sustaining in their nature; they are fixed on things that are real, substantial and enjoyable—adapted to the real wants of humanity—not the result of mere fancy or imagination, but rest for their foundation upon the plain and immutable promises of God.

This week's RESTITUTION received to-day. In glancing over its pages I am forced to the opinion that it is a good number, above average. I however failed to see the report of the Rensselaer conference, which was promised in last week's issue. Did you omit it? Who were the three persons baptized there?

We had a fire here on Monday afternoon—part of our works burned to the second floor, for a distance of about 400 feet. Loss about $9,000, amply insured.

Bro. Bond, of Cleveland, expected to visit us this week, and remain over Sunday, but he sends us word that on account of sickness he is prevented from doing so.

With kindest regards to yourself and those about your home and the office, I remain, as ever,

Your Brother,
A. D. ESHELMAN,

CANTON, O., Aug. 27.

TO RESTITUTION:—

Dear brethren in Christ I would like to say a few words through our noble paper to the scattered ones of the Church of God, that I am still battling with the world of sin and superstition to overcome them. There are but few of us located here, yet not in an organized capacity, but we still love to talk of the better thing when the Redeemer comes. We wish some good preaching brother would come here and give us a series of lectures. We have a good field here for an opening to sound out the Word of Truth. Many are becoming more enlightened upon the impending danger of their situation; the churches of the present day giving but little encouragement and less hope.

We love to read those articles of light in our blessed paper from such able writers as Brother J. F. Wilcox, A. W. Button, J. A. Simonds, and many others, too numerous to mention. We are rejoiced to see the articles elucidated from your own pen every week, and the noble stand you have taken in behalf of the Truth and its dissemination. And I beg leave here to express my warmest congratulations to Brother Wilcox for his endeavors in producing such sound logic as was manifested in his article, "A Major Proposition and its Results," and that I have given the subject a thorough examination and find no flaw whatever in it.

Our hearts are enlisted in the cause of our Master, and we would gladly do more to sound out the word of truth if we were able. But we must labor hard daily for the things our bountiful Father provideth, always giving Him thanks and praises; also daily praying for the kingdom to come, and the chief Shepherd to appear. Even so come, Lord Jesus, and come quickly.

JOSIAH M. FIKE.

GARRISON, Iowa, Aug. 19th, 1875.

Father Hyacinthe.

This reformer of modern Catholicism, who enjoyed such an ovation in this country a few years ago, has lately baptized his baby. The ceremony is thus described by an eye witness:

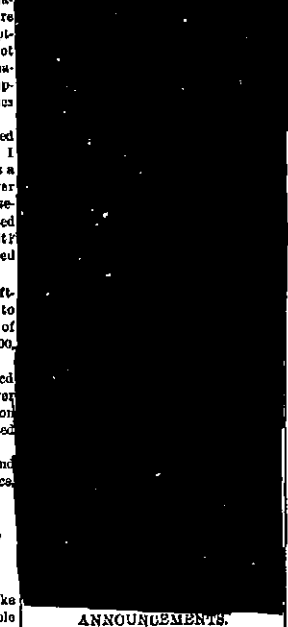
"And then, after the baptism, when the little child had not only been baptized, but anointed on the forehead and breast, and signed with the sign of the cross, and touched with saliva on ears and nostrils, and had received salt in the mouth, and a white robe, and a lighted candle, the soul of the father overflowed in a prayer that was not in the liturgy, and which sounded like the song of Zacharias in the Gospel of Luke."

A paper commenting objects to this use of Zacharias, as undoubtedly that venerable priest was never engaged in that kind of business.

What an imposing ceremony! Wetting the ears and nose of an innocent babe with saliva in the name of the Lord! Putting salt in its mouth and a candle in its hand to typify, no doubt, that some time that babe would be for salt and a light to a decaying and benighted people! But, in the name of religion and good sense, what foolery! Jesus blessed little children, but when did he ever put salt in their mouths or spit in their ears and call it a religious ordinance?

C. G. MARSTON.

God's children are like stars that smile brightest in the darkest night; like gold, that is brighter for the furnace; like incense, that becomes fragrant by burning; like the chamomile plant, that grows fastest when trampled upon.



ANNOUNCEMENTS.

The Annual Conference of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will meet at the Howard Union meeting-house, near Brother Elliott's, in the township of Durand, county of Winnebago, and state of Illinois, on the 15th day of September, 1875, at 10½ o'clock, a. m., to continue over Sunday.

I would suggest that those who wish to be met at the railroad should drop a line, directed to Brother H. P. Elliott, Pecatonica, Illinois, to that effect; that he can make arrangements to meet them. They should state to what place they will come; whether to Durand or to Pecatonica. Those coming on the Western Union will stop at Davis, and those coming on the North-Western will stop at Pecatonica.

J. S. ARNOLD,
In behalf of the Congregation.

To all the Brethren who attend the Iowa Conference:

The Conference will be held near Pleasantville, Marion county, Iowa, on Thursday, September 9th, 1875.

Those coming by railroad will please come on Thursday, the 9th, and stop at Otley on the I. C. R. R., Marion county, Iowa, where there will be conveyances ready to take them to the place of meeting. Trains arrive from the west at 9 o'clock a. m., from the east at 2:15 p. m.

N. B.—Those coming by railroad would confer a favor if they would drop a line to my address a few days before the meeting.

JAMES M MAYNE,
Pleasantville, Marion County, Iowa.

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in the states of Iowa will be held near Pleasantville, Marion county, commencing on Thursday evening at 7 o'clock before the second Sunday in September, 1875, and hold over the Sunday following.

Brother Mayne will give notice at what railroad station brethren and friends will be met and conveyed to place of meeting.

All are invited.

A. MITCHAM, P. C.

AMES, Iowa, July 24, 1875.

The Lord willing, a general meeting of the brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith, will be held near Brother Henry M. Corey's residence, two miles west of Sulphur Springs, Williamson county, Ill., commencing Friday, September 10th, at 2:30 p. m., and continuing over the following Sunday. Let all the friends of Jesus, who "love his appearing," come to this first conference in Southern Illinois. Adventists of all classes are especially invited.

ABNER HANFORD.

I am ready and willing to go anywhere to "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and hear me "at the time appointed."

Having no means of my own, my traveling expenses will have to be met from some other source. Let the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, and at accessible points in Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, who desire a course of Biblical Lectures, address me at AMES, Union county, Ill.

THE RESTITUTION.

Make Haste to Live.

BONAR.

Make haste, O man, to live!
For thou so soon must die,
Time hurries past thee like the breeze;
How swift the moments fly!
Make haste, O man, to live!

Make haste, O man, to do
Whatever must be done,
Thou hast no time to lose in sloth!
To-day will soon be gone.
Make haste, O man, to live!

To breathe, and wake, and sleep,
To smile, to sigh, to grieve,
To move in idleness through earth,
This, this is not to live.
Make haste, O man, to live!

The useful, not the great;
The thing that never dies,
The silent toil that is not lost,
Set these before thine eyes.
Make haste, O man, to live.

Make haste, O man, to live!
The time is almost o'er.
O sleep not, dream not, but arise,
The Judge fast at the door.
Make haste, O man, to live!

Meeting of the Brethren at Winchester, Virginia.

In accordance with previous notice an assembly of the Church of God gathered from the counties of Frederick, Shenandoah, and adjoining country, was held at the new "House of the Brethren" at Winchester, Va., on Saturday, 7th inst., and the following Sunday, Monday, and Tuesday.

The undersigned gladly complied with the earnest invitation of our brother, N. J. Morgan, and other brethren, to be present. It was a most gratifying occasion, long to be remembered with thanks to the Father of Mercies, for the encouragement and consolation it afforded to all.

I regret that time and space are wanting to record the labors of love and the patient continuance in well-doing of our earnest companion and untiring brother, Morgan, in his contention for the truth, in the face of heated opposition, and the bitter reproaches of the religious sects and their allies. Suffice it to say, that taking to himself "the whole armor of God," and solitary and alone, without other help than a firm and abiding faith in the all sufficiency of the oracles of God, Brother Morgan has been breasting the tide of reproach and obloquy for nearly twenty years, in that country, steadily living down opposition by patience and an upright life, has at last succeeded in planting the banner of truth firmly in the very midst of former enemies and persecutors. Within the compass of about eighty miles around Winchester, he has introduced the knowledge of the truth, and secured the intelligent obedience to the gospel of the kingdom of God, of nearly one hundred worthy persons, of good and honest hearts—both men and women—who chiefly came out of the darkness and confusion of the sectarian Babylon, and who now, like Candace's treasurer, go on their way rejoicing in the truth as it is in Jesus, and in the faith once for all delivered to the saints.

It was my great satisfaction to become personally acquainted with many of those who had traveled far and over bad roads and swollen streams, to meet with those of like precious faith. It was a joyful union of kindred hearts, warmly beating in love to God and love to each other, in the strongest of all fraternal bonds—and we were truly glad thus to greet one another, and thank God and take courage in the midst of the conflict we wage with this evil generation. By a steady perseverance and persistence in the right course, Brother Morgan has obtained from the brethren and friends of truth, the necessary means to erect a new and commodious building to hold meeting in, which by common consent we agree to name "The House of the Brethren."

It is adjoining Brother M.'s own residence, in an elevated part of the city, and in full view of the beautiful scenery of the valley of Virginia. It seats comfortably, more than two hundred people, and on this occasion was well filled with most attentive audiences, embracing many of the most intelligent of a community remarkable for its culture and refinement, among whom was the mayor of the city, eminent members of the bar, some of the clergy, and the most respectable and intelligent citizens may be mentioned. Here we discoursed of the good things of the kingdom and of the glad tidings of future blessedness in store for our race and world, under the gracious reign of God's king, and the saints; which makes the Gospel the power of God for salvation to all who believe it.

Better attention and better appreciation of these grand and lofty themes could hardly have been evinced. The effect and interest of these presentations of the word of truth, kindly but boldly urged may be inferred from the notice by one of the city papers, of the peculiarities—some of them which I herein enclose—that distinguish us, and which it would gratify the brethren and friends in that region where your paper is read, and will be more freely taken to see published in the RESTITUTION.

The meeting was one of brotherly love, pure and simple; of fraternal fellowship and sympathy among the members of the household of faith. There was no legislation—no making of rules and regulations, no attempts at church organization, no schemes for making or saving money, or selling the truth. The brethren present were united on these points, and will, it is hoped, so continue to the end. Not that they do not feel and recognize the duty and honor of providing by their means, for the faithful preaching of the word. On the contrary, they remind and exhort one another to this effect, and hold up the hands by a liberal sustentation in money or means, of those, and the families of such as labor in the word and doctrine; but this they do voluntarily, not by constraint or by contract; hence they need not to impose annual taxation. No church rates, no president, no secretary or other official almoner to minister their charity, with a treasury in every congregation, created by weekly contributions, strictly and conscientiously "laid by in store as God has prospered" each, and this not by dimes and pennies, but by liberal assessment they can always have a fund on hand which they can increase and enlarge as occasions of duty especially require. They recognize and comply with the apostolic precept and the primitive practice and enable others, if more competent than themselves, to go "everywhere preaching the word." This they maintain, is God's plan, and they dare not invent any other.

It would be a labor of love to record here the names and personal history of many of these saints and servants of God, some very aged, and all of good and honest hearts, who rejoice in the truth; but space forbids, except to record that the swift judgments came, as tides of war were not staid. Jeroham stood upon Mount Hogid erected an altar on which to his son. Noah made his offerings After floods were abated. Jacob of stone an altar unto God, and it "the gate of heaven." In the ness of sin, during Israel's sojourn Canaan, and while the peerless of Solomon stood, altars were ing with the blood of victims But these altars are fallen down. 5. That the world will never be converted to truth and righteousness by preaching the gospel. That the means and instrumentalities for this end must come from God, and that this high destiny of reclaiming man and the world from his sin and revolt against God, is reserved for Jesus and his resurrected saints, who will accomplish this purpose by his personal reign over all the earth, in great power and glory, and that in view of the speedy coming of our Lord, to that end he is now "choosing out from among the Gentiles, by the preaching of the word, (Acts xv. 14) a people for his name."

ALLEN B. MAGRUDER.
BALTIMORE, MD.

A PECULIAR PEOPLE.

The following is the paper refered to, in the Winchester "News," of Aug. 14th. The editor probably did not know that the Bible calls the Lord's servants a "peculiar people." A. B. M.

As an item of news and interest to our readers we chronicle the somewhat recent appearance in our community, of a religious body whose faith and practice make them a peculiar people. A meeting has been recently held by them, and a series of lectures been delivered in this place by one of their speakers, Mr. A. B. Magruder, of Baltimore, which attracted the attention of our citizens, who evinced their interest in the novel and strange doctrines they advance.

Through the efforts of Mr. N. J. Morgan, a citizen of this place and one of their number, a neat and commodious building for their use had been erected, adjoining his residence, on the corner of Washington and Pall Mall streets, where the meetings were held. Members of the community from this county, Shenandoah and adjoining counties attended, and the occasion drew together large and interested audiences of strangers and citizens. Upon inquiry we learn some of the peculiarities of their faith which indicate a wide divergence from the commonly received opinions.

They accept no name other than one of Bible coinage, calling themselves individually, disciples, saints Christians, believers, brethren, etc., and, collectively, the Church of God or Church of Christ, refusing to accept or acknowledge any name not inscribed in the Bible. They declare their adherence to the Bible alone as their guide in religion, and they reject altogether, as untaught in the scriptures, the doctrine of the immortality of the soul, the translation to heaven or hell at death, or at any time, of the dead, and the eternal torment of the wicked in hell or elsewhere. They maintain that there is no immortality for man out of Christ; that the wicked, who are those that sin against light and knowledge, will not live forever, but will be utterly destroyed after enduring a previous punishment according to their deeds; that the earth will never be destroyed but become the everlasting abode of the righteous; that on this earth the righteous will be rewarded, and the sinner judged and punished; that the resurrection is the only hope of future life; that two deaths and two resurrections are taught in the Bible; that Christ will return to this world, put down and subdue all existing kingdoms and governments over man, and on their ruins erect His divine kingdom, and reign with his immortalized saints, visibly, and in great power over all its inhabitants; that all the nations now or in the past, who have lived in times of ignorance, and consequently having no opportunities, have no responsibility, and will never rise from the dead; that all men's responsibilities before God are to be measured by their opportunities; that God will punish the wicked less than they deserve, and reward the righteous far above their just deserts; that the twelve tribes of Israel will be restored to their land and become the Immediate subjects of Christ's reign, in Jerusalem. Then, on David's throne reconstructed, seated, whilst his empire, as King of a white race, will extend over the whole earth, filled with which will then be Paradise restored. They have no clerical order among Men and do not preach nor teach for conditioney or on salaries. They hold that ary male member is at liberty to ch and preach the faith once delivered to the saints, as time and opportunity is afforded. They do not call on worldly outside of their own brotherhood for give money to help their cause; but maintain that on the people of God being the duty and privilege of supporting and maintaining the church of God, calling ich they recognize as the pillar and ground of the truth. They refuse to record bear or bear arms; and whilst carefully obeying all the laws enacted by state, they do not vote nor take active part in public affairs, awaiting the time to come in God's providence and at his pleasure, when he will supersede the present government of the world, and establish his kingdom terious earth, and rule over men in the ognizance of his Son and the saints associated with him.

name they are congregationalists, each arate church or body taking the le as the guide, and meeting together every first day of the week, to break worship and keep the ordinances of the Lord's house, to preach the gospel of kingdom, and encourage and exhort another to continue in the faith ter, or to the end.

Chinese Mr. Morgan, we understand, is a to speak for the respectful hearing given by Greeks audiences during the meetings, and ll lecture at his house, next Sunday all morning, at 10½ o'clock, and also at may light.

Antique Volumes.

A recent number of Potter's Magazine contains a description of what is claimed to be the most ancient bound volume in existence. It is a copy of the Old Testament, written nearly three centuries before Christ. It was found in the year 241 B. C., and has since then remained in the possession of the high priests of the Samaritans, who have successively guarded it with jealous care. It was shown in 1866 to Mrs. Eliza Rogers, by its then custodian, Selamah. The sheets are strongly bound together with stout cords firmly fastened. The outer cover, which is of papyrus, like that on which the book is written, save that it is a little thicker, does not extend across the back, but wooden frames at top and bottom hold the binding firm. The volume is nearly four inches thick, and, except that the exterior is somewhat worn with handling, it remains in the exact condition in which it was first discovered.

A psalter from the monastery of St. Hubert, in Ardennes, (Luxemburg,) and known as the psalter of Louis the Good, has been lately sent to Paris by an English book-seller, who purchased it for 30,000f., and hopes to sell it for 6,000f. more. The book was described by Mabillon, in the 17th century, but for upwards of 75 years the book has been missing, and was finally regarded as lost. It is written in gold uncials, and contains verses in honor of the king to whom it was presented. One half of the cover is of ivory exquisitely carved, and the other half is of wrought silver, representing the king who owned the manuscript. The work is one of the marvels of mediæval calligraphy.

Assyrian Libraries.

The excavations prosecuted in Nineveh have revealed to us the fact that the ancient Assyrians were a book-reading people, that public libraries were sustained for their instruction, and that these were conducted very much after the fashion of similar institutions of the present day. The Assyrian libraries were under the care of a librarian, and the books were ranged upon shelves, and were catalogued for convenience much as in modern collections.

The first librarian whose name has come down to us, was Mul-Anna, the don of Gandhu. He superintended the library of one of the early kings of Ur, "a city of the Chaldees," which is mentioned in Genesis as the birthplace of Abraham. The signet-cylinder of Mul-Anna has been recovered, and is now in Europe, and the probability is that it was stamped upon books of which its owner had charge more than 4,000 years ago.

As the civilization of Babylonia was older than that of Assyria, its libraries were of a more ancient date, and served as models for those established in the latter country. Indeed, the books that made up the collections in the Assyrian cities were the greater part of them copies or later editions of Babylonian works.

But these old-time books were not the finished specimens of the printer's and binder's art that are drawn by the reader from libraries of to-day. They were rude, clumsy affairs, made of sheets or bricks of clay called tablets. These bricks were of different sizes, the largest measuring about 9 inches by 6½ inches, and having a flat surface. The smaller ones were slightly convex, and some of them were scarcely more than an inch long. On both sides of these bricks the writing, or the print, as it may be properly called, was stamped while the clay was moist, with a metal stylus, after which the brick was hardened in the sun or by fire.

The cuneiform system of writing was the invention of the primitive population of Babylonia, and was derived from them by the Assyrians. Its wedge-shaped characters were stamped upon the bricks, and, although sharply defined, were often so fine as to be scarcely distinguishable by the unaided eye. As a crystal lens was found on the site of Nineveh, it may be surmised that the Assyrian books were printed and used by the aid of magnifying glasses. At any rate the discovery proves that lenses were in use by two of the oldest among the historic nations.

Each important city of Babylon and Assyria had at least one great library, and this was accommodated in rooms of the king's palace. No excavations have been made in Babylonia, but Mr. Layard found the "Royal Library of Nineveh," in two rooms in the palace of Sennacherib and of his grandson Asshurbanipal, or Sardanapalus. The following inscription discovered on one of the tablets, shows that the library was kept open to the people: "Palace of Ase-hur-pani-pal, being of the world king of Assyria, to whom the god Nebo and the goddess Tasnit, (the goddess of knowledge,) have given the ears to hear and the eyes to see what is the true foundation of government. They revealed to the kings, my predecessors, this cuneiform writing, the manifestation of the God Nebo, the god of supreme intelligence. I wrote it upon tablets; I signed and arranged them; and I placed them in the palace for the instruction of my subjects."

The greater portion of this library was deposited in the British Museum, and cuneiform scholars have long since been engaged in deciphering its contents. The books being many of them copies or later editions of Babylonian works, it is expected that they will throw light upon the history of both the great nations of Mesopotamia. The library comprises treatises on agriculture, astronomy, and grammar, "collections of ancient proverbs, tables of laws and precedents, contracts and leases, public dispatches and private correspondence, prayers and beast fables, didactic treatises and hints on government, tables of cube roots and other mathematical formulæ, lists of animals and stones, of countries and towns, of gods and temples, of foreign products, and above all, annals and historical documents."

When the Chaldean or early Babylonian kingdom was subdued by the Lemites or Assyrians, not only was its culture appropriated, but its language was extirpated by the conquering people. Thus in process of time the extensive literature it had created and stored in its libraries was buried in the grave of a dead language. This language, now known as the Acadian, had consequently to be studied by the Assyrians as the classics are studied by the scholars of modern time, for the treasures of knowledge sealed up in them. To aid the Assyrian student in his work of reviving an extinct tongue, grammars, dictionaries, and phrase books of Acadian, and Semitic Assyrian were compiled, and these, preserved to the present day, enable our savants, to recover the long lost language of Chaldea,—the priestly caste of Babylonia.

Among the text-books of the Acadian language now in the British museum, there is a vast encyclopedia of Assyria-Babylonian grammar, consisting of five parts:

1. A lexicon of the Acadian language.
2. A dictionary of Assyrian synonyms.
3. An Assyrian grammar.
4. A dictionary of the characters of the Anarian cuneiform writing.
5. A second dictionary of the same characters.

The tablets or leaves of this work are numbered, and were probably arranged in cases in the order of their paging. Manuals of mathematical and astronomical science are also abundant in the collection. These sciences undoubtedly originated with the Chaldees, and by them were imparted to other nations. Several treatises on arithmetic were found in the library, and in a fragmentary condition a multiplication table like that which has given so much honor to the name of Pythagoras.

A long work on astronomy and astrology, covering 70 tablets, was drawn up for a king of Babylon who reigned about 2,000 B. C. "The Catalogue of this work mentions separate treatises, on the Pole-star, on comets, on the movements of Venus, etc., and at the end tells the reader to write down the number of the tablet he wishes to consult, and the librarian will thereupon hand it to him." Among the religious writings there is a collection of hymns to the gods, which in style have much resemblance to the Hebrew Psalms. There is also a vast collection of fragmentary myths and legends thrown into a poetical form. One of these epics consists of 12 books, each book answering to a sign of the Zodiac, and narrating the adventures of a solar hero. "The books were originally independent lays, and the eleventh is the story of the deluge, which bears a remarkable resemblance to the account in Genesis. Another group of legends contains one which describes very fully the building of the tower of Babel; while a third group presents us with a history of the Creation, and the Fall of Man, similar to that of the Bible. More details, however, are furnished than can be found in the Mosaic narrative."

There is reason to believe that the Assyrians sometimes made use of parchment or papyrus, in writing, but no bit of this perishable material has survived the destruction of their cities and palaces. But Layard states that in the Nineveh library there were discovered a number of pieces of fine clay, bearing the impression of seals, like modern official seals of wax, to documents written on leather, parchment or papyrus. The documents themselves had perished. In the clay seals may still be seen holes for the strips of skin by which the seal was fastened to them.

Mohammedanism.

People are accustomed to regard Mohammedanism as an effete and disappearing system. The conclusion is an erroneous one. It is still vigorously spreading, although no longer by the all-conquering sword. In China it is making rapid gains. It is estimated that in Nankin alone there are now 50,000 Mohammedans. We congratulate China. To swap paganism for Mohammedanism is a great gain. To exchange a multitude of gods for one God is incontestably a profit. The Christian system is indebted to Mohammed and his followers for the unreckonable work of flashing back the northern vandals, and placing Europe under unitarian rule. A religion that did this, and, although surrounded on all sides by the grossest heathendom, has kept its hundreds of millions of followers for over a thousand years in the undeniable doctrine of one God and one God only, may well, notwithstanding its errors, be regarded by the Christian world with uncommon respect. What its mission may be in China, of course no one can foresee, but we may all agree that God has something important to do there, or he would not send it thither.

The Catholic population of Pennsylvania has doubled since 1860. It is now 600,000. They have 922 churches, chapels, etc., and 541 priests.

A Glance at Jerusalem.

Let us look at the Jerusalem of to-day. Seen from without, with her girdle of walls crenulated and flanked with towers, above which appear minarets and white cupolas, clearly cut in the unchangeable blue of the Syrian sky, she presents from whatever side you approach one of the most picturesque sights. She seems small, indeed, to the traveler arriving from the north or west, but when you behold her from the top of the Mount of Olives she is truly imposing and displays herself with so much majesty on the slopes of her hills that she appears greater than she really is. It is to be remarked, besides, that the Oriental cities always make more of a picture than European cities. This is not merely owing to the style of the buildings, to the absence of red or gray roofs, and to the quantity of cupolas. Its principal cause is the want of suburbs. The approaches of our cities are blocked up with wood-yards, with docks, with gas works, and with country houses, which do not let you see where the cities begin or where they end; but in Palestine, where they rarely venture to build isolated houses the cities appear clearly in the landscape with well-finished outlines, like those which you see on the old maps. This is especially the case with Jerusalem.

You know in turn that the interior of Oriental cities does not answer at all to the idea you would get in looking at them from without. Jerusalem is no exception; she is, I think, the most wretched of all. The houses are, however, built of good materials; they are not of brick, as in Egypt, but of great cubes of rock. Moses, in fact, promised the Israelites a country "whose stones are iron, and out of whose hills thou mayst dig brass." You do not often see on the outside fronts those little windows with wooden lattices which ornament the houses of Cairo; as a rule the houses have no other opening than the door. A European who should be transported all at once into certain streets of Jerusalem might go about there a long while without suspecting that he was in a city.

The sweepings of the houses piled up before each door make veritable sewers of the streets. The dogs and jackals are the only scavengers of Jerusalem, and on them lies the care of freeing the public way from the carcasses of domestic animals that rot on the open street. You walk besides in the midst of the dust of the ruins and at every step strike against some broken-down wall. You would say that the city had just been taken by assault. The Jerusalem that is has shot upon the ruins of those that preceded it, as the mosses and mushrooms grow on the remains of an old oak. When they build a house they commonly place the foundation on ground formed of ruins. In 1841, when the English began to build their church on Mount Zion, they wished to settle it in the rocks and they had to dig in the ruins to a depth of forty feet. I myself saw a like fact during my stay in Jerusalem; they dug at the corner of the "Via Dolorosa" (Way of Grief) for the foundation of a large and fine house meant to serve as an abiding place for the Austrian pilgrims, and they did not find bottom until even a greater depth.

Jerusalem is divided into four great quarters: the Christian at the north-west; the Armenian on the southwest on Mount Zion; the Jewish at the southeast, and the Mohammedan at the northeast. It is necessary to count, besides, as belonging to the last, the little quarter of the Maugrabins at the east of the Jewish quarter and the old enclosure of the temple, called to-day "El Haram." The "Haram" by itself makes more than a fifth part of the city, and stretches over more than half its eastern face.—From the French by Felix Bovet.

Farther accounts from the recent volcanic eruption in Iceland represent the damage done as very great. A large part of the central portion of the island has been laid desolate. A letter in the New York Sun states that several districts of the best part of Iceland are destroyed. Ashes are lying so thick that it is estimated that 15,200,000,000 bushels must have fallen on an area of 21,000 square miles. There are lava heaps at the spots of eruption as much as 14 miles long and from 500 to 1,000 fathoms broad. From another source a newspaper published at Akureyral, in the north part of Iceland, at the time of the explosion, we find that the noise of the boiling of the crater could be heard twenty miles away; and an immense red glare filled the sky at night. The writer describes the lava as being thrown in a compact column some three hundred feet high before breaking, accompanied by a bluish stream which whitened and rose straight into the air many hundreds of fathoms in spite of the strong wind.

THE RESTITUTION,
Plymouth, Indiana.

Letters for the Editor should be sent to the above place.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the dual "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all His Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end, the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christian King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other Medieval truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the statements expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of excluding those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

Hints on Prophecy.

BY THOS. G. WEEKS.

To discover what shall come to pass hereafter, is an impulse common to mankind; it is an impulse borne of curiosity, a curiosity peculiar to the human family, aroused on the one hand by superstition, on the other inspired by faith. It is a task of some difficulty. Yet not an impossible one to accomplish provided the inquirer rightly avails himself of the prescribed means of information.

It has been argued that it is reasonable to suppose that the Creator of intelligent man should make to his creature an intelligible revelation of Himself. We believe that revelation is contained in the Holy Scriptures, for seeing that events are there foretold ages before they occurred, and that they were so foretold by various men, at various times, under vastly different circumstances, and that no unassisted human intellect is capable of making such revelations; we are constrained to believe that they are the inspired utterances of "holy men of old who spake as they were moved by the Spirit of God.

The history of the Jewish nations as recorded in the Holy Scriptures, especially demonstrates this fact, and we can reasonably repose confidence in the declarations of the several Hebrew prophets which they make concerning the future, when we bear in mind how faithfully their predictions have been fulfilled in the history of the past; a faith at once strengthened and confirmed by the fact of the existence of the Hebrew race among us in the present day, is itself a fulfillment of prophecy, Deut. xxviii. 64, and denoting that they are reserved for some purpose of Jehovah to be accomplished in the future. The Jew is God' witness, Isa. xliii. 8-12 whom he has chosen, we neither desire or can we offer a more convincing evidence of the truth of his word.

That the Bible requires to be literally interpreted has been the opinion of many thoughtful men, and the value of such a system of interpretation has been fully tested by the brethren in these latter days. By a "literal interpretation" we mean that all words should receive their primary meaning, except in such instances where without qurations they are used to express a figure of speech, or to lend force to a metaphor, thus for example, when our Lord says, "I am the DOOR of the sheep." John x. 7. The word "door" is used evidently to express a figure of speech, but when David exclaims "be ye lift up, ye everlasting DOORS." Psa. xxiv. 7. We hold that he refers to a literal gate or entrance through which the Lord of Hosts is to "come in."

The great obstacle to the proper understanding of the text and Scripture lies in the so-called "spiritualism" to which it is subjected; in relation to the questions concerning the constitution of man and the kingdom of God, our brethren have long abandoned the spiritualizing process, and have learned that "Zion" means Zion, and "Jerusalem" means Jerusalem; but it is a serious question, whether they have not retrograded somewhat into the old paths when dealing with other portions of revealed truth. Thus, for example, when it is recorded that the waters of the great river Euphrates are to be dried up. Rev. xvi. 12. Upon what authority do we say that this means "spiritually" a wasting decay of the Turkish empire? Is the Turkish empire ever spiritually called "the great river Euphrates?" A certain city where our Lord was crucified, is spiritually called Sodom and Egypt. Rev. xi. 8; Isa. i. 10; Jer. xxiii. 14. And this is the only true "spiritual interpretation" which the Book warrants. What is generally called a spiritual interpretation, is in fact, only a dangerous perversion of the plain meaning of the word to suit some pet science of fulfillment of man's invention.

Jeremiah commanded Seraiah to tie a stone to a certain book, and cast it into Euphrates; to typify the fall of Babylon, (Jer. li. 63,) it would be the height and also width, to say that "Euphrates" here, means the Turkish empire, or anything else than what it says, viz.: the river upon which Babylon was built, then why should it mean something else in Revelation? It may be answered, "because the Revelation is a book of symbols," there are, without question, many symbols used in the revelation; but as we have said above, a figure of speech is one thing, a spiritual interpretation another. There is a "woman" who "sitteth on many waters," (Rev. xvii. 1,) that woman represents a "great city," verse 18, and the waters "peoples, multitudes, nations, and tongues," (verse 15); these then are figurative; but again, it is said that "there were voices and thunders and lightnings, and there was a great earthquake, such as was not since men were upon the earth, so mighty an earthquake and so great, and the great city was divided into three parts and the cities of the nations fell." Rev. xvi. 18, 19. Upon what authority shall we "spiritually" interpret this, to mean that there were great national political convulsions? Clearly, a woman seated on a scarlet colored beast of such unnatural proportions is symbolical, even were we not expressly so informed; but is there anything symbolic in so natural a convulsion as an earthquake? And wherein the Word is a political convulsion ever spiritually called an earthquake?

The fulfillment of prophecy in the past teaches us one fact of the greatest importance, as a guide to what may be expected in the future, and that is that it is in all instances accomplished to the letter, that Revelation as a rule, has an individual character. Thus, for example, supposing the prophecy of Isaiah, "and he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death," (Isa. liii. 9,) had not been accomplished in the history of our Lord. Now might it not have been interpreted? We might have been informed that this had a general and spiritual meaning, that the "wicked" here had reference to the fallen condition of the human race generally, as contrasted with the "rich" who represented that class whose riches were in heaven; riches, the inheritance of which was gained through the portals of the grave. Indeed, these or similar ideas might have been elaborated by those with more fertile imaginations than we possess, until it might be demonstrated to the greatest satisfaction that the whole prophecy was highly symbolical and figurative. The simple fact that He was to be crucified between two thieves, and be buried in a sepulchre owned by a wealthy man, would in all probability be rejected as too common place, and too trivial to require the notice of prophecy; but prophecy deals with what we often esteem very common place matters, and we may expect to find inconsiderable events particularly noticed; that it speaks of plain facts in a plain way, and says just what it means as directly in all cases, as was done for instance in that prediction of David's, "They part my garments among them and cast lots upon my vesture." Psa. xxii. 18.

The accomplishment of prophecy in the past further admonishes us that the subjects of whom the things predicted, are predicated are those and those only to whom it will be found to apply in its fulfillment; that we do well to pause and make a similar enquiry to that of the Ethiopian Eunuch, "of whom speaketh the prophet thus? of himself or of some other man?" Acts. viii. 34. Thus, for example, if when John says in Rev. viii. 4, that "there were sealed an hundred and forty and four thousand of all the tribes of the children of Israel." We say that this means the spiritual Israel, or means anything else than just what is written; we must expect to make the prophecy of none effect by our traditions. Or again, if when we read of a great city, "Babylon" we say Babylon means confusion (?) and Papal Rome is confusion; therefore, Papal Rome is Babylon, we clearly make a similee of a similee, a most unwarranted course, and without question, liable to lead us into a labyrinth of confused ideas. Babylon is not Rome any more than Rome is Jerusalem; to say it is, is to question the ability of John (taught by the Spirit), to say what he meant.

We must beware too of going to extremes, if we have learned that the "immortal soul" does not go to heaven when man dies. We must not in our anxiety to assert this truth, run to the other extreme, and say that man never goes there, while we have instances on record that men have done so. Kings ii. 11; Gen. v. 22; Heb. xi. 5. And it is prophesied that men shall do so again, (John xiv. 1-3; Thes. iv. 16, 17,) or if we have learned that the "immortal soul" does not enter on endless hell torments when man dies, must we, therefore, assert that there are no hell torments for man in the future. Rev. xiv. 10, 11.

Neither must an enquirer into prophetic truth form a theory, and strain the Scriptures to support his theory, omitting one set of facts and accepting another; the structure of prophetic purpose is undoubtedly complete in all its parts, and rightly adjusted by the divine architect. Piece by piece it must be put together, and each piece in its proper order. The Holy Scriptures are capable of explaining themselves if properly divided, and requires no extraneous aid from the records of heathen authors. They are the complete revelation of God to man, and He is an author who needs no patching at the hands of human scribers.

We cannot expect, however, that to one man shall be given to comprehend the whole counsil of God, such is a privilege which even inspired men have not fully realized, and in view of the many errors made by consultators in the past, we should learn to advance opinion timly yet cautiously, and weigh well the opinions of others, even should such opinions clash with our own. The priceless gems of truth lie hidden in these days beneath the rubbish of tradition, and no one searcher brings them all to light.

Can Two Walk Together Except They be Agreed.

The above is a very important question for us of the One Faith, to ask ourselves, especially in these perilous times. It has been running in my mind, and I thought I would just drop a line upon the subject. To walk together implies an intimate association; and how can two be intimately associate: together except they be agreed? Enoch walked with God (was intimately associated with God) and was not, for God took him, they were agreed. We of the Church of God, if we are what we profess and are not hypocrites, are seeking first the kingdom of God, are making that the prominent thing of life, and will obey the apostles injunction, that whatsoever we do, do all to the glory of God. 1 Cor. x. 31. And, again, whatsoever ye do in word or deed, do all in the name of the Lord Jesus. Col. iii. 17. This then brings to view this thought, that Christ should always be uppermost in the mind and in every act or walk of life. We should first enquire, can this be done in the name of the Lord Jesus or by the authority of him (for "in the name of, means by the authority of)." It matters not what the act may be, it may be of a business nature, or civil, social or matrimonial, or what not in every case the inquiry should be made, and if it cannot be done in the name of Christ and for the glory of God, then it must not be done. * * * What part hath Christ with Belial, or what part hath he that believes with an infidel, 2 Cor. i. 15, (and all are infidels who do not believe the Gospel.) What would we think of a man who professed to be our friend and at the same time associated with more, and enjoyed the company better of our avowed enemies than our friends, we should certainly look upon him with suspicion if not regard him as an enemy altogether? So it seems to me with the professed believer. If he is what he professes, he will love the association of Christ, and the disciples of Him, and cannot love the association of the outside world at the same time any more than a man can serve two masters: "he will hate the one and love the other," besides the constant association with unbelievers will lead the mind away from the things of God. But, says one, no one can cause me to turn against or make me forget my Bible. Don't be too sure! Have you a stronger mind or greater advantages than Solomon or Sampson? Mark their sad fate. But, says one, must I give up all my old associations? Yes, if they are unbelievers; "ye are not of the world, as I am not of the world," said Christ. And who were his intimate friends? Believers every time; instance, the Bethany family. True He done good to all, and so should we. But to make them intimate associates is another thing. Says another, suppose these associations were formed before I became a believer? In that case the other parties must change or the tie must be broken; please read Matt. xix. 29; x. 37; also Luke xiv. 26, and compare with 1 Cor. vii. 12, 13, 14, 15, and see if I am not correct in saying that all these associations must be broken off, even to the closest tie of all the marriage tie, unless the unbelieving party accepts the new relation as provided for in 1 Cor. vii.; and in that case the relation must have existed before marriage, for mark, the believer must not leave if the unbeliever be pleased to stay, showing under what circumstances they may still live together, and under what they may not.

Can two walk together except they be agreed? Nay! Then, if these associations existing before we become believers must be broken off, can new ones of the same nature be made? Nay, verily! Be not deceived; evil communications corrupt good manners. 1 Cor. xv. 33. Brethren, these are perilous times; watch and pray, lest you enter into temptation.

SEVERANCE, KAN.

Height of the City New Jerusalem.

Students of the Holy Word have frequently found themselves perplexed with respect to the height of the city New Jerusalem; because in the common text, and authorized translation of the same, we are told that "the city lieth foursquare, and the length is as large as the breadth; and the angel measured the city with the reed, twelve thousands furlongs. The length and the breadth and the height are equal." According to this, the city New Jerusalem is fifteen hundred miles high!

How a city can be so high, it is almost impossible to conceive. One can scarcely believe seriously that it will rise story on story to the immense altitude given; for allowing one hundred feet to each story, we should have no less than 79,200 such floors or apartments raised one upon another to reach to the prefected sense. Nor can it be believed that the city will run up to a peak in the center of such tremendous loftiness, for the steeps of this mountain top would be awful to contemplate.

The thing that strikes a thoughtful reader, who realizes as he reads, is, that there is a mistake somewhere—and this is the fact, as we shall presently show. Before we arrived at satisfaction on this point, we comprehended the meaning of the words as in our version, and determined to suspend our judgment until we had more light, rather than utter some rash speculation on the subject.

There have not, however, been wanting men who have said some very absurd things on the height of this "great city," imagining by bold assertion to make up for real information. This is to be deplored. Of the various theories that have obtained, there are two that are principal. One is, that the city goes up to a point in the center like the pyramids of Egypt, and that the apex is distant one thousand five hundred miles from the earth's surface. This pinnacle-theory is in our judgment ridiculous. It, however, has respectable names as its enunciators, one of whom, we are told, recently delivered himself to an audience in a popular church, to the fact that he knew this was the right way to understand the passage, because he had been an architect! Another view is, that the city goes up inside the wall in circular form, something like a round tent, and at the top is covered in as the crown of a hat. In this very foolish speculation, the wall of the city forms a kind of rim to the city, and has been illustrated to us as similar to the rim of a hat—only that the wall was four-cornered instead of circular. This opinion was held and grandiloquently uttered by a late editor of a monthly paper.

But we dismiss these speculations and interpretations as incredible to men of common sense. Practical and reasonable Scripture readers cannot be satisfied with such imaginations.

A little more light upon the state of the text of this passage in the original Greek word would have saved these men and others from adopting such far-fetched visions. We give the remarks of Granville Penn, Esq., upon this Scripture (Rev. xxi. 15-17,) as they may be of use. They are as follows:—

Its length and its breadth are equal.—There is self-exposed vitiation in these verses, as they stand in the common texts; since they state the height of the wall of the city to be, at the same time, both 12,000 furlongs and only 144 cubits. The Vatican and Moscow MSS, read, verse 16, ἐπὶ μέγεθος καὶ, &c.; and omit καὶ τὸ τεῖχος—"and the wall thereof," at the end of verse 16, (Greek 15,) they omit also κονάτων ἑκατὸν, in verse 17, (Greek 16.) The Cod. 35, (Magd. Oxon. sec. xi.) omits τὸ ὕψος—"the height," before ἴσα ἐστί—"are equal." The Vatican and Moscow MSS. further omit ἀγγέλου in verse 18, (Greek 17.) From combining these several variations of the text with its matter, we may critically conclude that it stood originally thus:—

Καὶ ἡ πόλις τετράγωνος κεῖται, καὶ τὸ μῆκος αὐτῆς ἴσον τὸ πλάτος· καὶ ἐμέτρησε τὴν πόλιν τῷ καλάμῳ ἐπὶ σταδίους δώδεκα χιλιάδων· τὸ μῆκος καὶ τὸ πλάτος αὐτῆς ἴσα ἐστί.

Καὶ τὸ ὕψος τοῦ τείχους αὐτῆς, ἑκατὸν τεσσαρακοντατεσσάρων πηχῶν.

And he that spake to me, had for a measure, a golden reed (or rod) to measure the city, and its gates:

And the city lieth four-square; and its length is the same as its breadth; and he measured the city with the reed 12,000 furlongs; its length and its breadth are equal:

And the height of its wall is 144 cubits.

Thus, the length or extent of the wall encompassing the city, is measured by stadia; but its height by cubits. Bengel, who was not aware of the various vitiations of the text, was urged to conjecture that the numbers 12,000 and 144 intended the same measure, by different modes of computation: and he even wished to expel the word πηχῶν, cubits, though it is found in all the copies consulted by Birch and Matthæi, in Rome and Moscow. The 144 "cubits" constitute the altitude, "east altitude," ascribed to the wall in verse 13, (Greek 12.) Neither Erasmus, of the early annotators, nor Burton, Bloomfield, or Trollope, of the most recent, notice this passage.—Supplemental Annotations to the Book of the New Covenant. By Granville Penn, Esq., London; James Duncan, 1838. On Rev. xxi. pp. 128-9.

The Death of Adam.

"And the Lord commanded the man, saying, Of every tree of the garden thou mayest freely eat; but of the tree of knowledge of good and evil, thou shalt not eat of it; for in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die."—Gen. ii. 16, 17.

We are popularly informed that the death here mentioned was a fourfold death, viz:

1. Death moral.
2. Death spiritual.
3. Death temporal.
5. Death eternal.

But the text says nothing about a fourfold death. It is simply, "THOU shalt surely die." What kind of death was meant? Simply the death of "thou."—Adam. Not the death of thy soul spiritually or morally, but the death of the living man. God breathed into this being, to whom He was now speaking, the breath of life, and man—Adam—became a living soul; in consequence of his act of disobedience God designed to take away his breath again, and then the man would be a dead soul, and turn back to dust again, out of which he was taken. And this is virtually the exposition which God gives of his own words.

"And unto Adam he said, Because thou hast hearkened unto the voice of thy wife, and hast eaten of the tree, of which I commanded thee, saying, Thou shalt not eat of it; cursed is the ground for thy sake; in sorrow shalt thou eat of it all the days of thy life; thorns also and thistles shall it bring forth to thee; and thou shalt eat the herb of the field; in the sweat of thy face shalt thou eat bread, till thou return unto the ground; for out of it wast thou taken; for dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return." Gen. iii. 17-19.

And here, in the ground, man would eternally remain were it not that "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven," has "brought life and immortality to light" through his own resurrection. And hence, "as in Adam all die," the death that he died—physical death—"so in (or by) Christ shall all," good and bad, "be made alive;" but every man in his own "order," (troop or company,) in the day of the Lord, and receive according to their deeds, good or bad, reward, or the second death, from which there is no resurrection. So it seems to me.

But it is said, Adam did not literally die on the very day that he ate the fruit prohibited. Let us look at this matter a moment. The literal Hebrew reading, according to the critical ones, is, "in the day thou eatest thereof, dying thou shalt die." The idea is, Thou shalt then become a dying creature, and shalt finally really cease to live. If I say to a man, I will go to Boston to-morrow, it does not follow that I shall get to Boston on that day, in order that I tell the truth, I only must needs start for Boston on that day, and he regards me a man of truth; and the whole Scripture on this point shows that the dying process commenced in the man on that very day.

Tobacco and the Gospel.

Yes, tobacco and the Gospel! The former costs the people of the United States one hundred million dollars, while the preaching of the Gospel only costs them twelve millions. Of course, then, the tobacco ought to be stated first, and the gospel afterward. Isn't it the strangest thing in the world that men, on an average, will spend eight and one-third dollars for tobacco, for every one they give to sustain the gospel? Indeed it is strange, passing strange, that men will use the vile weed in any form. In the purchase of tobacco, men get just what they bargain for—a narcotic substance, the effects of which produces numerous and varied constitutional effects—"consisting of giddiness, sickness, vomiting, dyspepsia, vitiated taste of the mouth, diseased liver, congestion of the brain, apoplexy, palsy, mania, loss of memory, amaurosis, deafness, nervousness, emasculation, and cowardice."

Says Dr. Pratt. "Surely, if the dictates of reason were allowed to prevail, an article so injurious to the health, and so offensive in all its forms and modes of employment, would speedily be banished from common use."

But those who make up the $12,000,000 for the preaching of the Gospel, are the worst cheated of the two classes, so far as the bargain is concerned. They pay their money, but do not get value received. The gospel is not preached by the man who annually receive this large sum, except, perhaps, in a few isolated cases. On the contrary, they preach "another gospel," other than that which Paul preached. More injurious in its effects, it is to be feared, than the hundred million dollars worth of tobacco. The use of tobacco does not prevent men from coming out to hear the "gospel of the kingdom;" but the twelve million dollars worth of preaching in the United States, blinds people to the truth, causes them to turn a deaf ear to the sound of "the gospel," and induces them to speak evil of the way of truth.

A. SANFORD.

THE RESTITUTION.

PLYMOUTH, IND.....Sept. 8, 1875.

EDITORIAL DEPARTMENT.

☞Brethren Stephenson and Wilcox are both expecting to attend the Conference of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin, which convenes at the Howard Union meeting house, in Winnebago county, Illinois, Sept. 10.

☞Brother Halstead, of Rensselaer, is spending a few days in this community visiting the brethren. On Sunday Brother H. preached in Plymouth, and gave two most excellent discourses on the practical duties of the Christian life.

Feet-Washing.

A brother in Pennsylvania desires to know why we do not "observe feet-washing as a Church ordinance." We might answer in brief, that no command or example requires us to perform feet-washing as a Church ordinance. There are many references to the forms of worship of Christian assemblies in the New Testament, but in no instance is feet-washing mentioned as having been a part of such worship. Indeed, there is but one reference to the subject in all the writings of the apostles after the resurrection of Christ, and then it is not mentioned as an ordinance, but is associated with the acts of hospitality. Here is the quotation: "Let not a widow be taken into the number under three score years old, having been the wife of one man. Well reported of for good works; if she have brought up children, if she have lodged strangers, if she have washed the saints' feet, if she have diligently followed every good work." 1 Tim. v. 9, 10.

Dr. Clark gives the following note on this text: "This was an office of humanity shown to all strangers and travelers in the eastern countries; who either walking barefoot, or having only a sort of a sole to defend the foot, needed washing when they came to their journey's end. Pious women generally did this act of kindness."

Some have inferred from John 13th that Jesus instituted the washing of feet as an ordinance of the Church and that it was to remain a permanent institution in the Church. But this view seems to have no confirmation from the acts of the apostles, there being no instance of its observance. This circumstance should satisfy us that it was not intended to be a part of Christian worship. It is argued, however, that the washing of feet was instituted in connection with the communion, therefore its observance is of equal importance and of the same duration. Now if this position were sustained by the practice of the apostles, the argument would be good; but the facts are, that we have frequent references to the disciples coming together to break bread, but in no one case is there any account of feet-washing. This fact alone should place the question beyond all doubt. The example of our Lord teaches a lesson of great humility, and shows his willingness to take upon himself the most humble offices, in order to impress his disciples with due regard for each other. When viewed in the light of an example of humility, it becomes one of the most touching incidents in the life of Jesus, but if viewed in the light of an institution, it seems to lose much of its simplicity. All the Oriental nations practiced the washing of feet, and looked upon it as an act of great hospitality, but in no case was it ever enforced in Israel or the other nations as an ordinance to be observed in religious assemblies.

The Signs of the Times.

"And take heed to yourselves, lest at any time your hearts be overcharged with surfeiting and drunkenness, and cares of this life, and so that day come upon you unawares. For as a snare shall it come on all them that dwell on the face of the whole earth." Luke xxi. 34, 35.

1. Christ commences this prophecy with a word of warning to his disciples. "And He said take heed that ye be not deceived, for many shall come in my name, saying, I am Christ; and the time draweth near. Go ye not therefore after them." Luke xvi. 8. Christ next describes great commotions among the nations, earthquakes in many places, famine, pestilence, fearful sights and signs from heaven; and then adds, "But before all these things they shall lay their hands on you and persecute you, delivering you up to the synagogues, and into prisons, being brought before kings and rulers for my namesake." Verse 12. How different the circumstances and the instructions given his disciples who were living at the time this great prophecy was uttered, and the circumstances surrounding those who should be living just before its consummation. This distinction must be ignored by those expositors who claim that all the events predicted were to be fulfilled during the natural lives of the then living generation of men.

2. All the events antecedent to, and suggested with the destruction of Jerusalem, so far from being the end, are declared to be only "the beginning of sorrows." Matt. xxiv. 6, 7, 8.

3. Luke gives the events in the consecutive order in which they were to occur. (1.) The encompassing of Jerusalem with armies. Luke xxi. 20. This was literally fulfilled under Titus and the Roman armies, A. D. 70. (2.) The escape of the Christians in Jerusalem and Judea to the mountains. This, too, was literally fulfilled. (3.) The destruction or desolation of Jerusalem. This was literally fulfilled, A. D. 70. (4.) There was to be great distress in the land of Judea, and upon that people, the Jews. All these things were literally fulfilled. (5.) They, the Jews, were to fall by the edge of the sword. During the wars in Judea, the seige and destruction of Jerusalem, more than a million of Jews perished. (6.) Those who should survive this destruction were to be led away captive into all nations. This, too, was literally fulfilled. (7.) They were to remain in captivity, and Jerusalem be trodden down by the Gentiles until the times of the Gentiles should be fulfilled. This prophecy has been in process of fulfillment during the past eighteen hundred years, and will continue until the times of the Gentiles be fulfilled. Thus, all the events so graphically described in our Lord's prophecy, have been fulfilled to the letter. And apart from the judgments which were to fall upon the apostles, all the predicted judgments were to be inflicted upon the Jews, either in their own land or scattered among the nations. Without a single broken link in this consecutive chain of events, or a single transition from the Jews to another people, both the judgments and the deliverance, related exclusively to them; therefore, all the signs of deliverance must also have exclusive reference to them. Christ assured the generation of the Jews who should see all these signs, that they should not pass away until all these things (including his coming to their deliverance, and the establishment of his kingdom) be fulfilled. Having thus traced the unbroken history of the Jews through the times of the Gentiles to their final deliverance, and organization in the kingdom of Messiah; He goes back and gives a word of admonition to his Church, which will be living at the time of his advent. There is the most marked transition from one class of people to another; also from one class of events to another at the 24th verse. In this verse nothing is said about captivity or signs of deliverance. Nothing is said about great national signs or the passing away of heaven and earth including the passing away of the sun, moon and stars, which symbolize the emperors, cabinets, kings and rulers of the world.

True, these great national signs of the emancipation of the Jews from the national thralldom of eighteen centuries, will, if understood, be signs to Gentile believers. Michael may be standing up now in behalf of Daniel's people before the kings and cabinets of the world disposing them favorably toward this despised and persecuted race. Dan. xii. 1. The accumulative signs of the deliverance of Daniel's people are so many evidences of the change of dispensation, or the filling up of Gentile times, and the transition from the present to the future age. "Coming events cast their shadows before." So the signs of the last great conflict among the Gentile nations evidence that the coming and kingdom of Christ are at hand. But, inasmuch as the kingdom of Messiah shall be organized with the Jews, their restoration must precede the reign of Christ and his cabinet—the saints.

The warning of Christ from the 34th verse to the close of the chapter, is peculiar to Gentile believers, who are living in constant expectation of his immediate appearing. These signs do not relate to the convulsion of nations or the blotting out of the political luminaries of the world. They relate to individual temptations and expectations, in which each man must stand or fall for himself. The first danger named to which the professed Christian will be exposed, is a superabundance of the good things of the present life. The next is drunkenness, not with wine or alcohol; for those who are looking for the coming of Christ will not belong to the great army of drunkards. They belong to the class represented by the thorny ground hearers of the word. "The cares of this world and the deceitfulness of riches choke out the word." Matt. xiii. 23. They are drunken with prosperity. Prosperity is more dangerous than adversity. Care, anxiety, and worldly mindedness increase with riches. It is true that the poor have cares, but Christ associates the cares of this life with a superabundance and drunkenness, as a snare. Verse 35. The greatest snare in the world is riches. The most deceitful and dangerous of all tempters are riches. Thus, the commandment to "Watch, ye therefore, and pray always that ye may be accounted worthy to escape all these things that shall come to pass, and to stand before the Son of Man." Verse 36. But we cannot do justice to this great theme in one article.

We will close by affirming that a want of discrimination between those portions of our Lord's prophecy which relate to the Jews as a separate people, and those portions which relate to Christians has caused great confusion.

Correspondence.

BRO. CHAPLIN:

Yours of the 22d ult. was received with joy, and only those who have been placed in like condition can appreciate such kindness. It is encouraging to us, as we journey along life's rugged way, to know there are hearts full of sympathy for us in our affliction. We are truly thankful for the RESTITUTION. I have been a reader for a number of years—when it was published by Bro. Wilson, at Chicago, Ill. It has always been an excellent paper, and I love it more than ever when I pick up some religious papers published by the sects; they are as idle tales to me.

Our love and gratitude to all of like precious faith, hoping that Jesus may soon come to reward the faithful.

Your sister in hope of a glorious deliverance through Christ.

MARY COOPER.

RIPLEY, BROWN CO., ILL., Sept. 3.

Having been constantly in the field the past five years, "preaching the things concerning the kingdom of God and the name of Jesus," and the past two years with a tent, and finding that the hard times in this region were against us, I have let the tent go into other hands, as I did not wish to have it lay idle and act the dog in the manger. Therefore I have let R. F. and M. J. Clark, missionaries, of Kansas, have it, at quite a sacrifice, hoping that good may result; and myself lay idle until some way opens. If I, like others had been fanatical enough to preach definite time, and no age to come, I might yet be sustained and in the field. But my message for years has been, "the Gospel of the kingdom as a witness," and now I await an opening, praying God to direct me for his glory.

I have advertised three months past in relation to the tent, and also offered it for sale, and requested those who aided us in getting up said tent to notify us as I offered to return their proportion of the proceeds, if sold; and I have seen 43 out 52 of the Pennsylvania subscribers, and all but three of them have relinquished their shares in said tent. I would be glad to hear from all in the matter, wishing to do what is right.

Now, brethren and sisters, let me hear from you as soon as you see this notice. Some of the brethren say that I have already notified them sufficiently, but I shall feel better satisfied if I can hear from you, yea or nay.

If any wish my labors also write me. And if any will help me by sending to me for "The Primitive Christian Faith," or "The Tree of Life," by C. F. Sweet, they can have them for $1.50 dozen. Retail, 20 cents, postage two cents per copy; and thereby help a little toward supporting my family.

Direct to Lincolnville, Crawford Co., Pennsylvania.

Yours in hope,

JOHN T. ONGLEY.

BROTHER MYERS:—

I received your card last Friday. I was away when it came; glad to hear from you. I have just returned from a tour in Northern Missouri; arrived at Eagleville, Harrison County, Aug. 1st.; gave four discourses about three miles out of town, in brother Harrold's neighborhood; subject, the church, the practical duties of members, its object, its wants, and how to get into it. Had a good hearing. I then went to Ravenna, where Brother Dugger was holding a meeting. I gave a funeral discourse on Sunday, in memory of a little child of Brother Johnson's; subject, "Now are the dead raised up." Monday evening spoke again on the nature and time of setting up the kingdom, in continuation of Brother Dugger's discourse Sunday evening, on the restoration. Met some kind and familiar faces there, that have a place in my heart that time cannot efface. Returned again to Eagleville, and upon a failure to get a house, the brethren went to work and with poles and brush made a very comfortable place to hold meetings, and it seemed to us to be very appropriate, that as we profess to have the ancient religion, that we should have a building of the ancient mode of architecture. Commenced meetings on Friday evening before the third Sunday in August, and continued on until I had given eleven discourses, with but one intermission, which was occasioned by Robbin's "Vanity Fair." There was so much confusion in town that we thought it not prudent to hold meeting out doors that night. The meetings were well attended, good order prevailed, and some interest was manifested, and I think perhaps several would have come out had they been urged; but I prefer that people should act calmly and upon their own judgment in such cases; give them time to reflect and then they are more likely to stand the test of persecution. I made some kind friends, whose memory I shall ever respect, and undoubtedly made some enemies too. I left for my home on Monday, the 23d of August, with many kind farewells by brethren and friends, and some urgent requests to return, which I want to do at the earliest convenience; but should I never see them again this side of the coming of the Lord, I have hope that there will be a few found in and about Eagleville, who will have their names in the Lamb's Book of Life. "With charity for all and malice toward none," I close.

W. J. OREM.

As reports from the brethren are encouraging, I would say, I left home soon after our conference. I went to Palestine, Hancock county, held meeting some five days; at the close of the meeting there was one immersed into the name of the Christ, and I think there are others who are convinced. The few in the place are determined to let their light shine before others by their walk and conversation, that those among them may learn the truth. There were two new subscribers for the RESTITUTION at that place; they want Brother Reed to visit them as soon as convenient. I think there can be good done in that place.

From Palestine I went to Indianapolis, was with the little flock a few days visiting among them, and had a few meetings. Sister Sharp and daughter will leave there in a few days for California, where her son and brother are. She intends to make that her home for the future. May God bless them wherever they may be. Brother and sister Erringer, also, are going to leave the city, and for the present are going to the South for awhile. On Sunday afternoon I meeting in the City Park in the afternoon, at four o'clock. There were quite a good many present to hear. After I was through there were several questions asked; the same old ones that are often asked by the sects, and that kept us on the ground till late; cannot Brother Reed visit them soon?

Dear brethren, I find the people as anxious to hear the truth as at any time since I have been in the field proclaiming the truth of God, and every brother that can go out, should go; the harvest is great, but the reapers are few.

Dear brethren, you that are traveling and proclaiming the truth, let us hear from you through the RESTITUTION. It is cheering to hear from you. When I get our paper, the first thing I look for, is responses from our brethren; to hear of the success of the truth. May God bless us all in the cause of truth.

"Description of the Saviour."

"Prove all things; hold fast that which is good." 1 Thes. v. 21. "Before profane and old wives' fables." 1 Tim. iv. 7.

Under the above title there appeared in the issue of the RESTITUTION of August 4th, what purported to be a "correct translation of an epistle sent by Publius Lentulus to the Roman Senate." Whether Publius Lentulus wrote the letter we are unable to determine, if he ever saw Jesus of Nazareth, is equally uncertain; all that we know is that the letter in question does not contain the truth in regard to appearance, of our Lord; in respect to his actions as recorded in it, the four historians of his life acquaint us with them with far greater certainty.

Publius Lentulus is said to testify that Jesus of Nazareth was "a man of stature somewhat tall and comely with a very reverend countenance, such as the beholder must both love and fear."

Isaiah says, "he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him." Isa. liii. 2.

Publius Lentulus says "his face was without spot or wrinkle, beautiful, with a lovely red; his nose and mouth so forked as nothing can be reprehended; —— in proportion of body most excellent; his hands and arms delectable to behold." Isaiah says "his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of man." Isa. lii. 14. "He is despised and rejected of men; a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief; and we hid as it were our faces from Him; He was despised and we esteemed Him not." Isa. liii. 3. David says, "for I am a worm and no man, a reproach of men and despised of the people." Psa. xxii. 6. (See John ix. 28.)

We know nothing of Publius Lentulus; whatever he may have been, he at least stands an unsupported witness: we have good evidence that the prophets of Israel spoke the truth, the events of the life of Jesus confirmed their predictions concerning Him. Our Lord has left it on record that He "received not honor from men." John v. 41. And that while "the foxes had holes, and the birds of the air had nests, the Son of Man had not where to lay his head. Luke ix. 58. The sorrowful experiences of his life, together with years of toil at his trade (Mark vi. 3) was not likely to make his "hands and arms delectable to behold" or his "forehead plain and very delicate;" but on the contrary, would necessarily tend to prematurely mark him with those signs of frailty to which our human nature is subject.

To sum up, we reject the testimony of Publius Lentulus as improbable, unreliable and untrue, and stand to the sure word and testimony of those "holy men of old who spake as they were moved by the Holy Spirit."

THOMAS C. WEEKS.

BALTIMORE, Aug. 31, 1875.

A Modification.

"The Lord is risen indeed." What a world of comfort is involved in these few and simple words! What treasures of grace do they embody! How tremendous the issues that hang upon their truth! If Christ be not risen," says the apostle, "your faith is vain, ye are yet in your sins.

It is very difficult, perhaps impossible, for us to enter into the feelings of the few loving followers of the Redeemer who had seen their master laid in the silent grave. Their intense sadness can find no other expression than this: "We trusted that it had been he who should have redeemed Israel." The implication is: "Our trust is gone; it lies buried in the tomb of Joseph."

How deep, then, must have been joy when the sun rose upon that night of darkness; when "their eyes were opened and they knew him," and returning to Jerusalem, exclaimed, "The Lord is risen indeed." The revelation was to them the re-birth of their divinest hopes. It is to us the justification of our faith, the evidence of final victory, the pledge of our immortality. "Because I live, ye shall live also."

Perhaps one of the signs of the present decay in living faith is the lamentable fact that in the experience of so many the resurrection is not what it once was. They doubt its consolations. They do not see that it is a keystone.

All hope worthy of the name hangs upon the rising again of the Prince of Life. If the evening of our days were not succeeded by a morning dawn, says Tholnck, how poor and insignificant everything would appear to me. "Oh, then, my Lord and my God, let me feel within my soul the power of that resurrection which has brought life and immortality to light. Give me, at the open grave of Jesus, a consciousness of victory and peace. Make me to feel that I am no longer in bondage through fear of death. Grant, oh, my God, that this peace of the resurrection morn may rest upon my whole life. So in His rest and in His quiet peacefulness shall I be blessed through eternity."

The Lock.

A lock was shown to Gotthold, constructed of rings, which were severally inscribed with certain letters, and could be turned round until the letters represented the name Jesus. It was only when the rings were disposed in this manner that the lock could be opened. The invention pleased him beyond measure, and he exclaimed: "Oh that I could put such a lock as this upon my heart!" Our hearts are already locked, no doubt, but generally with a lock of quite another kind. Many need only to hear the words Gain, Honor, Pleasure, Riches, Revenge, and their heart opens in a moment; whereas, to the Savior and to his holy name, it continues shut.

Lord Jesus, engrave Thou Thy name with Thine own finger upon my heart, that it may remain closed to worldly joy and worldly pleasure, self-interest, failing honor, and low revenge, and open only to Thee!—Christian Scriter.

A branch of the Mormon Church, with a newspaper called the "Advertiser," has been established in Clarksburg, West Virginia. There are several members of the sect in that vicinity.

The Character of Jesus.

In Dr. Horace Bushnell's unique little volume, "The Character of Jesus," he presents the following thoughts on some of the principal distinctions of the superhuman character of Jesus Christ:

"We have seen him unfolding as a flower from the germ of a perfect youth; growing up to enter into great scenes and enter into great trials; harmonious in all with himself and truth, a miracle of celestial beauty. He is a Lamb in innocency, a God in dignity; revealing an impenitent but faultless piety, such as no mortal ever attempted, such as, to the highest of mortals, is inherently impossible. He advances the most extravagant pretensions, without any show of conceit, or even seeming fault of modesty. He suffers without affectation of composure and without affectation of pride; suffers as no mortal sensibly can, and where, to mortal view, there was no reason for pain at all; giving us not only an example of gentleness and patience in all the small trials of life, but revealing the depth even of the passive virtues of God, in the agony and patience of his suffering love. He also undertakes a plan, universal in extent, perpetual in time; viz: to unite all nations in a kingdom of righteousness under God; laying his foundations in the hearts of the poor, as no great teacher had ever done before, and yet without creating even a faction, or stirring one partizan feeling in its followers. In his teachings he is perfectly original, distinct from his age and from all ages; never warped by the expectation of his friends; all in a balance of truth, swayed by no excesses, running to no oppositions or extremes; clear of all superstitions, and equally clear of all liberalism; and presenting the highest doctrines in the lowest and simplest forms; establishing a pure, universal morality, never before established, and, with all its intense devotion to the truth, never anxious, perceptibly, for the success of his doctrine. Finally, to sum up all in one, he grows more great and wise, and sacred, the more he is known—needs, in fact, to be known to have his perfections seen. And this, we say, is Jesus, the Christ; manifestly not human, not of our world—some being who has burst into it, and is not out of it. Call him for the present that Holy Thing, and by this we believe that thou comest from God.

Tacitus.

This Roman historian of much note, who flourished in the first century, gives the following definite testimony concerning Christ:

"The name (Christian) was derived from Christ, who, in the reign of Tiberius, suffered under Pontius Pilate, the Procurator of Judea." The Annals of Tacitus, B. XV., Sec. 44.

What could be more perfectly in accord with the New Testament history than this account? And in order to appreciate it we must remember that Tacitus was an inveterate foe to Christianity, which at the time of his writing was making rapid inroads into the empire, and even into Rome itself. But the facts in the case, so familiar to every enlightened person of that age forced the infidel historian to admit two of the principal claims of the Gospel, viz: that there was such a being as Jesus Christ, and that he suffered at the hands of Pilate. Here, then, is valuable proof of the correctness of the Bible. It is hardly to be imagined that the Evangelists should tell the truth on these points and be mistaken in all others.

Tacitus goes on to say that this tragic end of the founder of Christianity was a heavy "blow, which for a time checked the growth" of the system; "but it revived soon after, and spread with recruited vigor, not only in Judea, but even in the city of Rome." Peter speaks of the same revival. "Begotten again to a lively hope by the resurrection of Jesus Christ from the dead." No doubt as Tacitus says the death of Christ was a severe stroke, one that well nigh ruined the entire plan, and for the time filled his best friends with doubts and discouragements; "but it soon revived." The resurrection of Jesus was the cause of the "recruited vigor" with which the blessed cause went on its heavenly mission afterwards. It is foolish to suppose that his friends would have circulated the report of his resurrection as a cheat when they knew it involved so much, and exposed themselves to persecution and death. Men are not so fond of self-deception and martyrdom for a fraud as this.

C. G. MARSTON.

An estimate has been made of the number of persons that the great cathedrals of the world will hold with the following results: St. Peter's 54,000; Milan, 37,000; St. Paul's, London, 25,000; St. Sophia, Constantinople, 24,000; Notre Dame, Paris, 21,000; Pisa, 13,000; St. Marks, Venice, 7,000.

The Unprofitable Servant.

In a napkin smooth and white,
Hidden from all mortal sight,
My one talent lies to-night.

Mine to hoard, or mine to use,
Mine to keep, or mine to lose;
May I not do what I choose?

Ah! the gift was only lent,
With the giver's known intent,
That it should be wisely spent;

And I know he will demand
Every farthing at my hand,
When I in his presence stand.

What will be my grief and shame,
When I hear my humble name,
And cannot repay his claim?

Some will double what they hold,
Others add to it tenfold,
And pay the shining gold.

Would that I had toiled like them,
All my sloth I now condemn;
Guilty fears my soul o'erwhelm.

Lord, O teach me what to do!
Make me faithful, make me true,
And the sacred trust renew.

Help me, ere too late it be,
Something yet to do for Thee,—
Thou, who hast done all for me.

Man's Immortality and Consciousness After Death.

But few subjects have been written upon and yet so little understood by the masses as the above. Man's immortality and consciousness was taken for granted, from the fact that a corrupt church (Rome) had admitted into its communion many learned philosophers, who, without the spirit of truth to guide them, had adopted the Platonic idea of an immortal soul. All the nations of the earth had their fabled gods, and truly the Hebrews were a peculiar people, worshiping only the true and living God.

One of our first hints at immortality was as early as Darius, who established an order of priests, called Druids, who were to encourage and cheer the soldiers to deeds of valor, with the promise of being immortalized and made equal to the gods.

The victorious armies of Rome, at the time of our Lord's descent upon earth, had subjected a considerable portion of the known earth, and every country had its peculiar gods. The teachers of error and base deluders of a wretched and ignorant people. The pontiffs or priests represented religion as consisting in the performance of certain ceremonies, and the gods as superior to man only in their immortality and power. The Jewish nation at this period had introduced absurd superstitions and the grossest corruptions into their worship. The principal sects after their return from Babylon and at about Christ's time, were the Pharisees, the Sadducees, Essenes and Pagans as above mentioned. The Pharisees asserted the immortality of the body and soul and future punishment. Sadducees denied the existence of angels and spirits, also the resurrection and future state. The Essenes asserted future rewards alone to the soul: that the body was malignant matter, and the prison of the immortal spirit.

In the midst of this general corruption, the Jews were generally zealously attached to the laws of Moses, and anxious to preserve that respect and veneration which was due to its divine authority.

We learn by examining ancient writings, that the Pharisees were the learned people of the Jewish nation, but had got engrafted into their religion many Pagan notions, as already stated, which was not found in the Mosaic law. And not until the coming and resurrection of Christ, and the early preaching of his disciples, do we learn of future life only through Christ, and as understood by the prophets. And Paul, when arrested for preaching Christ, says I am a Pharisee, the son of a Pharisee; of the hope of the resurrection of the dead I am called in question—am being judged. He says not a word about immortal soul But this I confess unto thee, that the way which they call heresy (a sect) so worship I the God of my fathers, believing all things which are written in the law and the prophets, and having hope toward God which they themselves allow, that there shall be a resurrection of the dead, both of the just and unjust. My manner of life .... at Jerusalem, knew all the Jews. I lived a Pharisee; why should it be thought a thing incredible with you that God should raise the dead? I verily thought with myself that I ought to do many things contrary to the name of Jesus of Nazareth. I continue witnessing .... none other things than those which the prophets and Moses did say should come, That Christ should suffer, that he should be the first-fruits that should rise from the dead.

We have seen by Paul's persecution that he was a seceder from the Pharisees and preached life only through Christ, and a resurrection of the dead. We will now appeal to the record and see what that says, and see if it agrees with Paul's—that in Christ is everlasting life—out of him is death, and which the Scriptures call the second death. Who by patient continuance in well doing seek for glory and honor and immortality, eternal life. Rom. ii. 7. But now being made free from sin, and become servants to God, ye have your fruit unto holiness, and the end everlasting life. For the wages of sin is death, but the gift of God is eternal life through Jesus Christ our Lord. Rom. vi. 22, 23. Shall mortal man be more just than God? Shall a man be more pure than his Maker? Again Paul says, In this tabernacle we do groan, being burdened: not that we could be unclothed. Not groaning for the immortal soul to shake off this mortal body, and thus uncloth itself, and pass away beyond time and space, but to be clothed upon. And how clothed upon? Answer: That mortality (not immortality) might be swallowed up of life. Life fed with Christ, so that when he appears we will be like him. Behold I show you a mystery: we shall not all sleep—or die—but be changed in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye. When changed? At the last trump. For the trumpet shall sound and the dead shall be raised incorruptible; for this corruptible must put on incorruption and this mortal shall put on immortality. 1 Cor. xv. Now if his soul, the full organized man, is represented as groaning in the tabernacle is immortal, how can it be changed to immortality at Christ's second coming and the resurrection. Again, Paul speaking of the saints: And if Christ be not risen, then is our preaching vain, and your faith is also vain. For if the dead rise not then is Christ not raised. Then they also which are fallen asleep in Christ are perished. But now is Christ risen from the dead and become the first-fruits of them that slept. None were ever raised to life before Christ; he was the first. For as in Adam all die (in the day thou eatest thereof thou shalt surely die) so in Christ (I am the resurrection and the life, he that believeth in me though he were dead, yet shall he live) shall all be made alive. But every man in his own order, band or company, Christ the first-fruits, afterward they that are Christ's at his coming. Then the end or rest of the dead. For it is appointed unto man once to die, after this the judgment. For the Father raiseth up the dead and quickeneth them (the rest of the dead) even so the Son quickeneth whom he will (those that believe on him.) And this is the Father's will which hath sent me, that of all which he hath given me I should lose nothing, but should raise it up again at the last day. I can of mine own self do nothing; as I hear I judge, and my judgment is just because I seek not mine own will but the will of the Father which hath sent me. He that believeth on the Son hath everlasting life, and he that believeth not the Son shall not see life, but the wrath of God abideth on him. Blessed and holy is he that hath part in the first resurrection; on such the second death hath no power, but they shall be priests of God and of Christ, and shall reign with him a thousand years. And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life and some to everlasting contempt. Man, thou changest his countenance and sendest him away. For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts. As one dieth so dieth the other; yea, they have all one breath. His breath goeth forth, he returneth to his earth. In that very day his thoughts perish. The dead praise not the Lord. Neither any that go down into silence. Thou hidest thy face, they are troubled. Thou takest away their breath, they die and return to dust. (Future.) Thou sendest forth thy spirit, they are created. And thou renewest the face of the earth. Thou shalt quicken me again, and bring me up again from the depths of the earth. All they that go down to the dust shall bow before him, and none can keep alive his own soul. So man lieth down and riseth not. Till the heavens be no more they shall not awake nor be raised out of their sleep. O that thou wouldst hide me in the grave, that thou wouldst keep me till thy wrath is past, that thou wouldst appoint me a set time and remember me. If a man die shall he live again? All the days of my appointed time will I wait, till my change comes. Thou shalt call me and I will answer. Why died I not from the womb. For now should I have lain still and been quiet, I should have slept, then had I been at rest. There the wicked cease from troubling, there the weary be at rest. For the grave cannot praise thee. Death cannot celebrate thee, they that go down into the pit cannot hope for thy truth. The living the living, he shall praise thee as I do this day. The father to the children shall make known thy truth. For there is no device nor knowledge, nor wisdom in the grave whither thou goest.

But says the objector, these passages only refer to man's body, and not to his soul. We will examine a few of the many passages, and see how the Scriptures treat the soul.

And the Lord God formed man of the dust of the ground, and breathed into his nostrils the breath of life. (Hebrew—lives) and man became a living soul. The full organized man. Whatsoever soul that eateth any manner of blood, even that soul shall be cut off from his people. And thou shalt love the Lord thy God with all thine heart and with all thy soul and with all thy might. My soul chooseth strangling and death rather than life. My soul is weary of my life. And the soul of the wounded crieth out. He keepeth back my soul from the pit. Let the enemy persecute my soul and take it. My soul is sore vexed. Who hath not lifted up his soul unto vanity nor sworn deceitfully. He spared not their soul from death, but gave their life over to pestilence. And Christ says, Now is my soul, troubled and what shall I say. Father save me from this hour, but for this cause came I unto this hour.

It is unnecessary to refer to more passages regarding the soul. In fact the Scripture recognizes the soul as the full organized man.

We will look and see where, in the great expanse of of God's universe, man is found, if outside of the grave, except in the remembrance of God.

And Moses returned unto the Lord and said: Oh this people have sinned a great sin. Yet now if thou wilt forgive their sin and if thou blot me, I pray thee out of thy book, which thou hast written. And the Lord said unto Moses: Whosoever hath sinned against me him will I blot out of my book. And they that feared the Lord spake often one to another. And the Lord hearkened and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him, for them that feared the Lord and thought upon his name. The judgment was set and the books were opened, and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book. My fellow laborers whose names are written in the book of life. I will not blot out his name out of the book of life. And I saw the dead, small and great, stand before God, and the book was opened, and another book was opened, which was the book of life. And the dead were judged out of those things which were written in the books according to their works. And whosoever was not found written in the book of life was cast into the lake of fire. Rev. xx. 14, 15. And death and hell (grave) were cast into the lake of fire. This is the second death. Cessation of life. And they sung a new song, saying, Thou art worthy to take the book and to open the seals thereof, for thou wast slain and hast redeemed us to God by thy blood out of every kindred and tongue and people and nation.

I think any rational man who will take the Scriptures and examine them in truth and honesty, regardless of sect or creed, and with thoughtful prayer will at once see that the soul is not immortal, and must be changed, or as Paul says, clothed upon with life; and he is lead in remembrance through the dark night of death by a true and loving Father, who holds the seas in the hollow of his hand and even the hairs of our head are numbered, and even the sparrow falleth not without his recognition and care. And each one of us is placed in his great book of life or death, and all are called from their dusty bed at the resurrection, there to take his or her place in the great drama. Not a word will be spoken, but each pass to his reward either eternal life or eternal death at the judgment, and evil will be done away from the earth, and the tabernacle of God shall dwell with men. He shall be their God, and they shall be his people, for the Lord said: "As truly as I live all the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord."

C. H. ADAMS.

—Chicago, Ill.

The Synod of Northern Illinois, having dropped Prof. Swing's name from its list of members, are now about to cut off his church, the Fourth Presbyterian, of Chicago. The church is one of the strongest in the state, and its pastor is greatly beloved and respected both for his talents and his Christian character. The Synod will be the only losers.

Seaside resorts, under the direction of the churches or their representatives, are springing up all over the Eastern and Middle states. The Baptists have opened two, one at Martha's Vineyard and the other on the coast of New Jersey; the Presbyterians one, near Cape May; while those under the direction of the Methodists are, as the auctioneer says, "too numerous to mention." The idea of such places has grown into great favor.

Gleanings.

The brethren at Rool Settlement, near Lincolnville, Crawford county, Pa., have arranged to have their Sunday school at 10 o'clock a. m., and breaking of bread at 3 p. m. Brother John T. Ongley will address them on the occasion of breaking of bread.

The following lines are from a friend (C. H. Adams) who lives in Chicago, and who has an article this week upon the first page of our paper. To the Editor of the RESTITUTION:

I have been for a long time a reader of your paper, and formerly took it, and shall again as soon as I get settled down to business. I think the truths brought out are the most pure scriptural truths of any religious paper I know of.

A young brother (C. A. Fairley) of Ravanna, Mo., writes that through the aid first of some lectures delivered by Brother Jno. Foore about two years ago, and secondly the instruction received through the RESTITUTION as a weekly visitor, and lately a few discourses delivered by Brother Dugger, he has been brought into the light concerning the coming kingdom of the Christ, and has taken the necessary steps to become an heir of the inheritance.

We have a report of travels and labors sent us by Brother Amos Sanford too lengthy for our space at present. May publish it in the future. But the following for the present we glean from the reports:

The meeting commenced in Moberly, Mo., Aug. 12th, and continued for several days resulting in stirring up some opposition and also some notices from the press. The following is one of them:

"Mr. Sanford hoots at the idea of the immortality of the soul, and says he don't expect to go to heaven. We fail to see any object in his preaching, if these things be so. That's soul-sleeping in the superlative degree, and yet he professes to be a Christian!"

It also resulted in leading some sixteen or seventeen persons to clearer views of the gospel of the coming kingdom who now express their readiness to obey when opportunity offers.

From Moberly, Brother Sanford returned by the way of St. Louis and delivered four lectures; three to Adventists in private houses, and one in a public hall. The following is a report given by a news reporter of the lecture:

"Last evening at Avenue hall, Amos Sanford, a gentleman from Illinois, delivered a lecture on the subject "What is Man?"

"He had rather a slim audience, but this fact did not appear to dampen his ardor, and he at once proceeded to enlighten his hearers on a subject which has been an open question since the creation. Could all accord with Mr. Sanford's views, of course the question would be speedily settled, but fortunately or unfortunately, as the case may be, this will probably never be.

"The speaker denies the immortality of the soul, and while regarding man as a superior beast, yet thinks he neither goes to heaven nor hell when he dies, but simply returns to dust as other animals do. The spirit of man referred to in the Bible he defines to be the air that is breathed, and it is that, he says, which returns to God when man ceases to breathe.

"He is a believer in the Bible and all it teaches, but contends that the preachers of the day are all wrong, and preach just what it does not teach—the immortality of the soul. He called on anyone in the audience to point out a single passage wherein such a doctrine is taught. Continuing, he said if people would lay aside their prejudices, they might hope to hear the gospel preached from the painted houses wherein the contrary was now taught. Christ will return to raise men from their graves; Christ and the resurrection is the only true religion. Man is like a watch; wind it up and it will run, and when the motive power is spent the watch remains, but nothing immortal has left him. Thought is the result of combination, and does not come about by reason of the existence of a soul—at least such a soul as popular superstition attributes to man.

"The speaker defined the word soul as used in the Bible to mean man, his material form and not an immaterial being. He condemned in strong language the preaching of the present day, and said the gospel was not preached by any minister in the city; they all, he said, adhered to the doctrines they taught, not because they believed them, but simply because to deny them would be to take away their means of existence.

The speaker quoted from the Bible to substantiate his views, and advised his hearers to study the precious volume, and not to trust to the interpretations of others. He said the great mistake Tom Paine made was in taking the views of popular preachers concerning the Bible, instead of studying it for himself. Many of the views presented by the speaker were new and original, and he was listened to with attention, though it was evident the audience were rather amused than convinced."

From St. Louis, Brother Sanford visited Fredericktown and delivered several discourses and immersed two—the wife and daughter of Brother Geo. Plummer—one of our preaching brethren. The entire tour was made at an expense to Brother Sanford above receipts of $10.

LITERARY.

A Concise History of the Primitive Faith: or, the Gospel as held by the Apostles and Primitive Fathers, in a small compass. By C. F. Sweet, of Alden, N. Y. Printed by W. H. Spencer, Rochester, N. Y.

The above named pamphlet contains fifty-one pages of solid reading matter, written in a plain, forcible style, and gives a vast amount of information upon the subject of the early history of the Gospel Faith Bro. Sweet has shown conclusively in this little work that the modern idea of a temporal millenium before Christ comes was not entertained by the early church. We shall order the work and keep it for sale. The brethren will find it a valuable pamphlet. Price, we presume, is 20 cents.

The Phrenological Journal for September has been received, and so well does a perusal reward us for the time expended therein, that we advise our friends to read it. What is it about? These are the principal topics in our opinion: David A. Wells, the American Economist, with an excellent portrait: Paul or Apollos—Which is Right? Silas of Ignorance; Hans Christian Andersen, the Danish author; Controlling Circumstances, Our Country Schools, Illustrated; Absorbing Power of Interest on Money, with Tables—a powerful argument which our farmer-friends should read; Count Waldeck, who died at one hundred and nine; Responsibility of Criminals, by Prof. L. N. Fowler; The late ex-President Andrew Johnson, with two portraits; besides valuable miscellaneous items and editorial matter, all very interesting. Price 30 cents, or $3 a year. Address S. R. Wells & Co., 131 Broadway, N. Y.

ANNOUNCEMENTS.

I expect to preach in Brother Henry Mesteveu's neighborhood on Saturday evening before the 4th Sunday in this month, and also over Sunday. Let all attend who can do so.

O. M. MYERS.

The Annual Conference of Northern Illinois and Southern Wisconsin will meet at the Howard Union meeting-house, a.e Brother Elliott's, in the township of Durand, county of Winnebago, and state of Illinois, on the 10th day of September, 1875, at 9½ o'clock, a. m., to continue over Sunday.

I would suggest that those who wish to be met at the railroad should drop a line, directed to Brother H. P. Elliott, Pecatonica, Illinois, to that effect; then he can make arrangements to meet them. They should state to what place they will come, whether to Davis or to Pecatonica. Those coming on the Western Union will stop at Davis, and those coming on the North-Western will stop on at Pecatonica.

J. K. ARNOLD,
In behalf of the Congregation.

The third quarterly conference of the Church of God in the state of Iowa will be held near Pleasantville, Marion county, commencing on Thursday evening at 7 o'clock before the second Sunday in September, 1875, and hold over the Sunday following.

Brother Hanes will give notice at what railroad stations brethren and friends will be met and conveyed to place of meeting.

All are invited.

A. HUTCHEN, P. C.

ANNA, Iowa, July 26, 1875.

The Lord willing, a general meeting of the brethren and sisters of the Abrahamic faith, will be held near Brother Henry M. Cocke's residence, two miles west of Sulphur Springs, Williamson county, Ill., commencing Friday, September 10th, at 7:30 p. m., and continuing over the following Sunday. Let all the friends of Jesus, who "love his appearing," come to this first conference in Southern Illinois. All true saints of all classes are especially invited.

ANOS SANFORD.

I am ready and willing to go any where in "all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature," who will come and hear me "at the time appointed."

Having no means of my own, my traveling expenses will have to be met from some other source. Let the friends of truth in Southern Illinois, and at accessible points in Kentucky, Arkansas and Missouri, who desire a course of Biblical Lectures, address me and get me to Anna, Union county, Ill.

ANOS SANFORD.

THE RESTITUTION.

Martyr's Hymn in 1520.

[The following lines were composed by the Earl of Surrey, who was called to suffer a martyr's death, in the reign of Henry VIII., and wrote them in prospect of that solemn event.]

My life's a shade, my days
Apace to death decline;
My lord is life he'll raise
My dust again, e'en mine.
Sweet truth to me
I shall arise
And with these eyes
My Saviour see.

My peaceful grave shall keep
My bones till that sweet day,
I awake from my long sleep.
And leave my bed of clay.
Sweet truth to me
I shall arise
And with these eyes
My Saviour see.

My Lord—his angels shall,
Their golden trumpets sound,
At whose most welcome call,
My grave shall be unbound.
Sweet truth to me
I shall arise
And with these eyes
My Saviour see.

I said sometimes with tears,
Ah me! I'm loth to die,
Lord, silence thou these fears;
My life's with Thee on high.
Sweet truth to me
I shall arise
And with these eyes
My Saviour see.

What means my trembling heart,
To be thus shy of death?
My life and I shan't part,
Though I resign my breath.
Sweet truth to me
I shall arise
And with these eyes
My Saviour see.

Then welcome, harmless grave;
By thee to heaven I'll go,
My Lord—his death shall save
Me from the flames below.
Sweet truth to me
I shall arise
And with these eyes
My Saviour see.

Prophecy.

"A time and times and the dividing of time." Dan. vii. 25.

Prophecy must interpret itself. Commentators agree "that a time is 360 days, and those days mean so many years of 365 days;" but what does prophecy give. in Dan. iv. 25–32, "and seven times shall pass over thee." I believe all persons agree that seven times are just seven literal years. So may it be.

Now if seven times mean seven years, how long is a "time, and times and the dividing of time?" Let us count "a time" one year, "and times" two years, "and the dividing of time" one half year; total, three years and a half. Now if Daniel proves itself as shown above, we can also understand, for Dan. xii. 10 says, "the wise shall understand;" but understand what? "How long to the end of these wonders," (ver. 6) is the question. Answer—"For a time, times and a half," or a part. But does other prophecy sustain Daniel? Yes; see Rev. xii. 6, "A thousand and three score days." Again, ver. 14, "For a time, and times, and half a time." Now turn to Rev. xi. 2, "And the holy city shall they tread under foot forty and two months," and those forty-two months, multiplied by thirty days for a month, makes the amount found in the 3d verse, that is, "a thousand, two hundred and three-score days." Now then, must we believe the Advents' private and public interpretation, that "one thousand, two hundred and threescore days means years!" Now, my brother, how can you, after examining Daniel and Revelations understandingly? It is not a wonder to my own mind that our brethren coming out of the Christian Church, and all others, should use the phrase, "Lord's day" in speaking of Sunday, or of the Old and New Testaments, when referring to the prophetic or apostolic writings. Why? Because the Christian Church and others (though orthodox) use those terms! Now, if "a time, and times, and a half of time" is just 1260 literal days, and not so many years, as the Advents assert everywhere, then 1260 days must be forty and two literal months, and just three and a half years, and corresponds with Dan. ix. 27; and in the midst of the week. What week? Let us count again; in ver. 24 we have "seventy weeks;" and in ver. 25 we read, from the going forth of the command—unto the Messiah the Prince seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks, equal sixty-nine weeks. And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off. ver. 26.

Now if a prophetic week is seven years, then "threescore and two" "and seven," would be 483 years. Then from the "commandment" going forth to, and, "And (Jesus) saying, the time (or years) is fulfilled," (Mark i. 15) would be, according to the Scriptures, sixty and nine weeks, or 483 years, literal years. Then we find, "And after threescore and two weeks Messiah shall be cut off"—not in the midst of any week, prophetic or otherwise! It is not so in prophecy. If it is, I would thank some one to point it out.

I have never found in the prophecy of Daniel, that the "Messiah" was "cut off" in the "midst of the week," but I find in ix. 26, "And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off." Will someone tell where we find anything done in the seventieth or last of the prophetic weeks, that are determined upon Daniel's people? Is it to be found in the Scriptures what things are to take place in this week? Yes, emphatically; Dan. ix, 24:

1. "To finish the transgressions,
2. "To make an end of sins.
3. "To make reconciliation for iniquity.
4. "To bring in everlasting righteousness,
5. "To seal up the vision and prophecy.
6. "To annoint the Most High."

Here we have enumerated six things in one verse. But when we come to consider, after reading Dan. vii. 25, of a king diverse from the first ten kings, etc. 26 ver. "And he shall * * * wear out the saints of the Most High, for they shall be given into his hand, until a time, and a times, and the dividing of time," which I have proven to be three and one-half literal years. And I believe it will be found in the future and in the seventieth week of Daniel's prophecy, and in that week we have a space of 2,300 days (not years). Why? Because there is but seven years in a prophetic week recollect. Will we also find, besides the "time," etc., spoken of above, "a thousand, two hundred and ninety days," and "the thousand, three hundred and five and thirty days." Now by not wresting these days, and making them so many years, we can allow all these to come to pass about the time (or year) Daniel stands in his lot and a little before "The end of the days." May all of us be able to stand there.

S. S. HAYDEN.

NEVADA, Mo.

The Abrahamic Covenant.

The covenant of Abraham contains the outlines of the Christian system;—and in order to a just and proper understanding of that system, we should duly consider the important principles so clearly presented to our minds therein. Does the Gospel teach that we should believe the record which God hath given of his Son? We have it most beautifully illustrated in the case of Abraham, all that was stated to him in regard to the seed, which was Christ, and the numerous posterity as well as the locality in which that posterity should ultimately be consolidated and made one.

Hence he is styled the head and father of all them that believe, in an eminent degree. The words of the covenant are as follows: "And Abram passed through the land unto the place Sichem, unto the plain of Moreh; and the Canaanite was then in the land." Gen. xii. 6–7. "And the Lord appeared unto Abraham, and said: Unto thy seed will I give this land." Then again, Gen. xiii. 14–17: "Lift up now thine eyes, and look from the place where thou art, northward, and southward, and eastward, and westward; for all the land which thou seest, to to thee will I give it, and to thy seed, forever."

We learn in the above declarations, 1st, that the inheritance was to be a literal one; and, 2d, that Abraham and his seed was to enjoy it forever. Again, it is called in Gen. xvii. 8, an everlasting possession. Therefore, as the promise can only be fulfilled in an immortal or eternal state, the word everlasting must be taken in its literal and grammatical sense. Nothing would be gained by saying, it is to be understood in an accommodating sense, and therefore extends to the end of the world or age. For in that sense it is not true, neither Abraham nor his seed have possessed it, even up to the present time, and Abraham not at all! Yet he is to have it for an everlasting possession. Therefore we state again, it must be fulfilled in the immortal or everlasting age.

Thus we find, after the promise of God to Abraham, and his faith in that promise, was clearly manifested; he then attends to the offering of the sacrifice, as the Lord had directed him, and in the offering of that sacrifice the covenant was enlarged and made sure to him and his seed forever, "saying, unto thy seed have I given this land, from the river of Egypt to the great river Euphrates." Again, this is made more apparent to every candid mind, by the offering of Isaac, of whom it was said. "In Isaac shall thy seed be called;" accounting that God was able to raise him from the dead: from whence also he received him in a figure." Heb. xi. 17–18. Is it not more than intimated in the above text, that it was only by a resurrection of the dead Abraham expected the covenant of God to be fulfilled to him and his seed.

Then also in the case of Paul before Agrippa, Acts xxvi. 7–8, "And now I stand and am judged for the hope of the promise made of God unto our fathers, unto which promise our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night, hope to come, for which hope's sake, King Agrippa, I am accused of the Jews."

From this text also we learn that the promise of God to the fathers contained the hope of the resurrection from the dead; and that the twelve tribes so understood it, and served God with the hope of gaining that blessed state. Once more, Abraham looked for "a city which hath foundations whose builder and maker is God." Heb. xi. 10. This city St. John saw coming down from God out of heaven, prepared as a bride adorned for her husband. "And I heard a great voice out of heaven, saying, Behold the tabernacle of God is with men, and he will dwell with them, and be their God." Rev. xxi. 2–3. The apostle Peter, in his second epistle, iii. 13, brings to view the same principles:—"Nevertheless, we, according to his promise, look for new heavens and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness." These declarations give us most clearly to understand the sense in which the apostles understood the original promise made to Abraham, that they can only be fulfilled in an eternal or immortal state. They will be fulfilled therefore, "when the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and his Christ." Abraham and his seed, as joint rulers with Christ shall reign forever and ever." "For if the inheritance be of the law, it is no more of promise: but God gave it to Abraham by promise." Gal. iii. 18. "If ye be Christ's, then ye are Abraham's seed, and heirs according to the promise. Gal. iii. 29.

This gives us to understand why the Apostles and primitive Christians dwelt with such peculiar delight on the inheritance of the saints. They preached, you will perceive, a gospel having a kingdom, or inheritance, in which was vested the motive power to obedience and great self-denial: even to the sundering of the dearest relations of life: "So that an abundant entrance might be ministered unto them into the everlasting kingdom of our Lord Jesus Christ.—Rev. A. C. Barnes in W. M. Protestant.

The Highlands of Edom.

At the southeastern border of Palestine is a well-defined region, always historically connected with the chosen people. It is a mountainous tract extending north from the Gulf of Akaba to the Dead Sea, bounded on the east by the great desert, and on the west by the long deep trench called Ghe Arabah, the southern continuation of the Jordan Valley. It takes its name from "Esau, the father of the Edomites," who we are told, (Gen. xxxii. 3.) went off with his family and retainers, and property, and took forcible possession of Mount Seir, driving out the Horites (cave-dwellers) who were the original inhabitants. Here his descendants remained for centuries undisturbed, Moses not being allowed to cross their territory on his way with Israel to the promised land. Long after this, the divine prohibition was removed for we find Edom subdued and made tributary by David and several of his successors. But subsequently they threw off the yoke and became independent, in which condition they were found by Nebuchadnezzar, with whom they co-operated in the overthrow of Jerusalem. In this they appear to have shown peculiar bitterness and ferocity, to which repeated reference is made in the Scriptures. Afterwards they spread out over the Negeb or South country of Palestine, and their original territory was occupied by descendants of Nebaioth (Esau's brother-in-law,) who founded a little kingdom called by the Romans Arabia Petræa, which subsisted until the Mohammedan conquest, soon after which all became desolate.

The modern traveler under, the escort of a certain Bedouin Sheik, can now traverse this entire region from end to end, but no one ever makes the journey without being filled with wonder. Edom is mountainous, or rather a series of mountains, covering a territory from twenty to twenty-five miles in breadth, but these are intersected in all directions, but mainly north and south, by wide valleys; sometimes opening out into extensive plains. For the first day or two's march, a man must content himself with the execrable water of Akaba, but after that, springs are found in abundance; grass and small patches of grain are not unfrequent; traces of old terraces are seen on the hillsides; heaps of squared stones indicate ancient settlements; and signs of former roads are easily discernible. But no houses are seen, no inhabitants encountered; all looks as waste and deserted as an untrodden wilderness in our own continent. After some day's journey the visitor arrives at the singular city of Petra (the Selah of Scripture) long lost from the knowledge of men, and only discovered or identified in the early part of this century. Here the numerous dwellings are cut out of the rock. A natural basin in the mountain has been artificially enlarged until everywhere around it are houses, temples and even a theatre, excavated in the soft lime-stone. Here evidently lived a numerous people. The structures which still remain do not exhibit any noteworthy taste, but they show large resources and an advanced civilization in these successors of the ancient Troglodytes. Yet they have left none to take their places. Nobody lives in Petra, and the only use now made of these costly excavations is to pen sheep or goats. Various tribes of Beloudins are in the vicinity, but they live in tents, and apparently set no store by the rock-hewn city.

It is not easy to see or consider these wastes without recalling the words of the prophets. Take one instance from Jeremiah xlix. 16.

"Thy terribleness hath deceived thee, the pride of thy heart, O thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, that holdest the height of the hill. Though thou shouldst make thy nest high as the eagle, I will bring thee down from thence and Edom shall become a desolation. As in the overthrow of Sodom and Gomorrah, saith the Lord, no man shall abide there."

Now it is true that these were words addressed not to the region itself, but to its inhabitants; and these, the hereditary and bitter foes of the covenant people, ages ago met their deserved doom, and other races occupied their homes. Still it can hardly be accidental that these homes, the interstellate inhabitants having perished should now present the picture they do of unrelieved solitude and decay; the land a desert for want of cultivation, the cities all in ruins, the castles hewn out of the solid rock dismantled and abandoned,—no hum of industry, no sign of traffic, thorns coming up in the palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses, the only human inhabitant an occasional shepherd with his flock, or a predatory Arab lying in wait for his foe. It surely seems as though God had stamped his judgment upon the very ground to remind men in all coming time of the fearful wages of sin.

The Edomites, in their spite and bitterness against the people of God, stood pre-eminent among the nations, and hence are fit representatives of all the Lord's foes. As such they are repeatedly set forth by Isaiah, especially in the grand dramatic passage where the prophet sees the conqueror coming back from the conflict, his raiment dripping with the blood of the foe.

"Who is this that cometh from Edom with dyed garments from Bozrah, this that is glorious in his apparel, traveling in the greatness of his strength? I that speak in righteousness, mighty to save. Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like one that treadeth in a wine-press? I trod the wine-press alone, and of the nations there was not a man with me."

Edom and Bozrah were thus trodden beneath the feet of God as a righteous avenger. And the proper impression to be made by a sight of the gloomy solitudes which stretch from Akaba to the Dead Sea, is not, what great sinners were these children of Esau; but how surely shall all sinners, all oppressors of God, be overthrown, no matter what their numbers, or wisdom or resources; nay, even though they set their nests as high as an eagle's eyrie, or rise to be among the stars. (Obad. 4.)

There is no natural reason why this land should lie waste. Its soil might be made to support a dense population, solid highways like those of old Rome might traverse its valleys, and long caravans carry back and forth, as in ancient days, the products of the East and West. Ships, too, might proceed from the gulf of Akaba as they do from Suez, and divert in this direction the great India trade. Nothing in the necessary condition of the country hinders such a restoration. Yet it is not attempted, not even dreamed of. Trade, culture, capital, social institutions, all have gone, seemingly never to return. And there lies the land, with its hills and valleys, its monuments and ruins, its past memories and present desolation, a living witness to the truth of God's Word, and a memorial of his righteous judgment.—Golden Censer.

The Low Church Episcopalians have entered a new field of usefulness in the city of New York, in inaugurating a series of out-door services, the mayor having granted "the House of the Evangelists" permission to use for that purpose certain streets and squares. The "Church Journal" says there can be no question but that such services are needed, in view of the fact that there is only sufficient church accommodation for one-fourth of the population of the city.

The Two Resurrections.

REVELATIONS xxii. 20.

Upon this passage the Dean Alford, the eminent commentator, makes the following remarks:

I cannot consent to distort the words from their plain and very obvious sense and chronological place in the prophecy, on account of any considerations of difficulty or any risk of abuse which the doctrine of the millennium may bring with it. Those who lived next to the apostles, and the entire church for three hundred years, understood them in the plain literal sense; and it is a strange sight in these days, to see expositors, who are among the first in reverence for antiquity, complacently casting aside the most cogent instance of consensus which primitive antiquity presents.

As regards the text itself, no legitimate treatment of it will extort what is known as the spiritual interpretation so much in fashion. If, in a passage where two resurrections are mentioned, where certain persons lived at the first, and the rest of the dead only at the end of a specified period after that first—if, in such a passage, the first resurrection may be understood to mean spiritual rising with Christ, while the second means literal rising from the grave—then there is an end to all significance in language, and Scripture is wiped out as a definite testimony to anything. If the first resurrection is spiritual, then so is the second, which, I suppose, none will be hardy enough to maintain; but if the second is literal, so is the first, which, in common with the whole primitive church and many of the best modern expositors, I do maintain and receive as an article of faith and hope."

Those, then, who hold the doctrine that there are two resurrections, the one at the beginning, and the other at the end of the millennium, need not be disturbed when told that they are regarded as eccentric or crazy; for, according to the testimony of this distinguished scholar, they stand "with the whole primitive church and many of the best modern expositors."

Bishop Newton, also, after stating that the passage "teaches a particular resurrection preceding the general one at least a thousand years," goes on to say:

"This prophecy, therefore, remains yet to be fulfilled, even though the resurrection be taken only for an allegory, which yet the text cannot admit without the greatest torture and violence. For with what propriety can it be said that some of the dead who were beheaded lived and reigned with Christ a thousand years, but the rest of the dead lived not again until the thousand years were finished,' unless the dying and living again be the same in both places, a proper death and resurrection? If the martyrs rise only in a spiritual sense, then the rest of the dead rise only in a spiritual sense; but if the rest of the dead really rise, the martyrs rise in the same manner. There is no difference between them; and we should be cautious and tender of making the first resurrection an allegory, lest others should reduce the second into an allegory, too, like those who whom St. Paul mention in 2 Tim. ii. 17, 18, 'Hymeneus and Philetus, who concerning the truth have erred, saying that the resurrection is passed already; and overthrow the faith of some.'"

The Kingdom "At Hand."

BROTHER HEED:—

With your permission, I will write a few lines on the above words. The expression, "at hand," would seem to convey an idea of something near, not two thousand years in the future. But we know the kingdom is not set up yet. From the fact the kingdom was said to be at hand, has led many to suppose that it was set up on the day of Pentecost, and with some reasonable show of consistency. The commonly received opinion, to-wit.: "the next in order," that is, the next after the Roman Empire, the last of the four universal kingdoms of earth (Dan. ii.) has been accepted as the true sense of the text, "at hand."

From the fact that the prophets spoke nothing about the "Christian dispensation" of our time, we are led to believe that they expected the kingdom would be developed at the first coming of Messiah, and as the apostles and Jews knew nothing of the kingdom, except what they learned from the prophets, they too looked for the same, as will appear from the text quoted, as follows:

The wise men who saw the star asked the question, "Where is he that is born king of the Jews?" This announcement of a king troubled Herod, and why? Because it would interfere with his kingship, and hoping to put an end to this king who was born in Bethlehem, in the land of Judea, he sent forth and killed all the young children of a certain age. Is it not clear that Herod expected this king to supersede him as "king of the Jews." If, as the sects say, he was to reign in heaven above the stars, what would Herod care for that? If he did not interfere with him on earth he might reign any place else as long as he pleased.

Herod was not only troubled himself about this matter, "But all Jerusalem with him." Why was Jerusalem troubled? Answer: "If we let him thus alone, all men will believe on him; and the Romans shall come and take away our place and nation." John xi. 48. "If thou let this man go, thou art not Cesar's friend. Whoever maketh himself a king speaketh against Cesar." John xix. 10–13.

This is sufficient to show what the Jews thought, as a nation, about Jesus as king of the Jews. It goes to show that they expected his reign was to begin then, or in a short time. In their time; and as Cesar was universal monarch of the world, they were afraid the Roman army would again invade the country and add another link to the chain of their slavery. There was another class of Jews, who expected when Shilo came, the kingdom would be taken from their enemies, and restored to Israel, as in the days of David and Solomon, as will appear from the following testimony:

"But we trusted that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." John xxiv. 21. "After these things." What things?—That Christ had been crucified, and put to death by the Jews and Roman soldiers, the disciples trusted "that it had been he which should have redeemed Israel." But after his death, all hope was lost.

"Simon Peter saith unto them, I go a fishing; they say unto them, we go with thee." John xxi. 2.

Thus again we read Acts of Apostles what his own chosen apostles thought about the setting up of the kingdom, which proves they were ignorant of the time "and seasons" which God himself alone knew. "When they, therefore, were come together, they ask of him, saying, Lord wilt thou at this time restore again the kingdom to Israel." Acts i. 6. It is clear from this text, that the apostles thought the kingdom would be set up at his first advent. The entire nation believed this also. "Our twelve tribes instantly serving God day and night hope to come." Acts xxvi. 7. Hope for what to come? Why, the "kingdom restored again to Israel,"—alike as it was when in its glory under David.

Good old Simeon also "waited for the consolation of Israel," and when he saw the Lord Christ, he wished then to depart in peace. Is it therefore any wonder we find John the Baptist and all the apostles saying, "the kingdom of heaven is at hand!" But again, "as it is written," "Fear not daughter of Zion, behold thy king cometh sitting on an ass's colt. These things understood not his disciples at first, but when Jesus was glorified, then remembered they that these things were written of him." John xii. 15–17.

David caused Solomon to be seated on his best mule and proclaimed king of Israel. Likewise "behold thy king cometh sitting on an ass's colt." When Solomon was proclaimed king, his reign was "at hand." If the Jews had accepted Christ at his first coming, the kingdom would have been set up. It is evident God's ways depend upon the ways of men. See Jer. xviii. 7–11. He, God, proposed to set up a kingdom under Messiah when he come; but the Jews set aside their king, ignorantly, when he came to "his own," and they received him not as their king. This rejection was to pave the way, (in the mind of the great God, but unknown to the prophets and apostles till Christ was glorified) for the calling of the Gentiles; therefore, the calling of the Gentiles was a consequence of the rejection of Messiah by the Jews. If the Jews had received Christ, Gentile times would have not been, but the kingdom would have been set up; and in this way the kingdom was "at hand." It is said to have "come nigh unto them," but it was deferred in consequence of them "not knowing the times and seasons." There was a mystery attached to the calling of the Gentiles that even the angels desired to investigate, and Peter with the "keys of the kingdom," refused to "go to the Gentiles" with the gospel, because Christ told them not to "go in the way of the Gentiles, but rather go to the house of Israel."

John the Baptist and all the apostles preached the "kingdom at hand," prior to Christ being glorified, because they thought the time "at hand." But when they received power and knowledge, after Christ's execution, we hear no more about the kingdom being "at hand." And this view will account for the expression "at hand." It was to be, if man accepted; otherwise not; in the mind of God all was clear, not so in the mind of man.

TO CORRESPONDENTS.

THE RESTITUTION advocates the final "restitution of all things which God hath spoken by the mouth of all his Holy Prophets since the world began." It also advocates as a means to this end the establishment of the Kingdom of God on the earth, with the Christ as King of kings, and the immortal saints as joint-heirs with Him in the government of the nations; the restoration of Israel; the literal resurrection of the dead; the immortalization of the righteous, and the final destruction of the wicked; eternal life only through Christ, and many other kindred truths. It also advocates a hearty belief of the Gospel, repentance, and immersion as prerequisites to the forgiveness of sins, and a holy life as essential for final salvation.

Communications.—The Editor must not be understood as endorsing all the sentiments expressed by correspondents whose articles are inserted under this head. Each writer is alone responsible for the article bearing his own signature. If the teaching of any writer is not endorsed, an article setting forth the views of the party differing may be forwarded. Free discussion of Bible doctrines on all sides will be allowed, but the Editor reserves the privilege of excluding those communications which antagonize a belief and obedience of the Gospel as a means of salvation, or which undermine its principles.

The River of Living Water

BY EDWARD TURNEY.

The prophet Ezekiel has devoted the last eight chapters of his book to a description of an order of things upon the land of Palestine, of which we have no counterpart in Jewish history. He begins with a narrative of a vision which he saw of the temple and city Jerusalem. And after going m[illegible] and setting at the programme of the new order of worship to be observed in that future temple, he closes his prophetic account, with a particular notice of the partition of the land among the then restored tribes, apportioning a magnificent plat in the midst or center, for the metropolis and residence of the Prince Royal and part of his household.

Now, it is with the prophet's description of a certain river that we are more immediately concerned. At the top of the column in which is the beginning of the forty-seventh chapter you will notice these words:

"Vision of the Holy Waters."

Let us follow the prophet in his survey of these waters and their banks, there can be no doubt as to the intended reality of that which the prophet portrays. This river seems to us quite as real as the Thames, Severn, or the Trent. How precise he is in marking its rise. He says:

"Behold waters issued out from under the threshold of the house eastward: for the forefront of the house stood toward the east, and the waters came down from under, from the right side of the house, at the south side of the altar."

I am not aware that anything of this kind existed during the standing of any of the temples which have adorned the city of Jerusalem. Unless, then, the language be parabolical, it must point to a future condition of things there which will involve great physical changes. It scarce needs to be observed that no such waters are rising and flowing in that locality to-day, and there are no evident signs, that such is likely to become a fact. But the almighty, by his prophets, frequently speaks of things that be not as though they were. And we know that so many wonderful predictions having found their faithful fulfillment, there is no reason whatever to be sceptical that this, strange and new as it sounds will not also be fulfilled. Marvelous as it undoubtedly is, it is not more so than several things which have been very accurately accomplished according to certain ancient prophecies. If we had been residing in Jerusalem two thousand years ago, with its grand palaces, massive and frightfully high walls, its rich gardens, pools, and fountains, its wealthy and proud thousands thronging its streets and public ways, we should probably have paid little or no attention to fearful prognostications declaring that it would, in a generation or two, become an utter ruin and a desolation; all its inhabitants gone, either to the grave by war, pestilence, and famine, or driven as slaves into the already over-stocked slave markets of foreign nations. I say, few of us, had we lived twenty centuries ago, would have given credence to these terrible threats. However, the facts themselves are now so old that few take any interest in them. It would hardly be incorrect to say that not one person in a thousand takes the least notice either of the prophecies concerning them or of the historical accounts of the manner of their fulfillment, nor even of the sad results still before their eyes.

Seeing that these things cannot be gainsayed, it requires no great stretch of faith to confidently expect the exact realization of the prediction concerning these waters. The source of this new and large river was remarkably small, or there would not have been room for it in the place where the prophet saw it, viz; at the south side of the altar" inside the temple. And we should not imagine it to be subject to material fluctuation, for it would be a source of great inconvenience to the temple itself. It seems to be one steady measured outflow of pure sparkling water, winding its way beneath the steps or threshold of the house, something, perhaps, like those translucent springs we find in certain parts of Wales or Derbyshire, pouring their unfailing volumes of living water from under some piece of rock upon which you may conveniently stand and watch their gurgling, gathering course until lost in the wide flood of a navigable stream.

The new river, the prophet observed, widened and deepened at stated intervals. At a thousand cubits, or about 500 yards from the altar, it was still only ankle deep; a mere rippling brook. But when "the man with the measuring line in his hand" had marked off [illegible] thousand, the waters [illegible] to be knee-deep; at the third thousand they rose to the waist; and at the end of the fourth could only be passed by means of swimming or a boat—they were become "a river that could not be passed over."

The angelic guide then said to Ezekiel, "these waters issue out towards the east country, and go down into the sea." This is the Dead Sea; for that lies in an easterly direction from the source of this remarkable river. In the next few sentences the prophet chronicles some most wonderful facts. He observes that "the waters being brought forth into the sea, the waters (that is, of the Dead Sea) shall be healed. And it shall come to pass that everything that liveth, which moveth whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live; and there shall be a great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed; and everything shall live whither the river cometh. And it shall come to pass that the fishers shall stand upon it from Engedi even unto En-eglaim; they shall be a place to spread forth nets; their fish shall be according to their kinds, as the fish of the great sea, exceeding many."

Now, you all know something of that wonder of the world—the Dead Sea. In its vicinity stood those notoriously wicked cities, Sodom and Gomorrah. It lies in one of the most remarkable valleys upon our globe, the valley of Jordan. The whole of this valley is depressed below the level of the earth's surface. In the northern portion of it is the lake of Tiberias. This lake lies about 382 feet below the level of the sea, and the surface of the Dead Sea has a depression of 1312 feet. Its length is something like 40 miles, with an average breadth of 10 to 12. The waters are largely impregnated with salt and bitumen, so that they are much heavier than ordinary water, and unfit for the existence of any living thing. It presents a very still, barren and desolate appearance; no creatures, not even birds, have any inducement to visit its shores. It is indeed a Dead Sea. It is scarcely safe to trust yourself upon its surface; the atmosphere is said to be most unhealthy. And as to the water, if you fell into it, you would come out almost pickled, experiencing a most unpleasant prickling sensation of the skin, while it is so dense that you can with difficulty get under the surface. It would be difficult to sink in it. In fact, its waters cannot be fathomed by the lead.

The Jordan flows 120 miles from its rise by two springs in the mountains of Antilibanus, one near to the ancient Cæsrea Philippi, the other at Laish, or Dan. This sea has no known outlet. The Jordan, a considerable river, rapid in its flow, and sometimes in the spring 100 feet wide, has been running into it for thousands of years, with hardly any perceptible effect. It also receives several other streams, one of which is the river Arnon. But all this supply of fresh water does not affect it. It is not at all purified thereby. There are no fish, not even insect life. What a glorious transformation scene is painted by the prophet! He notes that it abounds with fish like the fish of the Great Sea or Mediterranean. He sees in vision thriving fishing stations on its shores. Men are busy spreading their nets, and every sign of peace, happiness and prosperity mark the district for nearly fifty miles where at this moment a dismal silence reigns unbroken, save by the voice or step of some intrepid tourist.

You will mark that the prophet says the waters of the Dead Sea are healed, "because these waters" from "the south side of the altar" flow thither." This is a most extraordinary fact. It appears that what the Jordan and other rivers have not been equal to for ages, will speedily be effected by the vivifying influences of this new supply. This, then, in a peculiar sense, may be styled "living water."

The mention of the Great Sea and its variety of fish is at once suggestive of a communication from it with the Dead Sea. And it would appear that such communication was foreseen, and is foreshown by the Hebrew prophets. Zechariah speaks of this very thing in the fourteenth chapter, and informs us that it is to be brought about by means of an earthquake. This earthquake is to occur upon the return of Jesus to Mount Olivet. We remember that an earthquake is recorded to have [illegible] and there is to be another on His return. Let us read what Zechariah says: "And his feet shall stand in that day upon the Mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east; and the Mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west: and there shall be a very great valley, and half of the mountain shall remove to the north and half of it toward the south. And ye shall flee to the valley of the mountains, for the valley of the mountains shall reach unto Azal."

When you look at the mighty rush of the Mediterranean waters right across the country, to say nothing of the general terror, caused by an earthquake of sufficient power to open so great a valley, there is obvious ground for the panic and flight here noted. The name Azal is much like that of a town a little south of Jerusalem on the Mediterranean sea board—viz: Ascalon. If you take the "sc" for "z," and then cut off the termination "on," you have "Azal." The other two places—En-gedi and En-eglaim, or Engallim—are upon the borders of the Dea Sea. Hence there seems to be a literal exactness in the geographical data with the terms of the prophecy. The prophet Joel, writing evidently upon the Messiah's second appearing, gives corroborative testimony. In iii. 18 he says: "In that day there shall be a fountain go forth out of the house of the Lord and water the valley of Shittim." This is shown on our maps to be just above the Dead Sea. Now, it would be hard indeed to spiritualize all these circumstantial statements. And when you contemplate the glorious results that their literal fulfillment is to bring, it seems to me that one has no motive for trying to perform such a feat of "divinity." Some writers have been able to see in the abundance of fishes vast shoals of believers! Let us be content with what our eyes reveal. Let us be satisfied with this large supply of good fish, giving food and employment to the populations then inhabiting the shores of those living waters. Zechariah says, "in summer and in winter shall it be."

Now, it has been conjectured that this inlet of the Mediterranean waters will immediately, by their furious velocity, cause a tremendous rise and swirl in the Dead Sea, and that when this gyration subsides the power of the falling waters will be so great that they are sure to open for themselves an old river bed leading into the Gulf of Akaba, and thus communicating with the Red Sea, which bed has been choked up with sand drift for 4,000 years. This looks very plausible at all events, and it would at once make Jerusalem the emporium of the world. By sea she would be accessible to India, China, Japan, North and South America, Europe and Africa. She would be the very star of the earth.—Bible Echo.

The Bell in the Sea.

It is said that off the coast of Wales a large bell has been placed in the sea to warn vessels against too near an approach to the shoals above which it swings. It is so arranged that at every motion of the waves, however slight, it sends forth its admonishing sound. The inhabitants of a town that lies along the shore, more than a mile distant, may not hear it amid the din of business; or if they hear, they may not heed it, because accustomed to its unceasing tones as the ticking or striking of a clock in our room is after awhile totally unnoticed. But whether forgotten or remembered the bell is pealing out its signals of danger or its softer notes, day after day, and night after night, and hour after hour.

Sometimes when the gale has rushed across the bosom of the Atlantic it rings a wild and rapid alarm; sometimes it almost seems to shriek amid the sullen moanings of the storm; sometimes at the touch of the rippling breeze, it tells of gladness, like the chime of marriage bells; and sometimes as the wind is sinking into a great calm its melody steals over the water like sweetest music. Merchant vessels may speed along the track of trade; tempest tossed mariners may struggle to gain the port; pleasure parties may sail around it with laugh and shout; funeral barges may pass it with the remains of the dead; but its voice is never silent, and to all it [illegible] lesson if they have ears to hear.

No one can fail to perceive in this an appropriate symbol of the "Word of God, which liveth and abideth forever." 1 Peter i. 23. Although too often unheard or unheeded, it is sounding its solemn warnings and its tender entreaties each succeeding moment. Many regard it as the disturber of their peace, but without it man would be inevitably stranded and wrecked upon the dark shores of a hopeless eternity. Its most terrific denunciations of the wrath of God against sin are after all but the loud alarum of the bell in the sea, when struck by the breaking billows; and the sinner, admonished in love, should lift his heart in adoring gratitude to Him who is "not willing that any should perish, but that all should come to repentance." 2 Peter iii. 9. If a bell ringing above the shallow water had told of peril, when the Schiller was groping its way in gloom to be broken in pieces upon the Scilly Islands, its friendly voice would not have been despised by the passengers as the disturber of their peace.

"The wicked are like the troubled sea, when it can not rest, whose waters cast up mire and dirt." Isa. lvii. 20. But when Jesus arises in his grace and might, and says "Peace, be still," to all this uproar, how like "dulcet symphonies" come the assurances and the promises of the word to the believer! From that moment, if faith is in exercise, notes of silvery sweetness are always floating across the waters to delight the child of God. They are heard every morning as he renews his voyage heavenward; every evening as he lies down to slumber, a day's sail nearer home; in every hour of perplexity; in every night of sorrow; in every time of trial: animating, comforting, directing, sustaining him, and ringing out more and more clearly as he approaches "the shining shore." May the Lord lead his people to listen to the word, only to the word, constantly to the word, until they recognize in it his own voice, and yield to his will an unquestioning and happy obedience in all things! "Blessed is the people that know the joyful sound." Psa. lxxxix. 15.—The Truth.

The Children of Promise.

"Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise."—Gal. iv. 28.

The discrimination between the bond-woman—Hagar, and the free-woman—Sarah, is absolutely unmistakable. So is that also between the two covenants and all those who are born after the flesh, in contrarity to them who are born after the spirit. We see this, and we want to maintain this contrarity, because of its primary truth. No intelligent faith can ever confound these contrarities that exist in the constitution of things, and hence reach from the top to the bottom, from the beginning to the end of God's great and all-comprehending system. Good and evil, Christ and Belial, God and devil, are never mixed up as to either means or ends, and merged into one.

Our noble and precious brother, N. Field, M. D., sees this. It is good for us to agree, and it seems only needful to get one step further in this fundamental way of truth, to extend this agreement to the profoundest depth and greatest length of our subject—Israel's destiny.

He said in his last to me, "If you are after the children of the free-woman, that is another matter!" He was arguing, and as it were feeling his way along that line, the only line of promise, and I say Amen and Amen! Here you see we find the fellowship of the spirit touching our theme, and that is a good augury. As honey is sweeter to our apprehension than heartsease, so good will gets on easier in the argument than aspolty.

Now, in the sweet spirit of promise, we advance along the line of the "new covenant," and both of us are after the children of the free-woman. How good it is for brethren to dwell together and get the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace! Thus we brethren—the doctor and I—as Isaac was, are children of promise. This is Amen.

That is, as Isaac was the child of God's repeated promise, as that promise

Sins of the Tongue.

The tongue is the glory of the human frame. Psa. xvi. 9; Acts ii. 26. It can be put to the choicest and holiest uses. It speaks the glory of the Most High God. It utters his lofty praises. It tells of all his righteous acts and wondrous works. It proclaims the story of his love. It unfolds the wondrous tale of Christ's sacrifice for sins. It declares the fullness of his redemption. It shouts the glad tidings of peace from the mountain tops. It proclaims pardon to the dying and life to the dead. It confesses before men Him by whom we hope to be confessed before the Father and his angelic hosts. It shall finally lift on high the song of triumph, victory, and peace, when redemption is accomplished and toils and conflicts are forever past.

Such an instrument as this is of vast importance, and no wonder that Satan seeks to control it and pervert its action. How fearfully does he do this!—until the tongue which should be touched as with a coal from the altar of the Most High, becomes a devastating flame, which setteth on fire the course of nature, and is set on fire of hell.

How many sins come from a misgoverned tongue! Without its agency there would be no quarrels, no slanders, no blasphemies, no flatteries, no evil speakings, no foolish speeches, no bitter, sinful, taunting, sneering, idle words; and none of the evil consequences that attend them. Words have broken hearts, blighted hopes, desolated homes, overturned nations, seduced the unwary, deluded the simple, led astray the wayward, stumbled the weak, discouraged the tempted, debased the virtuous, beguiled the intemperate, ruined prospects, blackened reputations, wrecked health,—yea, they have destroyed life itself.

No wonder that the Psalmist said, "I will take heed to my ways, that I sin not with my tongue; I will keep my mouth with a bridle while the wicked is before me." Psa. xxxix. 1.

Words once spoken cannot be recalled. Often words are spoken carelessly, or upon false information, which do incalculable damage to others. No man can fully know the mischief wrought by the tongue. How many has it cast down, how many afflicted, how many destroyed.

We speak of words as light, and cheap, and vain, and empty. But speech is our most spiritual act; it most fully shows out true character. By our words God reckons all our character. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh." "By thy words thou shalt be justified and by thy words shalt thou be condemned." "For every idle word that men shall speak, they shall give account thereof in the day of judgment."

Oh, these sins of the tongue! How they shall bow the soul in the awful judgment day. "In the multitude of the words there wanteth not sin." And what multitudes of words are poured out on every hand from hour to hour.

Let us pause. Let us pray, "Set a watch, O God, before the door of my lips!" Let us take heed that we sin not with the tongue; remembering that, "If any man offend not in word, the same is a perfect man, and able also to bridle the whole body." And let our cry be that of the Psalmist, "Let the words of my mouth, and the meditations of my heart, be acceptable in thy sight, O Lord, my strength and my Redeemer." Psa. xix. 14.—Golden Censer.

The Bible a Neglected Book.

Many years ago we wrote and published these words: "No book in the world was ever so generally possessed and so little comprehended, as an English Bible in the present day. Everything in society is unfavorable to its profitable perusal; the ceaseless activities of the good, and the restless insinuations of the bad,—textual preaching and tormenting criticism,—the multiplication of books, and the mingling of things sacred and profane, all tend to keep men from feeding in green pastures, or repairing by the side of still waters. And so it comes to pass, amid many contradictory things, [illegible] and speculations, as all understood.

"The result is—for that which affects the people affects the priest,—that while public worship was never so well attended as at present, the pulpit was never so powerless; conducting the counting-house never so independent of attention in the pew; scepticism never so rampant; and happy Christians now so rare."

We see no reason either to retract or to modify these sad convictions.

But when it is recollected that the Book to which they relate is one to which we are indebted for more than we can well express; for all our knowledge of the greatest fact in existence,—the birth of the world in which we live; for the only authentic account that we possess of the origin and infancy of its inhabitants; for all we know about the introduction of natural and moral evil into it; and for all we can rely upon in relation to the hopes and prospects which await mankind beyond the grave.

Sad when we reflect that this neglected volume is the great charter of human freedom, and the sole controler of its excesses; that by saving us from discord, revolution and crime, it has more than once proved that our institutions have no permanent basis, and our liberties no safeguard, apart from the virtues it inculcates, and the spirit it fosters.

Sadly we remember that no study is so exciting, expanding, and ennobling, as that of Holy Scripture; that every page is marked by a majesty and purity which belong to no other composition; that no man can long breathe its atmosphere without purifying his taste, [illegible] ing his mind, and improving his [illegible]

Saddest [illegible] when we think of it as the chief [illegible] use of Divine truth; only key to the mysteries of existence; the sure revelation of mercy to sinners; the basis of all practical virtue; the Statute-book of heaven.—The Study of the Bible.

Drying up of the Euphrates, or the Downfall of Turkey.

And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates, and the water thereof was dried up that the way of the kings of the East might be prepared.—Rev. xvi. 12.

Expositors of prophecy are generally agreed that the above prediction refers to the downfall of the Turkish power. Under the previous or fifth vial the kingdom of the Roman See is represented as suffering great judgments, and as lying in great pain. It is also stated that the kingdom is full of darkness. During the last few years we have seen the remarkable fulfillment of this judgment vial. We may go back as far as A. D. 1708, and from that time to this the Catholic power has been gradually decaying. This state of things continued until September, 1870, at which time the church lost all of her civil power.

The next scene in the order of events is the dismemberment of the Turkish power. The Roman world was divided into two parts, Eastern and Western, Constantinople the capital of the East, and Rome the capital of the West. These two divisions are aptly represented by the two iron legs of Daniel's metallic man, which was seen by the king of Babylon in his mystic dream. Each one of these Roman divisions has a religious as well as a civil phase. We have two apostate religions in these two parts of old Rome. The Catholic apostacy in the West, and the Mohammedan apostacy in the East. The Catholic power came up first and ran its course during the mystic days from A. D. 610, when the great pantheon was dedicated to the Virgin Mary to A. D. 1870, when Victor Immanuel at the head of the ten Roman or Italian kingdoms, entered Rome and deposed the pope, thus filling up the three and a half mystic years. The Mohammedan power arose ten years later, viz: A. D. 620-22, and must continue longer than the apostacy in the West. The treading down of the holy city for forty-two months dates with the years of Mohammed, or the hejira, which was A. D. 620-22. This being the case, we are led to look to A. D. 1880-2 as an important epoch in the affairs of the S[illegible]ta. A. D. 1880 seems to [illegible] at that point. The same is true of the astronomical symbols of the great pyramids of Egypt. The mystic points from the entrance passage have led Prof. Smith, Astronomer Royal of Scotland, to conclude that the ending of the great cycle will occur A. D. 1880.

Another point is that of the perihelia of the four great planets, Jupiter, Uranus, Saturn and Neptune. These planets become co-incident in 1880. Astronomers are greatly interested in this. The four planets will be at their nearest approach to the sun in or soon after 1880.

From all of these facts it would seem that the year above named would be one of great events. We not think that any one of the prophetic periods refers to the Messiah's coming, but they mark as important epoch in the affairs of Israel and the Holy Land.

It would also seem that the Turkish power would meet with some great change or overthrow at that time. The signs in the affairs of Turkey all point unmistakably to its final disruption within a few years. After the passing away of this power we shall enter upon a series of events the most sublime ever witnessed. The confederation of the nations of the old Roman earth and the battle for the world's supremacy; this will involve Christian liberty throughout Europe, and bring the Jewish people into great persecutions. That the power symbolized by the great river Euphrates, will cease, and that the East will perform an important part in the approaching crisis, there can be no question. The leading statesmen of the old world, as well as the voice of prophe[illegible]sure us of this impending conflict. Making allowance, therefore, fo[illegible] uncertainty of human chron[illegible]we firmly believe that not far f[illegible]e year 1880 we shall witness [illegible]ost sublime events which have [illegible] occurred during the times of the Gentiles. But practically, whether these events are just upon us, or more remote, we must ever keep in mind the words of the world's future King: "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth and keepeth his garments lest he walk naked, and they see his shame."

☞ The Chicago Times, of Sept. 7th, gave a list of thirty-one crimes in the short space of one column and a half. Those who consider that the world is growing better would do well to pass by the criminal calendar.

Endurance.

"He that shall endure unto the end, the same shall be saved."

The Scripture allusions to the circumstances and events connected with Christ's second coming, all pre-suppose an indefinite period, during which, his faithful servants, whom He will find alive at his return, will have to patiently wait. This period of waiting watchfulness will be longer than they anticipated when, with girded loins and burning lamps, they set out to meet the Bridegroom. This unexpected delay is well calculated to test the faith, hope and stability, of that last remnant of the true church of God, that is left over to await and welcome the Lord of glory to the throne of earth's dominion. Some become weary and seek repose in those denominations where the offence of the cross is unknown; some relax in watchfulness, prayer, and sacrifice for the truth's sake, till they only have a name to live; while others abandon christianity altogether.

A few, however, endure through all trials and discouragements. Like the faithful Philadelphian brotherhood, they keep the word of patience in assurance of coming deliverance and a crown of glory. The present time manifests all these traits and peculiarities. Now, what valid reason can be given for persistently expecting the coming of Jesus Christ as a proximately near event, and for concluding that this Gospel dispensation nears its close. Is a grand crisis in human affairs really imminent?

To queries like these our answer, at this time, will be brief; though worthy of the attention of all who feel any degree of interest in the future destiny of this world or its inhabitants. The leading events of this age proclaim that the Lord is at the door. The questions of the times, that engross the attention of statesmen, legislators and politicians, are two: The Roman and the Eastern questions.

The solution of these questions involves the continuance in power, or the immediate overthrow, of two politico-religious, though anti-christian despotisms, that fill a large place both in prophecy and history. Indeed, they fill the very foreground of the inspired picture delineating the concluding periods of the times of the Gentiles. As a sign of the coming of God's eternal kingdom, the wasting away of these powers, under peculiar circumstances [illegible] decisive evidence that the sixty years assigned to the Papacy as a ruling dynasty, dissimilar to all other sovereignties, as being a priest-kingdom, after which its temporal rule should be consumed and destroyed. As a matter of historical fact, in minute and marked fulfillment of prophecy, the pope is no longer king in the Eternal City, as it has been locatingly termed. A strong hand has wrested the sceptre from his grasp, ejected him from his throne, and scathed him down from the ranks of royalty, to mourn over departed greatness in peevishness and poorly simulated imprisonment. From the spiritual control this power exercises over the consciences of so many millions of its hopelessly blinded devotees, it will probably enact a most fearful part in the coming time of trouble; but the temporal dominion of the little horn is gone forever. Its struggles to regain the Roman throne will only precipitate its final submergence into overwhelming perdition. Compare Dan. vii. 26, and Rev. xviii. 4-24.

Another notable sign is the rapid evaporation of the mystic Euphrates, or, in other words, the decadence of Moslem power. The symb[illegible] presenting Turkish rule in its [illegible]tages of decay, is found in Apocalyptic vision. Rev. xvi. 12. "And the sixth angel poured out his vial upon the great river Euphrates; and the water thereof was dried up, that the way of the kings of the east might be prepared." On its fulfillment we will give an extract from a letter of correspondence to the Irish World of Sept. 11, of the current year:

"TURKEY GOING RAPIDLY TO DECAY," is a significant sentence placed at the head of this piece of correspondence, which thus proceeds:

"Political Europe is once more in a state of convulsion. A very important province, which has long been under the dominion of the firmal Turk, has broken out into open rebellion. This province, Herzegovina, that has raised the standard of home rule, is a narrow strip of land on the Adriatic coast, and adjoins the emperor of Austria's dominions. The province is composed, in a great measure, of Christians. The governing classes and the landlords of the land are Turks, Mahommedan in religion. The Christians are belonging to the Greek Catholic church, and that is the national and established church of Russia. Suppose the Protestant landlords of Ireland enforcing exactions upon their Catholic tenants, and suppose the latter "out" in open rebellion, and we have the case of this Herzegovina insurrection plainly before us. In the mean time, Turkish troops are being poured into the disturbed districts. The insurgents, however, are being reinforced from other disaffected Turkish provinces not far off; such as Montenegro, Servia, and Bosnia. From every neighboring Christian land volunteers are pouring in to join the insurgents; and the battles between THE CROSS AND THE CRESCENT may once again irrigate the earth with the best blood of Europe.

Now it is a fact that some sixty millions of the people of Europe, including the inhabitants of Russia, Servia, Bohemia, and a large proportion of the Sultan's own subjects, belong to the Slavonic race, speak dialects of the Slavonic tongue, and, for the most part, profess the creed of the Greek church. The Christian people of Herzegovina, and, in fact, of other parts of Turkey are Sclavonic, and its journalists, orators, and fighting men have flung themselves into the fray. That the Turkish empire is going to decay is pretty evident. Greece escaped some fifty years ago. Egypt has substantially escaped. Now comes half-a-dozen of provinces which make common cause against the "mother country." Every day the Turk is losing that warlike activity and wild enthusiasm which enabled him, in past days, to encounter Christendom in arms, and subject some of the finest races and fairest lands in Europe to his sway."

There is a telegram in the paper referred to of the following purport: "The Western Powers have already, through the leading journals of London and Paris, given the Sultan to understand that he has nothing to expect from them. France very sensibly declines to trouble herself in the present condition of affairs with a matter more momentous to England than to her."

Thus the Euphratean river is evaporating, and becoming discontented pools. At the consumption of Papal dominion, the end is near; while, at the complete decay of Moslem rule, it is imminent. The unclean spirits of demonism are exciting the war-passions of kings and cabinets for a final conflict; that conflict is the "battle of the great day of God Almighty." In this crisis of human history the Saviour's warning voice proclaims: "Behold I come as a thief. Blessed is he that watcheth, and keepeth His garments, lest he walk naked, and they see his shame." It is no time now to seek place or popularity. Our experience must be a counterpart of the Savior's, who entered not upon his glory till He was perfected through sufferings. To the depressed, feeble, and afflicted church the cross is bequeathed as its portion in this world, with the assurance, that according to our patience, long-suffering, and steadfast fidelity under all these trials we are to rise to honor and glory in the world to come. A place among the royalties and princedoms of eternity is bestowed only upon those who experience the discipline of suffering in this life. In the grand Empire of God, the crown will be given for the cross, the sceptre and throne for sufferings, and exalted princedoms for toil and reproach. The church is doing its last work. The gospel day is at its sunset—and the Lord is coming—and coming soon. It is our privilege and responsibility to be living

"In a grand and awful time."

The primitive church honored its position, though one of trial. Shall the last virgin remnant dishonor its solemn trust? The trial is upon us.

Human Physiology No. II.

In our first article under the above caption, we learned that the brain is the seat of sensation, the source of action, and the organ of thought. We now quote from the same author (Mr. Brown on physiology) in reference to consciousness.

Mr. Brown, on page 94 of his work, says: "By this (the nervous) arrangement every part of the body that is liable to be injured by foreign substances is kept in constant communication with the brain where consciousness resides, and from whence proceed all voluntary motion."

Again, under the head of the "Mystery of Sensation," he says: "This power of feeling is a wonderful endowment. An impression is made on a looped extremity of a sentient nerve in some remote part of the body. Instantly, the filament of a nerve thus impressed communicates the impression along the nervous cord, where this particular filament is entangled and interlaced with a thousand similar ones; and yet the impression is not communicated to them, but is confined to the individual filament; it passes through the interior white matter of the brain, and finally reaches the grey substance, where perception or consciousness appears to reside. This perception not only locates the precise spot where the impression was made, but also determines the nature of the impression, and within certain limits, the character of the substance or agent making it."

Now if Mr. Brown is correct in his statements that the brain is the seat of sensation, the source of action, the organ of thought, and the seat of consciousness, does it not follow that these functions of mind for their existence depend upon the action of this part of the human system. And that when the brain ceases to act, these functions of mind will likewise cease. Remove the seat of sensation and sensation must necessarily cease. Remove the source or fountain, of action, and all action nessarily must stop. Remove the organ of thought, and thinking will be no more. And take away the seat of consciousness, and consciousness must come to an end.

If this position be not correct, but the idea entertained by the world generally, that "the spirit retains consciousness after death" is, and consciousness is made to depend upon thought, and thought upon impressions, and impressions upon sensation, and sensation upon a nervous system, then will it not follow that there must be a spiritual brain to act as the seat of consciousness and sensation, to act as the organ of thought and the source of action. Also that there must be a spiritual nervous system to receive intelligence from without; and likewise a spiritual muscular system in order to motion. Then give to the spirit brain, nerves, and muscles,—a complete organism—and render it susceptible of enjoying happiness, or enduring misery, and it will entirely supersede the Bible doctrine of a resurrection of the mortal body and a judgment to come.

Gleanings.

Sister Wheeler writes from South Wright, Mich., under date of Sept. 10, as follows:

DEAR BRETHREN IN CHRIST:—

Among the first things I read, when I get the RESTITUTION, are the gleanings; and thinking that others were as much interested in them as myself, and that I might induce some of the preaching brethren to come this way, I write.

We have lived here now nearly three years, and them has not been [illegible] I do not think anyone here ever heard the gospel of the kingdom before we came. I have induced every one to read the RESTITUTION that I could, and have improved every opportunity to give a reason of my hope.

There are three houses of worship in this vicinity, one Methodis, one Disciple, and one United Brethren; so you see that sectarianism has a strong hold, but they are at variance with each other, and their meeting are poorly attended.

I think that there a number here that are interested in the truth; but we need an able speaker. Will not Brother Reed, Wilcox or Hatch, come out here and preach the word to this dying people? Come to Hudson, Mich., by railroad; from there to South Wright by stage, on Tuesday, Thursday or Saturday. Enquire for B. E. Wheeler in South Wright.

Yours respectfully,
LUCY A. WHEELER.

The following words of encouragement are from Brother Amos Sanford:

BROTHER MYERS:—The work goes bravely on. I am doing all I can for the cause. Send me some extra papers and tracts if you can. Our county fair commences on the 14th, and I will spend three days then in getting subscribers and distributing tracts and papers. The following is from the "Anna Union:"

"The Restitution' is the title of a weekly religious paper published by an Association at Plymouth, Marshall county, Ind., at $2.00 per year. It advocates restoration of Israel to their own land, and the return of Jesus as the 'King of the Jews' to 'reign on the throne of his father David,' over the mortal nations of earth. Mr. Sanford of this place is the agent."

I hold meeting next week ten miles east of here. Have plenty of calls for work now.

After by letter enquiring of Sister Matilda A. Lovewell, of Pleasanton, Kansas, of her circumstances in life, she replies, that her husband died in April last, leaving her with four children, the oldest only eleven years of age, without any means of subsistence, not even a cow to give them milk. Sister Lovewell in her letter acknowledges the receipt of $10 from Brother Hayes, $3 from Brother Dowell, of Cleveland, Ohio, and $1 from Sister Sharp, of Indianapolis. She has also received some assistance from the Kansas relief fund. This fund is now exhausted, and Sister Lovewell will still need assistance. Let those who can assist do so, remembering that in a future day Jesus will say, "I was a hungered and ye fed me: athirst and you gave me drink; naked and ye clothed me." And that this administration to the Savior is made by administering to his disciples. Assistance can find its way to Sister Lovewell by being sent to her direct, or by sending to Brother S. A. Chaplin, of this place, who by appointment is agent for the relief fund.

Sister Lovewell says: "I am truly thankful to those who have assisted me, for their attention and kindness. And now may union and love pervade among the dear ones of Jesus, till every root of bitterness is destroyed, and the whole family of God is bound in one cohesion bundle of love, and thus hasten the time when all shall know the Lord; and spread forth his knowledge until it shall cover the earth as the waters do the sea, and gather all his people into one fold, where there shall be one shepherd and one king—even Jesus, who shall rule over them and whose dominion shall extend from sea to sea, and from the rivers to the ends of the earth, and of whose kingdom and dominion there shall be no end." MATILDA A. LOVEWELL.

PLEASANTON, KANS., Aug. 24, 1875.

We give the following from one who addresses us as though he was not yet a member of the body; whose words may be of benefit to all, in admonishing them to heed the old proverb, "Whatever is worth doing, is worth doing well."

FRIEND REED:—In reports of meetings, I read that good was done at such and such places, and that on return to that place, in one, two or three months hence, some will put on Christ, etc. Now I would like to know who gives the minister license to make such arrangements, or permit such delays? Do these persons desire to live awhile longer in sin, so that they will be better prepared to put on Christ? The book saith "he that gathereth not with me scattereth abroad." Now suppose these persons were to die before the minister returns, what would be their fate? Are they Christians or sinners? And if sinners, will not the responsibility, to some extent, rest upon the minister for not remaining at the time, at the place, and assisting these persons to greater light and obedience? Yours.

RIVERS CORNERS, PENN., Aug. 23, 1875.

The Inquisition in Spain and the Banishment of the Jews.

Until Innocent IV. (1243), there was no special tribunal against heretics, distinct from those of the bishops. The Inquisition, then introduced, in accordance with the centralization of the times, was a general and papal tribunal, which displaced the old local ones. The bishops therefore viewed the innovation with great dislike, considering it as an intrusion upon their rights. It was established in Italy, in Spain, Germany and the southern provinces of France.

The temporal sovereigns were only too desirous to make use of this powerful engine for their own political purposes. Against this the popes strongly protested. They were not willing that its use should pass out of the ecclesiastical hand.

The Inquisition, having already been tried in the southern part of France, had there proved to be very effective for the suppression of heresy. It had been introduced into Aragon. Now was assigned to it the duty of dealing with the Jews.

In the old times, under Visgothic rule, these people had greatly prospered, but the leniency that had been shown to them was succeeded by atrocious persecution, when the Visigoths abandoned their Arianism and became orthodox. The most inhuman ordinances were issued against them—a law was enacted condemning them all to be slaves.

It was not to be wondered at that when the Saracen invasion took place the Jews did whatever they could to promote its success. They, like the Arabs, were an Oriental people, both tracing their lineage to Abraham, their common ancestor; both were believers in the unity of God. It was their defense of that doctrine that had brought upon them the hatred of their Visigothic masters.

Under the Saracen rule they were treated with the highest consideration. They became distinguished for their wealth and their learning. For the most part they were Aristotlians. They founded many schools and colleges. Their mercantile interests led them to travel all over the world. They particularly studied the science of medicine. Throughout the middle ages they were the physicians and bankers of Europe. Of all men they saw the course of human affairs from the most elevated point of view. Among the special sciences, they became proficient in mathematics and astronomy; they composed the tables of Alfonso, and were the cause of the voyage of Bethama. They distinguished themselves greatly in light literature. From the tenth to the fourteenth century their literature was the first in Europe. They were to be found in the courts of princes as their physicians, or as treasurers managing the public finances.

The orthodox clergy in Navarre had excited popular prejudices against them. To escape the persecutions that arose, many of them feigned to turn Christians, and of these many apostatized to their former faith. The papal inquisition at the court of Castile raised a cry for the establishment of the Inquisition. The poorer Jews were accused of sacrificing Christian children at the passover, in mockery of the crucifixion; the richer were denounced as Averroists. Under the influence of Torquemada, a Dominican monk, the confessor of Queen Isabella, that princess solicited a bull from the pope for the establishment of the Holy Office. A bull was accordingly issued in November, 1478, for the detection and suppression of heresy. In the first year of the operation of the Inquisition, 1481, two thousand victims were burned in Andalusia; besides these many thousands were dug up from their graves and burned; seventeen thousand were fined or imprisoned for life.

Whoever of the persecuted race could flee, escaped for his life. Torquemada, now appointed Inquisitor-General for Castile and Leon, illustrated his office by his ferocity. Anonymous accusations were received, the accused was not confronted by witnesses, torture was relied upon for conviction; it was inflicted in vaults where no one could hear the cries of the tormented. As, in pretended mercy it was forbidden to inflict torture a second time, with horrible duplicity it was affirmed that the torment had not been completed at first, but had only been suspended out of charity until the following day. The families of the convicted were plunged into irretrievable ruin.

Sforente, the historian of the Inquisition, computes that Torquemada and his collaborators, in the course of his eighteen years, burnt at the stake ten thousand two hundred and twenty persons, six thousand eight hundred and sixty in effigy, and otherwise punished thirty-seven thousand three hundred and twenty-one. This frantic priest destroyed Hebrew Bibles wherever he could find them, and burned six thousand volumes of Oriental literature at Salmanca, under an imputation that they inculcated Judaism. With unutterable disgust and indignation, we learn that the papal government realized much money by selling to the rich dispensations to secure them from the Inquisition.

But all these frightful atrocities proved failures. The conversions were few. Torquemada, therefore, insisted on the banishment of every unbaptized Jew. On March 30th, 1492, the edict of expulsion was signed. All unbaptized Jews, of whatever age, sex or condition, were ordered to leave the realm by the end of the following July. If they revisited it, they should suffer death. They might sell their effects, and take the proceeds in merchandise or bills of exchange, but not in gold or silver. Exiled thus suddenly from the land of their birth, the land of their ancestors for hundreds of years, they could not in the glutted market that arose sell what they possessed. Nobody would purchase what could be got for nothing after July. The Spanish clergy occupied themselves by preaching in public squares, sermons filled with denunciations against their victims, who, when the time for expatriation came, swarmed in the roads, and filled the air with their cries of despair. Even the Spanish onlookers wept at the scene of agony. Torquemada, however, informed the ordinance that no one should afford them any help.

Of the banished persons, some made their way into Africa, some into Italy; the latter carried with them to Naples ship fever, which destroyed no fewer than twenty thousand in that city, and devastated that peninsula; some of them reached Turkey, a few England. Thousands, especially mothers with nursing infants, children and old people, died by the way. Many of them in the agonies of thirst.—History of Conflict between Religion and Science.

—The petty persecutions of professed brethren, who should be our warmest friends, are galling to the spirit, and help to make this life, God knows, troubled enough already, still more painful. Would they but stop a moment and remember that evil done to God's people can do no good, whereas it does the flock much harm, they would perhaps relent. O when will men bearing the Christ's name cease to treat each other with imperious cruelty!

Behold He Cometh.

The judgment herald's voice sublime
Proclaims aloud in every clime
Messiah's reign, and closing time.

Startled, the virgin bands awake;
And oil, and lamps, and vessels take,
And Babylon in haste forsake.

Nine-serving, proving watchmen cry
A peace and safety era nigh,
And, heedless, pass the warning by.

All, since the fathers passed away,
Remains as at earth's natal day;
No change is coming,—scoffers say.

Though in death's direful fate enrolled,
The proud oppressor heaps up gold,
If poverty's heart-blood be cold.

Grimier, such as God once buried deep
Neath fire or flood, and revels keep,
Till vengeful bolts from heaven leap.

The slackened sun,—the moon in gore,—
The falling stars,—the seven's roar,—
Attest "Time upon shall be no more."

The Gentiles' time is nearly past,
The mystic things are closing fast,
The signal fig-tree buds at last.

On clouds of glory comes again
The Son of Man—death's iron chain
Fall from the saints—hail Jesus' reign!

HOME.

We are to preach in Goodland next Sunday. Hope the friends in that community will generally attend.

In attendance at our Sunday School on Sunday last, Sept. 12, was, scholars, 50; teachers, 8, and visitors, 5.

We spent Sunday last with the Church in Plymouth. In the morning we discoursed upon the subject of our Lord's coming. In the evening, our subject was, New Things. Our remarks were based on Matt. ix. 10, 17. The congregations were large and showed a deep interest in the word of truth. An aged lady came forward for baptism. Readers of the RESTITUTION will be pleased to know that we are gaining ground in Plymouth. May the hearts of the people be turned toward the blessed light of the Gospel of Christ is our prayer. We have many calls for labor in different places and will do all we can to hold up the word in these days of great events. Let every true believer work in earnest. The day is coming on.

GENERAL.

The annual Convention of the Episcopal Diocese of Illinois, will be held September 14th. The question of electing a bishop will come up again. It is said that the friends of Dr. DeKoven will present him once more as a candidate.

A Berlin dispatch to the Times says a force of Russians has taken the field against Kholand. The repetition has spread to the southern districts of Russian Turkestan. The town of Kohjend is in the hands of the insurgents, whose priests are proclaiming a holy war against the infidels.

The insurgents in Herzegovina have established a national government, and matters in Turkey look more serious every day. It is very probable that all the provinces will be in rebellion before long, and it is difficult to see how Europe is to escape a general turmoil.

There are now eleven thousand Jews in Jerusalem.

There is a religious controversy going on between the English Ritualists and among the specimens of language used, we quote the following from The Church Times, for August 20th: "We are for putting down abuses of every kind whatever; but we see no reason for letting the Bishops

'Compound for sins that they're inclined to,
By damning those they have a mind to.'"

According to a parliamentary return, the annual revenue of some of the prelates of the English Church from the estates belonging to their sees are as follows: The Archbishop of Canterbury receives $75,000; the Archbishop of York, $50,000; the Bishop of Durham, $40,000; the Bishop of Ely, $27,500; the Bishop of Gloucester and Bristol, $25,000; the Bishop of Lincoln, $25,000; the Bishop of Worcester, $25,000; the Bishop of Carlisle, $22,000; and the Bishop of Peterborough, $22,500.

The Universalist papers refused to publish another word from their two quarrelsome ministers in Philadelphia; whereupon the one who had not had the last word wrote to all of them that this enforced silence must not be understood as any concession on his part as to the matter in dispute. The other one now writes to them that it was hardly fair to publish the disclaimer, and that they must announce that he too sticks to every word he has said. Now will they not "dry up?"

At the Convention of the Y. M. C. A., held at Richmond, Va., the Rev. A. D. Byers made this statistical report of his visits to the prisons during a period of six years. "Of 2,120 convicts 20 per cent. were orphans, 67 per cent. were uneducated, 74 per cent. had never learned any useful employment, 69 per cent. were intemperate, 34 per cent. had never attended Sabbath-school, and only 3 per cent. had attended the Sabbath-school regularly."

The Sir Moses Montefiore testimonial for the benefit of the Hebrew residents of the Holy Land is growing larger daily. Indeed, it is becoming quite a phenomenon in the way of collections. The whole world seems to be interested in the movement, and to desire restoration of peace and prosperity to the Palestinian Jews. Already, France, Germany, Italy, Russia, and the United States are in communication with the head committee in England; and instead of the interest declining in this country, bazaars to augment the fund are being arranged in all the great centres of commerce. Sir Moses, the venerable old gent in whose name the money is being gathered, will arrive in Jerusalem some time before we publish our paper. Telegrams have been received from him as he has progressed from stage to stage in his journey, which have been most satisfactory. We shall all watch this event with unspeakable interest.—Bible Echo.

The Children of Promise.

"Now we, brethren, as Isaac was, are the children of promise."—Gal. iv. 28.

The discrimination between the bond-woman—Hagar, and the free-woman—Sarah, is absolutely unmistakable. So is that also between the two covenants and all those who are born after the flesh, in contrarity to them who are born after the spirit. We see it, and we want to maintain this contrarity, because of its primary truth. No intelligent faith can ever confound these contrarities that exist in the constitution of things, and hence reach from the top to the bottom, from the beginning to the end of God's great and all-comprehending system. Good and evil, Christ and Belial, God and devil, are never mixed up as to either means or ends, and merged into one.

Our noble and precious brother, N. Field, M. D., sees this. It is good for us to agree, and it seems only needful to get one step further in this fundamental way of truth, to extend this agreement to the profoundest depth and greatest length of our subject—Israel's destiny.

He said in his last to me, "If you are after the children of the free-woman, that is another matter!" He was arguing, and as it were feeling his way along that line, the only line of promise, and I say Amen and Amen! Here you see we find the fellowship of the spirit touching our theme, and that is a good augury. As honey is sweeter to our apprehension than heartsease, so good will gets on easier in the argument than asperity.

Now, in the sweet spirit of promise, we advance along the line of the "new covenant," and both of us are after the children of the free-woman. How good it is for brethren to dwell together and get the unity of the spirit in the bond of peace! Thus we brethren—the doctor and I—as Isaac was, are children of promise, and this is proved by the spirit He has given us. Amen.

That is, as Isaac was the child of God's repeated promise, as that promise implied and expanded to Abraham's faith and took in the Messiah, so that he rejoiced by faith to see his day! Furthermore, as the same divine promise of the anointed Savior is still more abounding, to the faith of St. Paul, embracing Jesus the Christ in person, and all who are, by a like living faith baptized into his name, and made to drink into his spirit, (1 Cor. xii. 12, 13; Gal. iii. 16, 26–29,) so now we see that the promise; not yet exhausted, but being still in the course of progressive fulfillment, rolls its title of heavenly life along to the fullness of the church of the first-born, the heavenly Jerusalem, and all their dependencies.

Observe that all this is obviously embraced in the promise; and thence looking still on in the light of the type and antitype, the shadow and the substance, we see that as Isaac was so are we to be the heirs or inheritors, not of ourselves, but according to promise! (Gal. iii. 20–29; Gen. xxii. 12, 18.

Isaac was heir to all of his father's honor, princely estate and household. So we brethren, all as members of the church of the first-born, with Christ the head, are to inherit all things. The twelve apostles will sit on twelve thrones, over the twelve tribes of Israel, and others become princes in all the earth. Some over ten cities and others over five cities. Luke xix. 17–19; xxii. 29, 30; Psa. xlv. 16; Rev. xx. 3, 7; xxi. 7.

But this infinitude—this still opening vista of the unspeakable riches embraced in the gospel, pre-preached to Abraham (Gal. iii. 8,) is thus noted by the way, and as they lie entirely within this large range of the glorious future of our world, and of our high calling of God in Christ Jesus.

While my present subject only requires that I notice, this one obviously pivotal point, namely: The promise in Isaac, did reach on to Jesus; and thence it extended still on, and intertwined the several members of his body, the church, his co-heirs and his bride—when he shall reign on the throne of David, over the house of Jacob, of the increase of whose government there will be no end. "The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this." Luke i. 33; Isa. ix. 6, 7.

1. This is the scope of the promise, and hence it secures the new covenant and all its attendants.

2. Its subjects are always, and everywhere, Israel. Or to give its most precise terms, Israel and Judah.

3. The first-born, the Rebecca's, Jesus (with his body—all the anointed 1 Cor. xii. 12, 13; John xvii. 20–24,) is himself the mediator of this new covenant.

4. As Moses and Zipporah were not confounded with or taken for Israel; so Jesus and his bride are not, except as reason and Revelation, are abandoned. Moses was the Mediator of the old covenant, between God and Israel. Jesus is the Mediator of the new covenant, as it lies in the line of promise in Isaac and the free-woman.

5. Please look over the Scriptures and mark how uniformly Israel is named as the second party in this new and everlasting covenant. The bride—the church—is merged into the name and state of the bridegroom; to bear her part in the honors of the kingdom and sustain her share in all the official dignities of the divine administration!

This is her high, her heavenly calling in Christ Jesus. Phil. iii. 14; Heb. iii. 1; Rev. xix. 7, 9; Eph. i.-v. In contrast we find the everlasting covenant six times with Israel. The new covenant in contradistinction to the old is most solemnly asserted in both Testaments. "Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel and the house of Judah." Jer. xxxi. 31–33; Heb. viii. 8–11; Rom. xi. 26–29; Luke i. 54, 55, 67–74; Psa. cxi. 9; Matt. i. 21; ii. 6; Luke ii. 32. In varied terms, these texts are further and often sustained and made essential parts of Bible truth.

6. Against this fundamental and all pervading truth, we find a dispensational conceit arrayed, in disregard of St. Paul's warning, and the fatal example of the Jews who stumbled nationally over the same stumbling stone. Rom. xi. 1. They presumed that all mercy must come in accord with Mosaic ritual, etc. Now the professing church, and some adventists too, presume that mercy must only be dispensed by the poor and present gospel ministries, as based on the first advent of Christ, and hence must end at the second coming.

This age is to them their mental and moral horizon of Divine Mercy's dispensation! Thus the king and the kingdom, of type, Psalm and prophet, is ignored. Thus the Gospel of the kingdom that fills out the sum of New Testament preaching, parable and prayer, is made an impertinence. Having no basis in the past and no promise for the future. With deep sorrow I must add,

7. That poor jejune theory of the Gospel, that leaves out Christ, as King on David's throne, has so much of the mystery of the apostacy in it, that no sufficient light is left to shew that the new covenant—the children of the promise through Isaac, and the consequent fullness of assured blessing, are all alike absolute and out of the range of Christian hope. But no! The promise is yea and amen to the glory of God, and must needs be fulfilled.

CONCLUSION.

Of the things now spoken this is the sum:—In Isaac shall thy seed be called. This gives the fullness of theocratic purpose—the sum of Abrahamic promise. It embraces the chosen seed, the new and everlasting covenant, by the children of the free-woman, and the city that hath foundations, and the better and heavenly country.

The shadow of good things to come, Heb. viii.-xii; the Psalms and prophets, Luke xxiv. 44; the Gospel of the kingdom by Jesus and his apostles, Matt. xxii. 14; Heb. xi. 8–10, take precisely this lofty and extended range.

The church has generally taken a circumscribed boundary of faith and hope; based on our present Gospel ministry, to gather a people to Christ (Acts xv. 14,) as if there could be no place or importance for the blessed and only potentate to reign in righteousness, and execute justice and judgment in the earth, save Israel and Judah. Jer. xxiii. 5, 6. Cleanse the sanctuary, (Dan. viii. 11–13,) and restore the covenanted throne and tabernacle of David. Psa. lxxxix. 3–37; Ezek. xxxvii. 25, 28. And also the whole burden of the Word of the Lord touching the kingdom.

But all such Scripture fits into this promise by Isaac, as the cords and ligaments of the human body link into and around the socket joint on which the head revolves and regulates the whole.

However, such imperfect and crude views prevail, the objectors, with strange inconsistency, after rejecting Israel literally, and the Messianic reign through the one thousand years, the Sabbatic period of the world (Heb. iv. 1–9,) and all the like, persist in uniting the above glowing views, which they have, in theory, made impossible, as well as absurd.

Come brethren, join us in faith and hope, and then only all such Scripture will be to you appropriate.

J. B. COOK.

Perihelion and Pestilence.

If there is anything in 'astrological eriology,' we are approaching one of the most pestilential periods in earth's history. Since the commencement of the Christian era, the perihelia of the four great planets of the solar system—Jupiter, Uranus, Saturn and Neptune—have not been coincident. But this is about to occur, and, in the language of Dr. Knapp, who has traced the history of the greatest epidemics that ever afflicted the human race to the perihelia of these planets, there will soon be "lively times for the doctors." The theory is, that when one or more of the large planets is nearest to the sun, the temperature and condition of our atmosphere are so disturbed as to cause injurious vicissitudes of weather, extreme heat, excessive cold, terrible rains, prolonged droughts, etc., resulting in the destruction of crops, and pestilences among human beings and domestic animals.

Dr. Knapp has collated a mass of statistical data, all going to show that perihelion periods have always been marked by unusual mortality, and that sickness and death have invariably corresponded with the number of planets in perihelion at the same time. The revolution of Jupiter around the sun is accomplished in a little less than twelve years, of Saturn in a little less than thirty, of Uranus in about eighty-four years, and of Neptune in about one hundred and sixty-four years. If it be true, therefore, that the perihelia of these planets occasion atmospheric conditions unfavorable to life pestilential periods should occur once in a dozen years, and aggravated and still more wide-spread epidemics at longer intervals. In tracing the history of epidemics for more than two thousand years, Dr. Knapp finds the facts in all cases to validate the theory. Thus, in the sixth and again in the sixteenth centuries, three of these planets were coincident in perihelion, and those were the most pestilential times of the Christian era.

But soon we are to have, for the first time in two thousand years, all four of these planets against us. They will be at their nearest approach to the sun in or soon after 1880, so that for a few years; say from 1880 to 1885, the vitality of every living thing will be put to a severe and trying ordeal. Some persons think they see, in the signs of the times, evidences of the great disasters, in the immediate future. The excessive heat of last summer, the unexampled cold of last winter, the prevalence of flood and disasters at sea, the general failure of the potato crop, the wide-spread chill fever among human beings, and the equal prevalence of the epizootic among animals, are mentioned as among the premonitions of the rapidly approaching of the perihelion.

Well, "to be fore-warned is to be fore-armed." Accidents excepted, we know very well that the persons of more vigorous constitutions and more hygienic habits will have the better chance to survive whatever adverse influence the extraordinary perihelia will occasion. It is well known to physicians that, in all pestilences, plague, typhus, small-pox, cholera, murrin, etc., the intemperate, the dissipated, and those whose sanitary conditions were bad furnished the victims.

We do not write to alarm any one, or to make a sensation. We state the facts which all history attests. The readers of the Science of Health can judge for themselves what importance to attach to the subject. That the conjoint perihelion of all the large planets of the solar system, one of which, Jupiter, is a thousand times as large as the earth, must disturb our atmosphere and temperature very considerably, is probable, that this disturbance must be injurious to health and life is certain, and that these periods have heretofore been pestilential, is a matter of record. How much we shall suffer during the next dozen or fifteen years, depends very much upon how nearly we live a life in accordance with the laws of life.—Wisconsin.)

—A new style of old Catholicism has recently been started in Italy called "The Italian National Catholic Church," which has already brought down upon the head of its founder, Domenico Pannelli, a wrathful fulmination from the Pope. The Holy Father stigmatizes the organization as "an impious sect or faction, with the title of Chiesa Cattolica Nazionale Italiana, having prepared for the government of the same a constitution called dommatico-organico-disciplinari." After stating further the false and heretical character of Panelli's sect, the Pope thus blazes at him:

We with our supreme apostolical authority condemn and reprove the schismatical and heretical faction that takes the name of the Italian National Catholic Church, which, by its act, denies that the faith is one, the church one, and one its visible head, so constituted by Christ, the Lord. It dares to raise a new and profane edifice of human religion, with elements of the world and the depraved maxims of the present century. With the authority of God omnipotent, and the holy apostles, Peter and Paul, as well as our own, we solemnly excommunicate and curse (maledicimus) the apostate Domenico Panelli, who dares to become an insidious agent for the ruin of the people of God, he, bound in iniquity with the associates of his apostasy and temerity, who in whatever manner have lent him or may lend him aid, counsel, consent or favor; to him and the others, we order, decree, and denounce, as separated from the body of the church, and to be avoided by all.

THE RESTITUTION.

PRISON.

BY DUDY PORTER.

O, prison bars, when will you break?
'Gainst which my weak wings bleeding beat
To reach the far od skies blue deep,
And feel the thrill of freedom sweet.

O, dungeon dark when will your gloom
Let in the days' glad summer light,
The birds' sweet song, the flower's breath,
And silver glow from stars of night?

Sad captive wait till o'er the hills
The morning breaks in splendor rare,
The prison doors shall be unbarred,
And songs of gladness fill the air.

A happy freedom open wide,
Through shining hours of endless day,
A mighty peace like sunshine fall
And blessings bloom by every way.

Sweet love divine with boundless wealth
Will fill the soul's deep longing pain,
And graves where hope's dear treasures lie
Will bloom into life again.

O, prison bars, O, midnight gloom,
I raise no more despairing cries,
For faith points to the morning star,
And glory soon shall fill the skies.
